Vice Minister of Railways Li Kefei also spoke at the conference. On behalf of the leadership of the Ministry of Railways, he put forth the following demands to all railway workers and staff members: 1) It is necessary to earnestly relay and study the State Council's instructions and the instructions given by leading comrades of the State Council concerning railway safety in order to make them known to every household and understood by everyone so that all workers and staff members will firmly foster the safety first idea. 2) A strict on-the-job responsibility system and safety responsibility system should be set up from the minister of railways and bureau directors down to the dispatchers and duty officers in stations and sections at the grassroots level so as to ensure safety in every transportation link. It is also necessary to conduct inspection within the scope prescribed by the responsibility system and to commend those who performed well and to strictly deal with those who caused accidents. 3) It is necessary to mobilize the masses in a big way in safety cleanup, in discussion and in inspection. From the ministry down to the stations and sections at the grassroots level, it is necessary to draw a lesson from the several typical cases reported recently, to check out the hidden danger and to adopt measures in order to make everyone think about safety and make contributions in safety operations. 4) It is necessary to consolidate labor discipline in a down-to-earth way and to strengthen ideopolitical work. Leadership at all levels must overcome the soft, weak and lax state of affairs, criticize and educate in a timely manner those who violated labor discipline and operational procedures. Those who kept on violating labor discipline and operational rules thus causing accidents must be sanctioned economically or given administrative punishment and those who committed serious offenses must be investigated to determine criminal responsibility according to law. 5) Steps must be taken to take care of the livelihood of workers and staff members and to solve hardships they faced in their daily life by all means. Apartments for train attendants, lounges, bachelor dormitories and messhalls must be run efficiently to ensure that the train attendants eat and rest well.

The telephone conference also called on the Jinzhou railway bureau to quickly mete out punishment according to the law for those principally responsible for the major accident involving the No 193 passenger express train, and to deal strictly and correctly with those leading members at all levels connected with the accident.

MASS LINE STRESSED IN STRIKING AT ECONOMIC CRIME

[Station commentary: "In Clamping Down on Serious Economic Crimes, It Is Necessary To Closely Follow the Mass Lines"]

[Text] We must not launch a mass movement to clamp down on serious economic crimes, but must follow the mass line in handling specific cases. This is the correct principle that we must firmly grasp in the struggle against economic crimes. We must refrain from launching a mass movement, much less from raising a hue and cry over the movement and making everyone go through the ordeal, in order to avoid the confusion caused by people taking advantage of the campaign to seek revenge or frame others, thus frightening everyone and undermining political stability and unity. This principle, which has been formulated in light of the reality in our country and on the basis of summing up the profound lesson learned from the previous political movements, is completely correct.

It is a grave mistake for anyone to think that to refrain from a mass movement means not to follow the mass line. Serious economic crimes in recent years were all characterized by collusion between inside and outside or between higher and lower levels which involved broad and intricate links. To solve major criminal cases, it is necessary to rely on the masses and, within a certain limit, mobilize the masses who are familiar with the situation, to honestly report serious crimes to the authorities. In handling certain cases, we may hold discussion among the masses who are directly involved and solicity their opinion in order to reach a fair verdict and educate the masses at the same time. Although economic criminals may resort to extremely cunning tricks, they can never escape the masses' discerning eyes.

In cracking down on economic crimes earlier, many comrades came out boldly to struggle against the criminals by voluntarily reporting clues for solving the cases to the authorities or judicial departments. Families, relatives or friends of some criminals actively reported the crimes to the authorities or persuaded their loved ones to surrender to the police. This shows that the struggle against economic crimes has received popular support and taken deep root among the masses.

The practice in the early stage of the struggle proves that if we closely follow the mass line, we can solve cases in good time, reach fair verdicts and educate a lot of people. On the contrary, if we do not rely on the masses and rely on only a few people, the solutions to crime may be delayed and few people will be educated. Both positive and negative facts tell us that only by closely following the mass line and resolutely implementing the party and government's relevant policies can we surely win an all-round victory in the struggle to clamp down on serious economic crimes.

MACHINE-BUILDING INDUSTRY IMPROVES OUTPUT

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- China's machine-building industry, which experienced a declining production level because of the national economic readjustment, has come out of the "bottom of the valley." A steady upward trend has occurred since the beginning of this year. As of the end of May, the total output value of China's machine-building industry, including the departments under the former First Ministry of Machine Building, instrument and meters industry and farm machinery industry, was 15.9 billion yuan, topping the same period last year by 10 percent. There was also a marked increase in profits delivered to the state, compared with the same period last year. The production level neared the same period of 1977, the previous peak.

In 1981 because of further readjustments in the national economy, the scale of capital construction shrank and fewer machines and electrical products were needed. The production task assigned to machine-building enterprises by the state was only equivalent to some 10 billion yuan in terms of output value, accounting for about a fourth of production capacity. The industry was in danger of incurring losses. Under these circumstances, in keeping with the guidelines of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the machine-building industrial departments gradually reformed their planning and management and discarded the previous methods of management characterized by exclusive reliance on the state for assignment of production tasks, allocation of raw materials and sales of products. Having ensured the fulfillment of the production tasks assigned by the state, they proceeded to strengthen planned guidance and bring out the supplementary role of market regulation. According to market needs, the enterprises opened up more avenues for production and expanded their scope of service. As a result, in 1981 departments under the former First Ministry of Machine Building registered a total output value of 27.3 billion yuan. Instead of incurring losses, they delivered 3 billion yuan in profits to the state.

New problems have also cropped up in the course of market regulation. For instance, some full-scale key enterprises are unable to keep their production tasks steady because they lack the ability to meet changing needs; some popular items are being manufactured by too many enterprises, resulting in repetitious production; prices of some products are hard to control and some small and medium-sized enterprises cannot guarantee the product quality required by contracts. The Ministry of Machine Building is looking into these problems and is taking appropriate remedial measures.

CENTRAL DEPARTMENTS STUDY WORK FOR INTELLECTUALS

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Organization Department, the Propaganda Department and the United Front Work Department of the CCP Central Committee, the State Scientific and Technological Commission and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel recently dispatched 5 inspection teams to provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions to inspect work for intellectuals. The inspection teams departed in late May and early June.

In January 1982 the CCP Central Committee issued a "Circular on Conducting an Inspection on Work for Intellectuals." The circular called on the whole party to seriously conduct an inspection on work for intellectuals in the first half of this year. It urged the party committees at various levels to study and improve measures for implementing the party's policies towards intellectuals and returned Overseas Chinese and strive to score rapid successes.

After issuing the circular, the party committees at various levels have attached importance to, and have successively conducted inspections on, work for intellectuals. Many leading comrades in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions have personally taken up inspection work. Some leading comrades have also led inspection teams to grassroots units to talk to the intellectuals, hold forums with them and try to understand the implementation of the work for intellectuals and the existing problems. Proceeding from reality, some have conducted education in party policy on intellectuals to eliminate "leftist" ideological influence, clarify muddled ideas and raise cadres' understanding of the status and role of intellectuals in the new period. They have also made efforts to solve some imperative issues which have an adverse effect on bringing into play the role of intellectuals. Regarding those problems which cannot be currently solved, they have worked out measures to gradually solve them. In places and units where work for intellectuals has been carried out, cadres are educated and intellectuals are touched by the party's concern and are further inspired to build up socialism. However, while inspecting work for intellectuals, some places and units have not gone to the heart of the matter, nor have they earnestly analyzed contradictions to solve individual problems. They are satisfied with transmitting documents handed down from upper levels. The practice of formalism has made work for intellectuals seem perfunctory and superficial.

The inspection teams sent by the various central departments will try to understand work for intellectuals in various localities, exchange good experiences and solve existing problems in a move to further carry out party policy on intellectuals.

GUANGMING RIBAO AIRS PROBLEMS OF INTELLECTUALS

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The GUANGMING RIBAO commentator points out today in an article on intellectuals that the leading cadres at all levels must strengthen ties with the intellectuals, especially those experts with outstanding special skills and those who have made relatively great contributions, promote mutual understanding, and personally get to work to help them solve a number of problems.

In January the CCP proposed to the whole party that a serious inspection be carried out of the party's work concerning intellectuals. Today's commentator's article is published for this purpose. It holds that, viewing the country as a whole, the great majority of local party organizations in the country have adopted a serious attitude in inspecting the work concerning intellectuals and scored success in this work. However, phenomena of formalism and superficiality exist in certain units.

The article puts forward the following criticisms: Even today some people still do not acknowledge that the great majority of intellectuals in China have become a part of the working class and a force to rely on in building up the motherland; they are unwilling to make friends with them and do not feel like exerting efforts to help them to continually forge ahead in politics, ideology and professional work. There are also some people who hold that wages and housing are the only problems of intellectuals that need to be solved, and neglect a large number of other problems hampering the effort to bring their role into full play, such as misemployment, lack of political "equal treatment without discrimination," incomplete rehabilitation, and long periods of separation of husbands and wives. They do not exert themselves to solve a number of problems that could have been solved either under existing conditions or by tapping potentials.

The article demands that all areas and units must, by carrying out this inspection, conduct education for the cadres in policies regarding intellectuals and returned Overseas Chinese, seriously solve a number of their practical problems, and regard the questions of whether they have mobilized the activism of the intellectuals, brought their talent into full play' and gained results thereby as an important hallmark for judging whether they have completed their work tasks well or badly.

CIVIL AFFAIRS MINISTRY CIRCULAR ON ARMY DAY

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Civil Affairs recently issued a circular calling on civil affairs departments at all levels to launch in-depth activities to support the army and give preferential treatment to families of armymen and martyrs in commemorating the 55th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese PLA.

The circular called on various localities to carry out different forms of activities around "1 August" to publicize the tremendous contributions made by the PLA in the Chinese people's revolution and construction in the past 55 years, to carry out education among the masses of the people on patriotism with love for the CCP, the socialist motherland and the people's army, and to further restore and carry forward the glorious traditions of supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to the families of armymen and martyrs in order to strengthen the unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people.

The circular asked that on the red letter day, all localities where an army unit is stationed should, under the auspices of leading local party and government comrades, pay visits to local army units, carry out comfort activities, solicit their opinions about local work and help solve those problems that can and should be solved. Various localities, in the meantime, may organize local government organs, schools, factories and mines and enterprises for get-togethers with the local army units and pay comfort visits among them. When local conditions permit, localities may also invite veteran army comrades, heroes, model personages and retired Red Army veterans to make reports to students at schools to educate the youth on patriotism and revolutionary heroism.

The Ministry of Civil Affairs also called on various localities to organize forces to check, around the red letter day, on the work of supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to the families of armymen and martyrs as well as on placement for demobilized armymen and to solve existing problems in a down-to-earth way.

In the meantime, recipients of special care, advanced individuals and advanced units in supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to the families of armymen and martyrs, and those advanced units giving special care to disabled armymen and to the families of armymen and martyrs, must be commended so as to promote the work in these two areas and to mobilize the initiative of large numbers of recipients of special care in developing socialist material and spiritual civilization.

ECONOMISTS AT CPPCC CONSTITUTION PANEL SESSION

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- A planned economy is a basic feature of the socialist economy, according to Professor Tao Dayong, director of the department of economics at Beijing Normal University. Tao, along with several other Chinese economists, spoke today at a meeting to discuss the draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China.

The 64-year-old economist said the draft stipulates: "The state plans the national economy on the basis of socialist public ownership. It ensures the proportionate and coordinated development of the national economy through the comprehensive balancing of economic plans, with market regulation as a subsidiary." This stipulation is a programmatic provision, he said.

He said that a planned economy is a basic feature of the socialist economy and it was born as the opposite of the capitalist anarchy economy. "Where the socialist public ownership holds absolute predominance, it is only the planned economy that holds a dominate position, though there exist diversified economic sectors," he said. "In fact, socialism cannot exist without planned economy," Tao said.

Referring to relations between planning and the market, he said: "We implement a planned economy and persist along a socialist road on one hand, and on the other hand we develop commodity production and commodity exchange, so as to speed up the socialist modernizations."

He said, "We must also make full use of market regulation as a subsidiary."

Huang Liangchen, adviser to the Ministry of Commerce, said the draft affirms China's policy of practicing diversified forms of economy on the basis of the socialist public ownership as the dominant force in the national economy. He said: "This policy accords with the development of the productive forces in China and suits the needs of the people, and it can help enlarge employment, further flourish the rural economy, and increase commercial retail and service networks and workers."

Professor Wu Dakun, head of the teaching and research section of world economics at Chinese People's University, said the stipulation in the draft permitting foreigners to invest in China is necessary and will benefit the socialist economic construction. He said: "This shows that the policy of opening to the outside world is China's firm and unshakable principle, and not an expedient measure." He suggested that a comprehensive set of policies, laws and decrees for the foreign investors be drawn up as soon as possible, and that more technical specialists be trained.

The meetings, held by the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee, was presided over by Rong Yiren, vice-chairman of the committee. More discussions on the draft of the revised constitution will be held by the National Committee.

GROWTH OF LIGHT, HEAVY INDUSTRIES NOTED

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- While light industry continued its rapid growth, heavy industry registered a marked rise in output in the first five months of this year over the same period of last year. Another outstanding feature was the expansion of the energy industry. This was announced at a work conference called today by the State Economic Commission.

China's industrial output value totalled more than 223,900 million yuan in the first five months of this year, 10.7 percent more than in the same 1981 period. Output value of light industry rose 11.9 percent while that of heavy industry, when went down slightly in 1981, rose 9.6 percent between January and May of this year compared with the like period a year ago.

The proportion taken up by heavy industry in the country's total industrial output value tends to increase. Last month, output of heavy industry exceeded that of light industry.

Output of steel, rolled steel, pig iron and ten kinds of non-ferrous metals increased month by month between January and May. Rolled steel output in the five months already approached the semi-annual output target. The demand for steel plates and ferro-alloys has gone up.

Following the expansion of the rural economy, production of hand tractors was stepped up to meet the growing demand.

Output of coal, crude oil and power all exceeded state plans in the first five months of this year.

Of the 100 major industrial products, output of 81 rose in the January-May period over the same 1981 period. State-owned enterprises turned over ten percent more profits and taxes to the state than in the corresponding period of 1981, while production costs dropped by 0.2 percent.

Based on the results of the first five months, the State Economic Commission pointed out that there are good prospects for fulfilling China's 1982 plan for industrial production. The emphasis in the coming seven months of this year is still to be placed on improving the economic results of industrial production. To this end, the commission calls for the following measures:

-- strengthen market surveys and control production of those products in excessive supply;

-- improve commodity circulation and promote sales in both urban and rural areas; meet the changing needs of the peasants for consumer goods following the rise in their living standards;

-- continue to economize on the use of energy;

-- give priority to the transportation of coal, petroleum, pharmaceuticals and goods needed by agriculture;

-- streamline enterprises and improve their management;

PEASANT INCOME FROM DOMESTIC SIDELINES INCREASES

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese peasants' income derived from their domestic sidelines increased 2.3 times in the three years from 1979 to 1981. This is based on a survey made by the State Statistical Bureau of 18,529 peasant families in 568 countries in all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions except Tibet and Taiwan.

From their domestic sidelines, these families earned an annual income averaging 84.52 yuan per capita in 1981, 48.73 yuan more than in 1978. The income from domestic sidelines accounted for more than one-third of the total annual income of these families in 1981 as against one-fourth three years ago. Figures published by the State Statistical Bureau earlier show that these families' total annual income from all sources averaged 223.4 yuan per capita in 1981, 89.8 yuan more than in 1978.

Following the expansion of farm plots allocated by the production teams for the private use of the peasant families, they now reap more grain and industrial crops from the private plots. Moreover, the scope of management of their domestic sideline production has been enlarged. The survey shows the following changes:

-- The peasant families are raising more livestock and poultry than before. Each peasant family produced an average of 97.5 kilograms of pork, beef and mutton in 1981, 53 percent over 1978. The amount of meat they kept for their own consumption also increased.

-- On average each family member earned 2.33 yuan more from domestic handicraft industry in 1981 compared with 1978, and 10.74 yuan more from building industry, transport and service trades.

-- More families are now specialized in livestock and poultry raising, fish breeding or other sidelines. Of the 360 families surveyed in Jilin Province, five percent are now specializing in sideline undertakings. The net income derived from domestic sidelines by the "specialized families" is double that of other peasant families.

The survey also shows that with every 100 yuan of investment, the 18,529 families netted an average of 277 yuan from their domestic sidelines in 1981 as against 196 yuan in 1978.

RENMIN RIBAO ON UNIVERSITY SPIRITUAL EDUCATION

[Article by Zhu Gang [2612 0474] of the Nanjing Jinling Vocational University: "Build the University Into a Fortress of Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] Editor's note: Comrade Zhu Gang is the secretary of the CCP Central Committee and president of the Nanjing Jinling Vocational University (herein called Jinling University for short). In the autumn of 1980, he was responsible for setting up a vocational university in which "the students are nonresident and study at their own expense; no job will be assigned to them after their graduation, but the best will be chosen and recommended for employment." He has his own original ideas on the building of the spiritual civilization of the university and is bold in applying them in practice. This explanatory article was written on the basis of his speech. [end editor's note]

The Jinling University has been open for 18 months. With regard to the building of spiritual civilization, we have only taken the first step and there are many shortcomings in our work. Our success will be severely tested by the performance of our graduates in the society. However, we are confident of what we have done.

Some people have said that since our present general mood of society has not been basically improved, it is beyond our power to build spiritual civilization in the university. I hold different views on this matter. I believe that we should not blame the society for all the faults. We should realize that we have better conditions in the university than the society has to educate the youths well. As long as we exert unswerving efforts, are good at giving systematic guidance and adopt effective methods, we can accomplish much in our work. All students of the Jinling University are nonresident. Compared with resident students of other universities, they are more adversely affected by the society.

In addition, they are scattered in 33 classes located at 16 sites. It is difficult to carry out our ideological work. However, the practice of the past year has precisely shown that poor conditions are not necessarily an obstruction to education. Our efforts to overcome these poor conditions can become the students' motive force in going all out to make progress.

Under the present conditions that our party's work style and the general mood of the society are gradually improving, I believe that universities should further bring the role of political work into full play to resist spiritual corrosion from various quarters and believe that our universities should be built into fortresses of spiritual civilization. Of course, we should do arduous work in order to attain this aim. According to my initial experience, we should solve in practice the following problems well:

First, we should be clear about what kind of talented people a university should nurture and train. For many years, we implemented either a leftist or rightist policy toward this problem as political stormy waves kept changing. We were not able to integrate theory with practice. Basically speaking, we are not clear, or at least not sufficiently clear about the aim of our education. We, education workers, should shoulder the task of reforming the society. University education should bring up a new generation of youths who have lofty ideas, creative talent, and lofty values and who are physically sound, diligent in making new explorations and bold in scaling new heights. After graduation they will truly become pillars of socialist modernization. To attain this aim, while running a university, we should follow a firm and correct political orientation, pursue the work style of hard work and plain living and adopt a scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts. This was the tradition of the Chinese people's anti-Japanese military and political college during the war years. This should also become the spirit of our present-day socialist universities.

Some people said that such demands were too excessive and impractical and were not in accord with the level of consciousness of the young students nowadays. Some people even opposed my efforts to revive the tradition of the anti-Japanese military and political college. I believe that it is precisely because of the unhealthy general mood of the society and the spiritual wounds and adverse influence inflicted on a number of youths, that we should exert our major efforts to do arduous and painstaking work so that our young people will be diverted from the wrong path. At present, there are sufficient conditions for building our universities into fortresses of spiritual civilization. It is absolutely possible for us to do so because the party has adopted a correct line and policy since the third plenary session of the party. In addition, the principle of upholding the four modernizations has been included in our constitution. All Chinese citizens should abide by our constitution and university students should take the lead in doing so. At present, young students have muddled ideas of this or that kind. They should not be blamed too much for this. On the contrary, we should soberly realize that this should mostly be attributed to the serious shortcomings in our educational work. I believe that most of our young people have a vast reservoir of enthusiasm for seeking truth. They bitterly hate the unhealthy general mood of the society and sincerely hope that our party will vigorously promote a new work style. They are willing to make contribution in this respect. This is their main ideological trend. In the meantime, we should realize that they are, after all, still young and politically immature and were adversely influenced during the 10 chaotic years. Their concept of right and wrong is confused and they lack the ability to distinguish spiritual contamination from various quarters. Some of our young people are dissatisfied with the present reality. But they lack the willpower to carry out struggle. Therefore, they are perplexed over the situation. To change such spiritual conditions, the previous sermon-like political education will no longer work. Rude and coercive measures will never get the desired result. On the contrary, it will widen the gaps between them and ourselves. We should observe young people carefully, guide them patiently and understand them profoundly. We should infuse truth into their minds and in time the glorious banner of communism will be hoisted again in their minds. This is a new task confronting our educational workers. Therefore, I firmly believe that to build spiritual civilization in the universities, we should, first of all, exert our main efforts to reform our education system. Otherwise, we will not be able to train a generation of people of a new type needed by the party.

Second, in order to build spiritual civilization, we should have a contingent carrying out the task. After the setting up of our university, the first thing we grasped was the building of our school spirit. To do the work well, apart from bringing into full play the role of the CCP and CYL organizations at all levels and the broad masses of teachers, we should establish a contingent of class masters who are conscious, capable and prestigious. This is a specialized contingent which constantly carries out political and ideological work and is an indispensable bridge between the party committee and students performing the task of promoting ideological understanding and exchanging information.

There are 33 classes in the Jinling University and a class master is assigned to each class. Most of the class masters are university graduates or graduates of training schools. Some of them are teachers transferred from other places or comrades who formerly ran schools. Just after they entered our university, they did not keep their minds on the work of class masters. They wrongly thought that if they engaged in the work of class masters, they would abandon their specialized subjects of study and have neither learning nor skill. They wanted to engage in teaching work. We discussed with them the tradition of the anti-Japanese military and political college and stressed the importance of political work in present-day universities. Instead of yielding to their personal desires, we set four demands on them: first, they should be prepared to bear hardship; second, they should be prepared to suffer losses; third, they should be prepared to accept the job assignment and do anything which the party organization needs; fourth, they should make the fullest possible use of the eight working hours and go all out to do their work well. We want them to sacrifice some of their personal interests and achieve good results in their work. They should use their glorious deeds to write the history of the founding the Jinling University. We use these conditions to test them. We let those who are determined to work hard stay. As for those who are not willing to stay, we do not force them to.

It is strange that our demands do not scare away but attract a number of comrades who are determined to carry out educational reform and make explorations and affect new breakthroughs in the positions of class masters. Over the past year or so, this contingent has accumulated some experiences in doing political and ideological work in practice and acquired prestige among students. The words and deeds of the members of this contingent have exerted a subtle influence of students and some class masters have become the intimate friends of students.

Third, leaders of the university personally go deep into classes, form direct links and talks with students. Once they discover the symptom of a trend, they spare no efforts in paying close attention to it until certain changes have been brought about. We never yield to evil trends or are influenced by backward ideas. By relying on the majority of students, we firmly encourage healthy trends, eliminate noxious influences and foster a spirit of uprightness. After solving this problem well, we can enhance the prestige of political work.

A university is a place where people are educated and not even a little bureaucracy can be tolerated while dealing with things in the university. I believe that we must pay attention to even the smallest matter in the university. If we fail to grasp it, it will become a big problem. This is because the university itself is a society and evil trends prevailing in the society will be reflected in the university. This is independent of our subjective will. It is our responsibility to use the effect of the party's political work to curb the spread of the evil trends and eliminate their influence. Through education and other methods, we will help students make a clear distinction between right and wrong and enhance their capability to combat spiritual contamination.

Let us cite an example. In April of last year, a boy student quarrelled with a girl student when a volleyball match was held at the university. Since I was watching the match, I criticized the boy student and asked him his name and class. He said that he was studying in the factory and civil building construction class. The next day I asked the class master of this class something about the student. He said that this student was not in his class.

I thought although this was a trivial matter, the prestige of our work would be weakened if we tolerated such a deceitful act. I decided to use an afternoon to look into the records of more than 300 students. Eventually the whole thing came to light. Actually he was a student of the architectural class. To deal with this, we provided this student with individual education on the matter. After realizing his mistakes, he wrote a self-criticism which we published in the bulletin of the university. Taking his self-esteem into consideration, we did not criticize him by name. However, this matter left a deep impression on other students.

In spite of the fact that we have firmly grasped ideological work, a small number of students still commit mistakes because of the influence of the society. In accordance with the principle of taking good care of students, we take firm action to educate and enlighten them so taht they will correct their mistakes. Even if we want to punish them, we do our ideological work thoroughly. Once they correct their mistakes, we rescind the punishment immediately to encourage them to make still greater progress. At the same time, in the process of educating these students, we try to find out the weak links in our work, sum up experience and do our best to improve our work. Strictly speaking, the university should be responsible for the mistakes committed by students.

Fourth, members of the CCP committee of the university should set an example by their own conduct. They can only ask the students to do things which they do themselves. Their conduct is a kind of imperceptible teaching. The material conditions of Jinling University are the worst among universities in Nanjing. To use the limited funds in teaching, we encourage students to overcome the transient difficulties and take hard struggle as an honor and doing pioneering work as a pleasure. To do so, the CCP committee of the university should set an example and seek no personal privileges. It should be the first to bear hardship and the last to enjoy comforts. Some leading comrades of the municipal CCP committee suggested that we buy a car. We decided to use the money to buy books needed in teaching. Every day I ride a bicycle to go to work and the units concerned. It is a good way of building up by physical strength and maintaining close links with the masses.

We have compiled a "students' manual" for teachers and students of the whole university, which carried the teachings of the party Central Committee, revolutionary teachers and revolutionaries of the older generation; students' rules and regulations; regulations for five-good students and the school song of the Jinling University compiled by ourselves. Everyone in the university sings the song, reads the manual and observes the rules and regulations. Members of the CCP committee of the university are no exceptions. Some people sneer at us, saying that we are following "orthodox ideas." We maintain that such revolutionary tradition should never be cast away. I firmly believe that if we persist in doing so, we will be able to foster an excellent school spirit in 3 to 5 years and lay a solid foundation for the building of a fortress of spiritual civilization.

RENMIN RIBAO ON RESTRUCTURING ECONOMIC SYSTEM

[Article by Yu Guangyuan [0060 0342 6678]: "Holding Discussions on Questions Concerning the Theories on Restructuring the Economic System"]

I

[Text] Today, the State Economic System Restructuring Commission and the Economic Research Center under the State Council have mobilized the economic research organs and economic organizations in Beijing to hold discussion on questions concerning the theories on restructuring the economic system of our country. I think that this is extremely necessary.

As everybody knows, making a success of the work of restructuring the socialist economic system requires the solving of many questions concerning theory, and moreover, these questions are rather difficult to solve. Therefore, it will not do for us not to make an effort to study theory. Theory must play the guiding role and take the lead.

The study of questions concerning the theories on restructuring the economic system has not been as enthusiastic in recent years as in 1979 and 1980. After this mobilization, there may be a new upsurge in the study and discussion of this question. This is a question which affects many people and many people are interested in it. There are bound to be all kinds of views and ideas and we should allow their discussion. Although it is still not the time to extensively mobilize the masses to discuss this question at present, study and discussion of this question should be developed among more people.

II

The restructuring of the socialist economic system is an important matter in contemporary world history. Since World War II, almost all socialist countries have brought up this question sooner or later. This matter of the restructuring of the economic system will have an important impact on the economic and political life of socialist countries. We may regard this as another change of historical significance after carrying out the socialist transformation of private ownership of the means of production in socialist countries. Once this matter is carried out in socialist countries, the broad masses of cadres and people in socialist countries will naturally attach a high degree of importance to it. However, not only the people of socialist countries will take an interest in this matter. Scholars of capitalist countries will also closely follow and study it. Politicians of capitalist countries will also write about it in their articles. This is not at all surprising, for the success or failure of the restructuring of the socialist economic system will have a bearing not only on the destiny of socialist countries, but it will also have an important impact on the historical progress of the whole world, including that of capitalist countries.

For China, the restructuring of the socialist economic system is an important matter concerning building China into a strong and modern socialist country with a high degree of democracy and civilization. At present it is necessary to stress the importance of economic readjustment, but we definitely cannot relegate the position of restructuring. In this discussion on the economic system, we should first define the important historical position of system restructuring.

III

It is necessary to define the scope and nature of the questions to be studied and discussed. I hold that we should distinguish between the two different concepts: one is the basic economic system of socialism and the other is the economic system of socialism. What the basic economic system of socialism refers to is that all socialist countries throughout the socialist historical period practice this kind of economic system, and that the means of production are publicly owned by society, distribution is made according to work and there are socialist commodities. The socialist economic system is different in different socialist countries or in different periods in the same socialist country. They are both specific economic relations established on the basic economic system of socialism. Therefore, in socialistic countries, there can only be the question of upholding and perfecting the basic economic system of socialism and there cannot be the question of restructuring. However, the socialist economic system can and must carry out restructuring and rationalization according to needs. The restructuring of the socialist economic system is to find, implement, consolidate and develop a whole set of specific socialist relations of production. It plays a promotional role in consolidating and perfecting the basic economic system of socialism.

The content of the restructuring of the socialist economic system in our country consists of two aspects: one is the restructuring of the management system within the socialist staterun economy and the other is the restructuring of the socialist ownership system. Under the historical condition of our country today, we still must allow the existence of certain nonsocialist economic components and place them in the service of socialist economic development. This does not belong to the category of restructuring the socialist economic system.

The restructuring of the economic system is a matter within the category of restructuring the socialist relations of production. The socialist ownership structure refers to certain forms of socialist ownership as well as the condition of relations between them in the economic system. Among the various forms of socialist ownership in our country, socialist state ownership has absolute superiority and its scale is extremely large. In the state, the enterprises, the individual, the localities and the departments, internal relations are very complicated. Therefore, the question of restructuring the socialist state-run economic management system should independently become the most important content in social economic reform. In the course of studying the question of restructuring the management system within the socialist state ownership economy, we must objectively take into consideration the economic problems within the socialist state-run economy and also study what form the state-run economic system should take after restructuring.

IV

The study of theories on restructuring the socialist economic system is also the carrying out of a theoretical summing up of relevant aspects of the economic system in the historical experiences of socialist economic construction. With the world framework, all experiences since the October Revolution are background materials which we must take into consideration when studying questions concerning the theories on the socialist economic system. The experiences of various socialist countries in the more than 30 years since Yugoslavia started practicing worker self-management in the 1950's are even more directly related to the study of questions on the restructuring of the economic system. That is to say the world has two types of materials covering more than 60 years and more than 30 years. In China, there are two types of materials, one from the more than 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic and the other from the 4 years since the proposal for restructuring the system.

There is no need for us to elaborate on the importance of studying historical experiences. We want to point out in particular that this kind of study is not so easy because we must first study the activities made by people in history and the results obtained in the historical environment of that particular time and place before we can draw the correct conclusion. For example, our economic development during the First 5-Year Plan was relatively smooth and this has been the consensus of everyone. However, can we say that the economic system of our country at that time was the best?

I think that on such important questions in theory and practice as the restructuring of the socialist economic system, differences in the views and understanding of many scholars who study this question are unavoidable, and there will even be some nonmarxist and anti-Marxist views. Even among the ranks of Marxists, views on questions concerning the theories on restructuring the economic system will also not be completely identical. If some of the questions are not clearly studied, views on some of the questions will in a certain sense still be rather confused. I think that under this kind of situation, a cautious attitude should be adopted in saying which of these views is Marxist and which is anti-Marxist. In short, we must allow the discussion of various expressed views, draw conclusions by means of study, and, in certain cases, also base conclusions on facts.

V

One of the questions we must study at present is how to uphold the basic economic system of socialism. The basic economic system of socialism determines the economic life of society (including such aspects as production, distribution and consumption) and possesses the basic features of socialism. We must uphold these basic features and continue to perfect them.

For example, what the socialist countries practice is planned economy. Planning is the basic feature of socialist economy. The restructuring of the socialist economic system should improve planning and must not weaken or reduce planning.

The question at present is how can we improve planning? Planning is for the sake of enabling the movement and development of the national economy to be carried out in accordance with predeterimined plans. To achieve this, planning itself must be scientific. At the same time, there must be a set of methods for ensuring and improving planning. The handing down of plans in the form of directives, or in fact plans that are handed down in the form of directives and then ensured by administrative and legal means, is one of the methods. The use of such economic levers as carefully planned pricing, taxation, credit and wage policies in order to guide the actions of the people and for the sake of according with the demands of the plan is the second method. The use of the economic power controlled by the state to struggle against various forces, which are harmful to socialist construction and which sabotage planned economy in the market, with improving planning as its objective, is the third method. Gathering and analyzing economic and technical information to prepare various statistics and forecasts, investigating and studying the land and other resources of the country and supplying them as "planning data" to various departments, districts and relevant units for drawing up plans is the fourth method. However, upholding, and as far as possible, improving planning, is the principle we must comply with when carrying out the restructuring of the system. This kind of planning we are referring to is planning which coincides with objective reality. We must measure the level of our planned economic development in accordance with the degree of planning in actual economic life.

We will call the restructuring of the economic system to be carried out the restructuring of the socialist economic system, for it contains these two meanings: 1) It is the carrying out of the restructuring of the economic system in a socialist country. 2) It is the carrying out of the restructuring of the economic system for upholding the socialist basic economic system.

VI

The aim of restructuring the socialist economic system is to develop production and increase labor productivity so that the manpower and land resources as well as other economic resources can be fully brought into play. The key to the restructuring of the economic system is this word "restructure." What key to the restructuring of the economic system is this word "restructure?" Why must we restructure? This is because there are still many things in the present economic system not suited to bringing productive forces into play and developing productive forces. Therefore, the first thing we must do in the restructuring is to carry out a conscientious and comprehensive analysis of the present economic system and mobilize more people to carry out this work. Things which are good should be retained and things which are bad should be discarded. Although some of the things may be good, they can be replaced with still better things. If we do not make a success of this work, we will not know what to restructure. If we do not make a success of this work, there will be no unanimity of understanding among the people and we will not be able to make concerted efforts.

The more thoroughgoing the work of analyzing the present economic system, the clearer will be the questions of an orientation nature which must be solved in the restructuring. However, there are still some questions which cannot be spontaneously solved even after our analysis of the present economic system. We must constantly examine and repeatedly test these new questions. The discussion on questions concerning theories on restructuring the socialist economic system is also extremely important. By means of discussing and pooling the wisdom of the masses, some excellent ideas and views on restructuring the economic system will be produced. In the summer of 1980, I wrote an article entitled "After the Decsion To Carry Out Restructuing." In the article, I listed several questions concerning the theories I thought we must discuss on restructuring the socialist economy. One of them was "the commodity nature of products produced in socialist economy and the regulatory role of the market on production and consumption." I called for the study of "whether or not the means of production should be commercialized, what should be the extent and degree of commercialization of the means of production and the character and characteristics of the socialist market."

In the last few years, everybody has attached great importance to the question of planning and the market. This is an important issue in the restructuring of the economic system. In recent years, there have been roughly six ways to express this question: 1) "Integrate planned economy with market economy." 2) "Integrate regulation by planning mechanism with regualtion by market mechanism and take regulation by planning mechanism as the key factor." 3) "Integrate regulation by planning mechanism with regulation by market mechanism." 4) "Practice planned economy and at the same time give play to the subsidiary role of regulation by market mechanism." 5) "Take planned economy as the key factor and supplement it with regulation by market mechanism." 6) "The state ensures the proportionate and coordinated development of the national economy through the comprehensive balancing of economic plans with regulation by market mechanism as a subsidiary." This last formulation has been written into the draft of the revised constitution. Since planning and the market are important issues in the restructuring of the economic system, we should study them more fully in theory.

VII

Today I have talked about the six questions mentioned above and discussed six views. Apart from these six questions, there is also another point I wish to mention, and that is, I think that there can never be a permanent solution to the restructuring of the socialist economic system. The restructuring we must study and realize today is based on the concrete practice of China put forward at the present stage, and this is a question we should and could solve today. The relatively important and long-term questions in the restructuring of the socialist economic system we can call strategic questions of restructuring the system. There are also some relatively minor and short-term questions we can call tactical questions of restructuring the system. We must solve questions of a strategic nature, but the time required (regardless of the time for studying or the time for putting it into practice) will be longer. The profundity and scope of this matter of restructuring the socialist economic system in a country as big as China must be fully taken into consideration. It is definitely not something we can solve within a short time. We must make necessary mental preparations for this. However, the restructuring of the system is also an urgent question, and it will also have a great impact on the present economic work of our country. We must change certain unreasonable systems within a relatively short time. I think that these restructurings of a tactical nature should not be slackened, and we should pay close attention to solve some of the questions. We can solve the ones which are ripe and conduct experiments at selected points for those which do not yet have the proper conditions. Regardless of whether the restructuring of the system is of a strategic nature or a tactical nature, there will be many questions concerning the theories. I hope that those engaged in economic work will pay attention to these questions.

HONGQI ON MAO, PARTY ROLES IN LITERATURE, ART

[Commentator's article: "A Brilliant Example of the Party's Leadership in Literature and Art"]

[Text] To mark the 40th anniversary of the publication of his "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," Comrade Mao Zedong's 15 private letters to writers and artists were published. The publication of these letters is of great significance in the correct and comprehensive understanding of the fundamental spirit of the "Talks," in the strengthening of the party's leadership over literature and art and in the adherence to the orientation of serving the people and socialism.

Comrade Mao Zedong's letters to writers and artists are not ordinary letters to old friends or individuals. Through these letters, we can deeply feel his loving care for the literary and art circles and his patient and systematic guidance for the literary and art workers. Proceeding from the actual conditions, he always realistically solved various problems in the literature and art fields and guided the literary and art workers to advance in the correct direction. These letters are a brilliant example of the party leadership in literature and art.

The question of whom literature and art should serve has always been a fundamental question. In these letters, Comrade Mao Zedong also considered this question of primary importance. Since "the life at present is also a struggle," he particularly stressed that "we need militant works now," and that "both Yanan and the border regions badly need dramas reflecting the struggles in the enemy's rear flanks." Although the situation is different today from that of the war period, it is still an important task for writers and artists to reflect the people's struggles and life in the revolution and construction. In these letters, he enthusiastically supported the work of popularizing literature and art. He affirmed the role played by the journal POPULAR LITERARY AND ART PRACTICE, which was aimed at helping correspondents and beginners raise their writing ability, and affirmed the article "Forms of Yangko Opera," which summed up the experiences of this opera. On the question of how to comprehend Lenin's talks with Clara Zetkin on art, Comrade Mao Zedong held that revolutionary literature and art should place their bases among the masses and serve the masses, so that "the feelings, thoughts and will of the masses" which were dispersed due to economic, political, geographical and national reasons, could be "united" through the spread of literature and art. That is, as an artistic form spreading ideology, exchanging feelings and arousing consciousness, literature and art must promote the unity of the people so that they will take an active part in the fighting with one heart and one mind. It was proceeding from this principle that Comrade Mao Zedong affirmed the play "Be Driven to the Liangshan Mountain," which "reveals history in its true colors." The orientation Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out here for literary and art work is the same orientation he repeatedly stressed in his "talks" and is certainly the only correct orientation of serving the people and serving socialism, which we must adhere to in our literature and art work today. Under no circumstances should our literature and art deviate from the general orientation of uniting the people, educating the people and encouraging the people to join in the revolution and construction with one heart and one mind.

A very important question for our party in leading literature and art is how to correctly handle the relations between the party leaders and the literary and art workers. This has a bearing on whether the large number of literary and art workers can be closely united around the party and whether their enthusiasm can be brought into full play to create more and better works for the people. In these letters, Comrade Mao Zedong always fully affirmed the achievements and progress of the writers and artists with immense zeal. Understanding the orientation of serving the workers, peasants and soldiers after the Yanan forum on literature and art, a large number of literary and art workers plunged themselves into the fiery struggles and soon scored new achievements. With his keen strategic insight as a proletarian revolutionary and politician, Comrade Mao Zedong paid close attention to this new development. When Comrade Ding Ling and Ouyang Shan wrote two special features about two exemplary people in cooperative work in the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border region, Comrade Mao Zedong "finished reading them in one breath after taking a bath and before going to bed" and wrote immediately to the two comrades, extending his "congratulations to the Chinese people and to both of you for your new writing style." Although this letter was written dozens of years ago, it is so ebullient that it still touches the receivers' hearts when they reread it today. Comrade Ding Ling said: "I was greatly encouraged by this letter and thus began my new writing style. What is my new writing style? It is none other than writing about the workers, peasants and soldiers." Comrade Ouyang Shan said: "Whenever I recall this letter, I always feel a strong force that spurs me on." Today, when we read these letters, Comrade Mao Zedong's teachings still warm our hearts. We deeply feel that Comrade Mao Zedong was really an intimate friend and teacher of the literary and art circles.

Comrade Mao Zedong took a serious attitude toward the work in the literature and art fields as well as in other fields and had a strong sense of principle. While enthusiastically and cordially affirming and encouraging the writers and affirming their achievements, he also offered his sincere and comradely criticisms and aid gave explicit and hearty directions to them. When he was informed by a writer about the situation in Yanan, he first replied in the affirmative that there actually were unhealthy practices in Yanan which needed to be rectified. At the same time, he hoped that the writer would also "pay attention to one's own weak points and not to look at things one-sidedly." "One must pay attention to the correct handling of one's relations with other people and must compel oneself to intentionally examine one's weak points." He also required the writers to "examine their works with the Marxist viewpoint." Whenever we read these sincere words and earnest requirements of Comrade Mao Zedong today, they still touch our hearts. A speech made by Comrade Chen Yun in 1943, which was republished simultaneously with the publication of these letters, embodies the same principle and spirit. In this speech, Comrade Chen Yun criticized two shortcomings in the literary and art circles at that time. "One is privilege and the other is arrogance." He requested our party's literary and art workers to first regard themselves as ordinary party members and not learned scholars. He also asked them not to unrealistically overestimate the roles of literary and art work as well as personal achievements and talents. This is still of important and immediate significance today. Literary and art criticism is an important aspect of the party leadership in literature and art. It includes commending good and excellent works and criticizing bad and erroneous works. Under no circumstances should we give up the weapon of criticism. Some people dare not carry out principled criticism over the works or viewpoints which have obvious erroneous tendencies for fear that the enthusiasm of the writers and artists may be dampened or that they themselves may be blamed as "wielding big sticks." Thus, the party leadership has become lax and weak. This situation must be changed. However, there is also a problem of method and result in carrying out criticisms. The method of criticism displayed in Comrade Mao Zedong's letters, which is highly principled, must be taken as an example for our leaders at various levels and literary and art workers when carrying out literary and art criticisms.

Comrade Mao Zedong was a great Marxist, and a great poet too. He was knowledgeable on the law of art. He also paid serious attention to the investigation and study of the situation in the literary and art circles. Before he made the speech at the Yanan forum on literature and art, he listened attentively to various opnions. He discussed with Comrades Ouyang Shan and Cao Ming "problems concerning the literary and art policy," and then wrote to them, asking them to "collect NEGATIVE opinions for me." [capitalized word underlined] from here we can see that Comrade Mao Zedong not only paid attention to listening to positive and similar opinions but also paid attention to listening to negative and different opinions. All correct and realistic policies, principles, schemes and plans should be worked out after sufficient investigation and study and after listening to both positive and negative opinions. Comrade Mao Zedong's "Talks" is a brilliant Marxist work. This is inseparable from his spirit of investigation and study.

Forty years have passed since the publication of the "Talks." These letters were also written more than 30 or 40 years ago. Now, as the situation has changed, Mao Zedong's literary and art thought must also be developed in the light of the new situation and our historical experiences. The past erroneous tendency of studying Comrade Mao Zedong's "Talks" and other works with a dogmatist attitude must be prevented. However, Mao Zedong's literary and art thought is still of important guiding significance today. Total repudiation of Mao Zedong's literary and art thought under the pretext of past mistakes or other reasons is an expression of bourgeois liberalization and must be resolutely opposed. We must adhere to the basic principles of Mao Zedong's literary and art thought and continue to follow the brilliant example of Comrade Mao Zedong in leading the work in the literature and art fields. We must adhere to Mao Zedong's literary and art thought and the guidance of Mao Zedong Thought. This is the only correct road for the development of our revolutionary literature and art.

MANY EXPORT COMMODITIES BASES ESTABLISHED

China began to establish these bases in 1972. They have quickly developed since the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee. With economic and technical support given them by the state, they have constantly increased exports and improved the quality of export commodities. Their supply has been stable and deliveries of commodities ordered have always been on schedule. The 24 comprehensive bases are located in Guangdong, Jiangsu, Shandong, Zhejiang, Liaoning and Hebei Provinces and some autonomous regions.

Foshan Prefecture in Guangdong is China's earliest comprehensive base specializing in the production of export commodities. Its total foreign trade procurement last year amounted to 1.22 billion yuan, or 5 times that of 1972, the year before the prefecture was established as an export commodities base. This Chinese prefecture provides Hong Kong and Macao with a year-round supply of live freshwater fish and a great variety of vegetables. Hong Kong and Macao import about 90 percent of their freshwater fish from Foshan to meet their needs. Export commodities from the five comprehensive bases of Yantai, Qingdao, Weifang, Linyi and Heze in Shandong Province account for 71 percent of Shandong's total export procurement.

The establishment of bases for exporting commodities is conducive to promoting rural economic diversification, enlivening the national economy and creating jobs. Export development has enabled the annual income of rural commune members in Yantai Prefecture in Shandong to increase by an average of 40 yuan per head since 1980. The communes and production brigades in Yangzhou Prefecture, Jiangsu, have boosted their income from exports by more than 300 million yuan in the past 3 years.

To support production of export commodities, the state has issued large numbers of special loans and foreign exchange credits, while appropriating funds for various expenses. Form 1972 to 1980 the state appropriated 2.58 billion yuan earmarked as special funds for exporting industrial products and to be used for technical support or as circulating funds needed to promote exports. These appropriations have enabled more than 7,100 enterprises producing export commodities to carry out technical transformation and, in turn, boosted their production capacity by 9.5 billion yuan in output value. The foreign trade departments have established the China Export Commodities Bases Construction Corporation in an effort to strengthen their direction and help export commodities bases. The corporation has established a number of branches in Shanghai, Tianjin, Beijing, Liaoning, Heilongjiang and Shandong.

FUJIAN URGES ECONOMIC CRIMINALS TO SURRENDER

[Text] In a recent interview with responsible comrades of the provincial political and law departments, this reporter asked about how the two resolutions on economic criminals had been implemented in our province. They are the "resolution on severe punishment for criminals who seriously undermine the economy" adopted by the NPC standing committee and the "resolution on a 1 month postponement of the deadline for economic crininals to give themselves up and be dealt with leniently" adopted by the provincial people's congress standing committee. This reporter also inquired into the policies of how economic criminals who give themselves up and confessed their crimes after the deadline would be dealt with.

On these questions, the responsible comrades of the provincial political and law department pointed out: Since the implementation of the two resolutions, the leading organs of the party and government as well as the political and law departments at all levels have extensively and penetratingly carried out propaganda work so that the spirit of the two resolutions can be made known to every household and strike root in the hearts of the people. With the inspiration of the party's policies, a large number of economic criminals have clearly seen their way out and confessed their crimes with the hope of being accorded lenient treatment. During the 80 day period after the two resolutions were make public, a total of 1,703 economic criminals gave themselves up in the province. They returned illicit money amounting to 1,404,962 yuan, in addition to a certain amount of precious booty. (The above figure does not include those who have confessed their crimes after they were investigated or arrested.) We welcome all those who decide to make a clear break with their past and make a wise choice of confessing their crimes to obtain lenient treatment. Political and law departments at all levels have made a quick decision of according lenient treatment to those who had confessed their crimes and whose crimes had been cleared up. Some have been exempted from prosecution or punishment and some criminals in custody have been released. In many places, public trial meetings were held to apply in action the party's policy of leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse to. Facts prove that our party and government are pursuing a policy of putting words into action.

The responsible comrades of the provincial political and law department also pointed out that in parts of our province, a certain number of economic criminals, especially the principal criminals of some important cases, are still full of misgivings and are taking a wait-and-see attitude. Some think the deadline fixed in the resolution has expired. If they now surrender themselves it will be as if they are putting their necks into a noose. Even if they confess their crimes, they think they can hardly be dealt with leniently. This is wrong and even harmful. The responsible comrades stressed that the door of leniency is still open to all economic criminals who confess their crimes. Leniency to those who confess their crime is our party's consistent policy. In the "resolution on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field" jointly formulated by the CCPCC and the State Council, it is also clearly stated that even after the deadline, those who really repect and turn over a new leaf, give themselves up, honestly confess their crimes and expose other's, and return spoils on their own accord, can still be accorded fairly lenient treatment in accordance with relevant policies and laws. In the "penal code" revived and revised by the NPC Standing Committee, punishments for some serious economic offenses have been increased.

However, in accordance with policies and laws, whether criminals confess their crimes or refuse to is always the grounds for dealing with them leniently or severely. Leniency is accorded to the criminals who give themselves up. This is clearly stipulated in law. Political and law departments at all levels should continue to explain to all economic criminals our party's consistent policy of leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse to. They should try their best with utmost patience to redeem those who have slipped and fallen into the water.

The responsible comrades of the provincial political and legal departments gave a strong warning to those diehards who are making a vain attempt at a last stand, and said that if they vainly hope avoid the investigation by a fluke, then they have brought their hogs to the wrong market. There is a limit to the leniency of our party's policy and state laws. Any criminal who continues to conceal his crimes and keeps on engaging in crime will never be able to escape severe punishment by law.

EMERGENCY MEETING ON FARMING HELD IN SHANDONG

[Text] Jinan, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Shandong Provincial CCP Committee recently called an emergency meeting to mobilize people throughout the province to continuously work hard, pay close attention to summer sowing and field management, make up for the losses in summer crops with a good autumn harvest and strive for a bumper harvest of grain crops this year.

As the result of a serious drought, Shandong Province's wheat output dropped this year as compared with last year. It is necessary to make up for the decreased output of summer crops with a good autumn harvest, which the provincial party committee considered entirely possible.

1. The output of autumn grain crops accounts for about (?two-thirds) of the province's annual grain output. If only the output of autumn grain crops can be increased, it will be possible to make up for the losses in summer crops.

2. There are favorable conditions for obtaining a bumper harvest of autumn crops; the province now has 48.8 million mu of spring-sown crops, an increase of 3 million mu over the same period of last year.

Most of these crops are growing well. Because of a drought, the wheat crop was generally harvested earlier than before, and summer-sown crops were planted in time. Because the output of summer crops dropped, soil fertility was not brought into full play. Therefore, there is a great potential for an increase in the production of autumn-ripening crops.

For this purpose, the Shangdong Provincial CCP Committee held an emergency meeting which was attended by the secretaries of prefectural and municipal party committees and responsible comrades of the departments concerned directly under the provincial authority. The meeting discussed and made arrangements for summer planting, harvesting and field management and took four measures to make up for the losses in summer crops with a good autumn harvest:

1. On the basis of keeping stable the acreage sown to cotton, peanuts, tobacco and other industrial crops, it is necessary to effectively ensure the acreage sown to grain crops in the province.

2. In line with local conditions, it is necessary to plant more high-yielding, drought-resistant and weather-resistant crops, such as sweet potatoes, melons, beans and vegetables, which can grow on barren land.

3. It is necessary to consolidate and improve various forms of production responsibility system. Units which practice unified management should gradually adopt various forms of contract system. Units which fix output quotas and contract for farm work on a household basis should gradually irrigate farmland, drain waterlogged fields and build small water conservancy projects in a unified way in order to bring the initiative of the collective and theindividual into full play and to increase their ability to combat natural disasters.

4. People in all trades and professions should adopt an overall point of view. On condition that if normal production is assured, the industrial front should make vigorous efforts to cut down its consumption of oil, electricity and coal in order to make more oil, electricity and coal available for agriculture use. The financial aid trade front should di a good job in supplying materials for use in combating drought and other natural disasters and actively contribute to obtaining a bumper harvest of autumn crops.

SHANGHAI PAPER ON CURRENT CLASS STRUGGLE

OW150625 Zhanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 9 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Hu Lu: "A Few Questions on Class Struggle Under Present Conditions"]

[Excerpts] Why do we say that the current struggle "to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is a major manifestation of class struggle in the economic sphere under the new historical conditions of China's socialist society?"

This thesis in the "decision on dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field" of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council is based on actual conditions in the economic field in our country. If the serious criminal activities in the economic field are allowed to spread unchecked, it will be impossible for our modernization program to be carried on smoothly. Obviously the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is vital to the success or failure of the socialist modernization drive and the prosperity or decline of our party and state. It is a serious struggle of communists and the masses of the people who uphold socialism against elements hostile to and undermining socialism, a conflict of fundamentally opposed interests, and therefore a major manfestation of class struggle in the economic sphere under the new historical conditions of China's socialist society.

As the exploiting classes have been eliminated as classes, why is there still a class struggle? What are the different characteristics of the class struggle under present conditions from the class struggle of the past?

The "resolution on certain questions in the history of our party since the founding of the People's Republic of China" unanimously adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee clearly points out: "Class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction after the exploiters have been eliminated as classes. However, owing to certain domestic factors and influences from abroad, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come and may even grow acute under certain conditions. It is necessary to oppose both the view that the scope of class struggle must be enlarged and the view that it has died out."

This is a scientific conclusion reached by applying the fundamental principles of Marxism on the class situation and class struggle under the new historical conditions of China's socialist society. It is also an important guiding principle for us to correctly understand the current class struggle in our country.

Judging by a host of facts, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come mainly because: 1. Although the exploiting classes have been eliminated as classes, their remnants and other hostile elements are still around and will make trouble when they find an opportunity. 2. The ideology of the exploiting classes will continue to exist for a long time to come and still can corrupt some people. 3. The exploiting classes have been eliminated as classes only on the mainland. In Taiwan, Penghu, Quemoy and Matsu as well as in Hong Kong and Macao, the exploiting system still exists and the exploiting classes are intact. The reactionaries among them and those blinded by greed inevitably will try in every conceivable way to corrupt the mainland. 4. Internationally, imperialism and hegemonism are always trying in every possible way to infiltrate, undermine and subvert our country politically, economically, ideologically and culturally. 5. With the development of economic relations with foreign countries, decadent capitalist ideas and the bourgeois life style will invade us through various channels.

Under present conditions, class struggle is mainly against counterrevolutionaries and enemy special agents; various kinds of criminal offenders and other bad elements; new exploiters engaged in graft, embezzlement and speculation; some remnants of the "gang of four;" a small number of unreformed landlords and rich peasants and some remnants of other old exploiting classes. This struggle is different from the class struggle of the past mainly because the above-mentioned elements hostile to and undermining socialism can no longer form an open and whole class after the exploiting classes have been eliminated as classes.

Now that class struggle is stressed in dealing resolute blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, are we going to repeat the past mistakes of "taking class struggle as the key link" and enlarging the scope of class struggle?

The answer is definitely no. "Taking class struggle as the key link" was a slogan raised shortly before the "cultural revolution." Practice has proven that this slogan is totally erroneous and has caused very serious consequences. The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee resolutely ended the use of the erroneous slogan "taking class struggle as the key link" which does not apply to socialist society, made the important decision on shifting the whole party's work emphasis to socialist modernization and fundamentally corrected the erronneous "left" guiding ideology. At the same time, the party Central Committee summed up the party's experiences and lessons, both positive and negative, in class struggle and made a correct appraisal of class struggle under present conditions in our country. The class struggle we have talked about since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee is basically different from "taking class struggle as the key link." The difference is manifest in the following:

1. Class struggle now occupies a different position in our society. The party Central Committee clearly pointed out that after the completion in the main of socialist transformation and the elimination of the exploiting classes as classes, the principal contradiction in the country is no longer class struggle, but the contradiction between the people's growing material and cultural needs and the backward social production. Class struggle, including dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, must be subordinated to, serving and of help to the central task of economic construction.

2. The appraisal of the situation of class struggle is different. In the past, under the influence of erroneous "left" ideas, it was held that class struggle existed all the time in all places, and a large number of social contradictions which did not fall within the scope of class struggle were all regarded as class struggle. Now the party central committee has clearly pointed out that class struggle exists only within certain limits. The "resolution" of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee also points out: "We must correctly understand that there are diverse social contradictions in Chinese society which do not fall within the scope of class struggle and that methods other than class struggle must be used for their appropriate resolution."

3. The method of class struggle is different. Because class struggle is no longer the principal contradiction in today's society, we need not and should not launch turbulent mass movements like we did in the past, but should solve problems of class struggle which exist within certain limits in the same legal cases are handled, using socialist law as the weapon and following judicial procedures. The current struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is being waged in this way. Therefore, in practice we are not "taking class struggle as the key link" and will not again make the mistake of enlarging the scope of class struggle.

GUANGDONG GOVERNOR ON EXTERNAL ECONOMIC WORK

[Text] Guangzhou, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At a forum held in Guangzhou today attended by provincial, municipal and prefectural external economic committee directors, Guangdong Provincial Governor Liu Tianfu stressed that it is essential to unservingly implement the policy of opening up to the world and make a new breakthrough in Guangdong's external economic activities.

Liu Tianfu said: Every place is linked to the international market. We cannot carry out our construction behind closed doors. Relying on our own efforts on the one hand and opening up to the world, absorbing advanced foreign management experience and importing advanced technology and the necessary capital on the other are mutually complementary. Modern science and technology is the wealth of the world, and international technological cooperation is the trend of world economic development. We should learn advanced foreign things and bring into play people's wisdom and talent in order to redouble our strength and speed up the four modernizations drive.

Speaking on Guangdong's implementation of the policy of opening up to the world in the past 2 years, Liu Tianfu said, it is completely correct that Guangdong's external economic activities should be more developed than in other provinces. We have already scored great success in this work. Guangdong's foreign trade exports account for 10 percent of the national volume. Guangdong makes use of foreign investment and technology, and carries out processing work for foreign customers, compensation trade, and joint venture work. The joint ventures are relatively good, especially the processing of imported raw materials, turning out products according to imported patterns, and assembling imported parts, all for foreign customers, and compensation trade; these activities are now being undertaken in more than 60 counties and municipalities throughout the province. Generally speaking, however, we have not yet truly made a breakthrough. We must take full advantage of Guangdong's superior features in bordering Hong Kong and Macao and in being a place where there are many Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, and further develop the province's external economic dealings.

On how to make a breakthrough in Guangdong's foreign trade, Liu Tianfu said, in the future, Guangdong's foreign trade must change from stressing agricultural and sideline products to focusing on industrial products, and from stressing the Hong Kong and Macao market to focusing on the international market. We must succeed in not exporting industrial products at a loss, or only at a small loss. We must achieve self-sufficiency in certain products that can compete on the international market. The most fundamental thing is to improve the level of the province's industrial production. Liu Tianfu also pointed out, we must do still better in processing raw materials and so on for foreign customers and in compensation trade, strengthen controls, stabilize the policies, and fulfill the contracts.

GUANGDONG'S REN ZHONGYI WARNS ON PRODUCTION LAGS

[Report by Zhang Yueliang [1728 6460 5328]: "Ren Zhongyi Stresses Maintaining the Policy of Opening Up to the World and Enlivening the Domestic Economy"]

[Text] While recently learning the conditions of industrial production from the provincial economics committee, Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi stressed that the aim of hitting at economic crimes was to clear away the obstacles to the four modernizations drive; that it was essential to maintain the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy and that whether production could be promoted remained the major hallmark for determining whether work was being done well or badly.

Ren Zhongyi demanded that the cadres in the industrial and communications departments seriously study the Central Committee and State Council "Decision on Hitting at Serious Economic Crimes," clarify their muddled ideas and get rid of fear of difficulties and negative feelings. He said: The policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy must be maintained. It is necessary to make up for past deficiencies in work and, in this context, strengthen ideological and political work and strengthen management. The cadres at all levels must bring into play a high degree of activism and study and solve whatever new problems arise in the new situation.

Since certain normal cooperation channels have been cut, certain purchase and sales staff have become afraid of difficulties, and certain enterprises have run into problems. Ren Zhongyi stressed: While maintaining planned economy as the leading factor, we must continue to pay attention to bringing into play the supplementary role of regulation by market mechanism. He said: The whole country and the whole province must help supply each other's needs. It is necessary to cut off irregular and sinister channels, but normal channels must not be cut. If proper and normal cooperation is cut, this will be very bad for production. He pointed out: There are indeed instances of illegalities and crimes among personnel who go abroad on purchasing missions, but only a few are involved; the work of the purchasing staff is very important and also very arduous. We must protect their activism and their normal business dealings; we must not cause difficulties for them and hamper them. The purchasing staff should go out, and continue to go out, to do their work; we must not stifle production to death.

GUANGDONG DOCUMENT ON LATE RICE PRODUCTION

HK091129 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 8 Jun 82

[Excerpts] The Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee and People's Government recently approved and transmitted the "Summary of the Provincial Forum on Late Rice Production" submitted by the provincial agricultural committee. The comments of the provincial CCP committee and people's government on this "Summary" says: "The provincial CCP committee and people's government has approved the 'Summary of the Provincial Forum on Late Rice Production' submitted by the provincial agricultural committee. This document is now transmitted to you. The policy and measures put forth in this 'Summary' are applicable. We hope that various localities will study it earnestly and carry it out in the light of their local conditions."

The "Summary of the Provincial Forum on Late Rice Production" pointed out that during the 12 years from 1970 to 1981, the per mu yield of late rice in this province fell, while in 6 of these years the total output of late rice also fell. But things were different in various localities. The low and unstable yield chiefly happened in the central part of the province, which is colder and is often hit by typhoons. The "Summary" says that of the many reasons for the low and unstable yield, the changeable weather in the central part of the province, which is often hit by cold continental wind, cold currents and typhoons, is an important one. Another main reason is the backward cultivation techniques and management.

The "Summary" says that in order to change the backward situation of low and unstable yields, it is necessary to change our guiding ideology to first striving for stable yields before striving for high yields and to adhere to the policy of developing advantages and preventing and resisting disasters. At present, it is necessary to grasp well the following jobs: Make reasonable arrangement for the growing of various varieties of rice in the light of local conditions, strictly follow the seasons, improve cultivation techniques, do a good job in applying organic fertilizer and improve the soil.

GUANGDONG PAPER URGES GREATER ECONOMIC CRACKDOWN

[Commentator's article: "We Must Raise Our Understanding and Deepen the Struggle"]

[Text] In the past 4 months or so, the struggle to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic area has been gradually started in our province. Initial results have been achieved. The number of incidents such as smuggling and illegal trading have declined. A large number of major and important cases have been uncovered. A number of serious economic criminals have given themselves up to judicial organs under the influence of the party's policy or when confronted by state laws. Many units have also seriously corrected mistakes and errors in their work. They have summed up experiences and lessons, formulated measures to set things straight and plugged loopholes. Cadres at all levels have markedly raised their understanding of this struggle, thus strengthening leadership and consolidating the forces devoted to building enterprises. The struggle is developing in a healthy manner. The situation is favorable, as far as the whole struggle is concerned.

But we have fought only a superficial battle. The problem that now exists is that major and important cases have still not been fully exposed. Those cases already exposed have not been completely investigated and solved. Many cadres, including some leadership cadres, still do not have an adequate understanding of the nature and importance of this struggle. Confused thinking, a passive attitude and a tendency to avoid difficulties exist. In handling cases some difficulties and obstacles have been encountered. The development of the struggle among areas and units is still very uneven. The leadership of some units assumes a resolute attitude, takes effective measures and has the full trust of the masses. The struggle has got off to a good start with initial results achieved. On the other hand, the leadership of some units is not keen or energetic enough. The struggle has proceeded slowly, with the situation almost in a deadlock. The masses show lack of confidence. These problems must be immediately solved. Only in this way can the struggle be further deepened.

At the 5 June report meeting of leadership cadres of organs directly under the province, the provincial CCP committee had already made arrangements on how to deepen the struggle. In line with the spirit of this meeting, all areas must seriously analyze things at a preceding stage; check what work has been done and what remains to be done, and what shortcomings and problems exist; and study how to take effective measures to deepen the struggle. A primary problem is to restudy the "decision to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic field" made by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council and really take this as a sharp ideological weapon, thus raising awareness, unifying thinking and correcting people's attitude.

The "decision" by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council is an extremely important document. It explicitly prescribes and scientifically defines the nature of this struggle and its relevant task, policy and strategy. The task of cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic area put forth by the "decision" is not a general one. Instead, it is a struggle concerning the success or failure of the socialist modernization of our country and the prosperity or decline of our party and state. This is a serious struggle between the proletariat and the masses of people who uphold socialism and those elements who hate and disrupt socialism, and a long-term struggle against corruption by capitalist thinking and against degeneration -- a struggle to maintain the purity of communism. Its nature is that of an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic area under existing conditions. The waging of this struggle is a fundamental guarantee for upholding the socialist raod and realizing the four modernizations. In this important sense, we must realize the spirit of this document and look more closely and further ahead in our approach to this problem.

Only in this way can we remain sober, raise our vigilance and consistently pay close and proper attention to cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic area.

Experience in the struggle in the past few months shows that the "decision" by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council is entirely correct. Cases uncovered in various areas show that the criminal activities in the economic area in our province are really serious. Smuggling and illegal trading, corruption and bribery, speculation and fraud, appropriation of state and collective property and other serious criminal activities are more serious than during the "movement against the three evils." Moreover, many cases also feature collusion between people at home and abroad. Some irresolute cadres have fought a losing battle under the attack of the sugar-coated bullets of capitalism and have even become captive to capitalist ideas. If capitalist ideas are allowed to corrupt our party members and cadres and criminal activities in the economic area are allowed to take their own course and nothing is done to stop and crack down on them, will we be able to carry out socialist modernization? Serious economic criminals have adopted various means on various fronts to carry out sabotage. If we do not resolutely and relentlessly crack down on them, how can our modernization effort advance in the socialist direction? How can our policy of opening the door to the world and enlivening the economy at home be successful? Shocking facts have profoundly shown that this struggle is really a serious manifestation of class struggle in the economic area. If things are not handled well, there is a real possibility of degeneration. How some individual areas, individual units and individual groups have degenerated. If no effective measures are taken to quickly, seriously and severely crack down on serious economic criminals, and to check this evil trend, more areas, more units and more groups may possibly degenerate or decay. This is inconceivable.

In the face of this shocking class struggle, some of our comrades are muddleheaded and have vague ideas on things. They wonder that "since there has been a shift in focus, how can we still talk about class struggle?" They are always hesitant and irresolute and have cold feet. They do not dare to resolutely wage a struggle. Some comrades worry that fighting corruption from capitalist ideas and punishing serious economic criminals may interfere with socialist modernization and the enforcement of the policy of opening the door to the world and enlivening the economy at home. Thus, they are irresolute in their attitude and fail to take effective measures. Some comrades worry about magnifying things and repeating the mistake of "taking class struggle as the key link." They are also afraid of offending others and straining relations. They are afraid that there may be another "reversal of verdicts" that would cause endless trouble. Thus, they have cold feet or let things slide. All these are ideological obstacles interfering with the deepening of the struggle. Though the factors giving rise to these ideas are complex, the most fundamental factor is that these comrades still do not have a correct understanding of the important ideas of the CCP Central Committee on the problem of class struggle in the new era put forth since the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee. They still have not understood the seriousness and harm of criminal activities in the economic area in our province and the great significance, necessity, urgency and long-term nature of this struggle. Instead, they have regarded a serious struggle as a general problem. A way to solve this problem of awareness is to combine actual struggle with serious and repeated efforts in studying the "decision" by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council. In regard to both theory and practice, we must have a clear idea of the nature of this struggle and the relevant task, policy and strategy, correct those erroneous ideas that now exist in society, and make clear those vague ideas among the ranks of cadres. We must mentally prepare to achieve the aim of raising awareness, unifying thinking, adopting a resolute attitude and arousing our spirits. We must on the one hand resolutely insist on opening the door to the world and enlivening the economy at home. On the other hand, we must resolutely crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic field and continuously deepen the struggle.

HENAN PREFECTURE BOOSTS GRASSROOTS ORGANIZATION

[Text] Henan's Zhumadian Prefectural CCP Committee has stepped up the building of grassroots party organization and has educated Communist Party members to play an exemplary vanguard role in rural construction.

After conducting an an[illegible] of the 2,800-odd party branches in the countryside at the beginning of this ye[illegible] Zhumadian Prefectural CCP Committee noted that organizational and ideologi[illegible]lems, or problems in the work style which were incompatible with the current rura[illegible]uation, existed, more or less, among the grassroots party organizations. Since the spring festival, the prefecture has carried out a rectification of the rural party branches. As of early May, 94.7 percent of them have set up new branch committee. At the same time, all the countries have established and improved the rotational training system for party members. By now, all the secretaries of the production brigade party branches have attended study classes by stages and in groups at the c[illegible]ty party schools. Branch committee members and ordinary party members have also att[illegible]ed the study classes at communes or production brigades. The content of the study is mainly the series of rural policies formulated by the party Central Committee since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. In light of the penetrating changes in the rural areas since the introduction of responsibility system, they have further eliminated the leftist ideological influence. The rectification has enabled the broad masses of party members and cadres to consciously play an exemplary vanguard role. They have changed their thinking and work style in the following three major aspects: First, instead of starting the work with mass repudiation as in the past, they are conducting in-depth education on party policy; second, instead of issuing administrative orders, they are doing meticulous ideological and political work; third, instead of pushing the peasants to do their farmwork, they are trying to solve new problems that have appeared since the introduction of the production responsibility system. In this way, the grassroots branches have really become the core for uniting the broad masses of people as well as a fighting force.

[Text] Chengdu, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- According to China's earthquake-detecting stations and network, an earthquake of magnitude 6 occurred in the northwestern district of Ganzi County in Sichuan Province (at 31.41 degrees north latitude and 99.55 degrees east longitude) at 1924 [1124 GMT] on 16 June.

The Ganzi County Seismology Office reported the warning signs twice to the county government on 3 and 5 June. The county completed the antiearthquake work in good time.

After the earthquake, the provincial, prefectural and county seismology departments immediately sent seismologists to the scene to inspect the damage and step up the surveillance and prediction of earthquakes.

SICHUAN RIBAO DISCUSSES REORGANIZING INDUSTRY

HK141446 Chengdu SICHUAN RIBAO in Chinese 25 May 82 p 1

[Report: "Sichuan Province Makes New Progress in Reorganizing Industrial Enterprises and Forming Joint Undertakings -- About Reorganizing Industry on the Basis of Coordination Among Specialized Departments"]

[Text] THE ECONOMIC JOINT UNDERTAKINGS THAT HAVE BEEN FORMED HAVE DEMONSTRATED THEIR ECONOMIC EFFICIENCY IN READJUSTING ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE, REDUCING DUPLICATION IN PRODUCTION, TAPPING POTENTIAL AND MAKING COMPREHENSIVE UTILIZATION OF RESOURCES [published in boldface type]

Sichuan Province has made new progress in reorganizing industry and developing joint economy on the basis of coordination among specialized departments. Of the existing 240 joint economic undertakings throughout the province, 68 are enterprises and factories that have displayed their economic efficiency in readjusting organization structure, reducing duplication in production, tapping potential and making comprehensive use of resources and energy.

The reorganization of these joint undertakings according to coordination among specialized departments and according to economic rationality has removed barriers between regions and departments and displayed an apparent role in changing the backward situation of "big and complete" and "small and complete." On the basis of readjustment and shifting to other kinds of production, the city of Chongqing has over the past 2 years reorganized according to specialization of departments which produce more than 32 types of consumer goods such as watches, sewing machines, leather and leather products, canned products, foodstuffs and woolen fabrics. Consequently many enterprises have been able to increase production, increase profits and drastically reduce production costs. Since it was formed, the Chongqing Sanxia electric fan joint enterprise has made unified arrangements for its scattered 11 factories and carried out division of work according to specialization. As a result, not only has the output of electric fans jumped from 1,600 to more than 10,000 per month, but per unit costs have also dropped from 135 yuan to 75 yuan.

Joint economic undertakings are helpful in overcoming shortcomings and displaying advantages, increasing the output of marketable products and helping a number of enterprises that have difficulties in carrying out production. Following the formation of specialized companies, the papermaking enterprises in Chengdu that once had problems such as unsalable products, shortage of production tasks and increases in the price of raw materials, began to unify their products, carried out technical reform, readjusted the location of production and division of work with regard to products. As a result, they have been able to improve quality, carry out mass production and lower production costs. Over the past year and more, they have stepped up renewing equipment and upgrading products and have also marketed a number of new products such as aluminum foil paper, filter paper and relief printing paper. They have also cooperated with commercial departments for the sale of their products. The output of this company in the first 4 months of this year was 24 percent higher than the same period last year while output value and profits both increased by about 20 percent, the highest among the same trades in the province.

Some factories have established business relations with scientific research units to apply new achievements in research work to production. At present, some metallurgical, mechanical, chemical industrial and light industrial enterprises have signed contracts with scientific research and design units on new products and new technology. In Yibin District, 25 enterprises signed contracts with 17 scientific research units on joint production, technical cooperation and transfer of ownership. These enterprises have been able to solve some key problems in production by making use of the results of research work. In a matter of 2 years, these enterprises increased output value by more than 30 million yuan and profits by 1.8 million yuan. The special transformer factory in Luxian Prefecture signed an agreement with Chengdu Scientific Technical College on research work on new products and as a result, a series of specifications for 5,000-volt up to 250,000-volt transformers and laser power transformers were turned out. Now the products of this factory are marketed throughout the country with good recommendations from users.

Through joint undertakings and reorganization, the industrial departments in Sichuan Province have curtailed capital construction projects and promoted the development of production. The statistics compiled over 32 on joint economic undertakings in Chengdu showed that through merging and shifting to other production, these enterprises have saved more than 22 million yuan in investments, built workshops with a reduction in space of more than 110,000 square meters, increased output value by 120 million yuan in 1 year and increased tax income and profits by more than 28 million yuan. The Chongqing sulphide iron ore plant has been able to increase output rapidly. According to the original plan of an annual output of 50,000 tons, the state had to invest at least 12 million yuan. But the municipal chemical industrial departments removed barriers between departments, developed economic relations and cooperated with small coal mines to make comprehensive use of coal resources. Consequently they met the original plan with only 3 million yuan of investment. The sulphide iron ores they produced are not only used by themselves but are also used in supporting other regions and departments.

The province is now continuing to step up the work of merging and reorganizing industrial and transportation enterprises, the number of enterprises across the province that have taken part in joint economic undertakings is now more than 1,400. Their output value makes up 15 percent of the provincial gross industrial output value, and the profits handed over to higher departments make up 28 percent and the tax makes up 50.4 percent. They have thus held a very important position in the economy of the province. The Sichuan provincial party committee and the provincial people's government considered that the formation of joint economic undertakings is related to the whole industrial system and the location of the division of work in production, and it involves many aspects. Therefore they are considering stepping up leadership, overcoming obstacles, taking various economic measures and carrying out necessary administrative intervention so as to quicken the reorganization of joint undertakings.

The resolution which was passed by the 14th meeting of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee this afternoon, after conducting further discussion of the draft of the revised constituion, points out that, since the publication of the draft of the PRC revised constitution, people of all nationalities throughout the provi[illegible] have fervently discussed it. The resolution provides as follows:

"First newspapers, journals, broadcasts and TV programs must penetratingly publicize the basic spirit and contents of the draft of the revised constitution to the masses and strengthen reporting on the situation of discussion to the people of all nationalities. All places must make full use of all means of propaganda and use many forms to seriously grasp propaganda work well. They must further whip up an upsurge of publicizing, studying and discussing the draft of the revised constitution.

"Second, state organs at the provincial level, the organizations of all political parties and all people's organizations, enterprises, units, universities and colleges must sum up experiences in discussion at the preceding stage and, on the basis of understanding the basic spirit of the draft of the revised constitution, must discuss it article by article and sentence by sentence. They must put forth views for revision.

"Third, in June and July, the organs, schools, enterprises, units, urban streets and roads of all prefectures, autonomous prefectures, municipalities and countries must spend a certain period of time on serious discussion and put forth views on revision. Prefectural, autonomous prefectural, municipal and country leadership organs must use all kinds of methods to train a large number of propagandists and send them deep into the grassroots levels to do well in publicity and explanation.

"Fourth, in rural areas, we must universally publicize and explain the draft of the revised constitution to the masses and, in the light of the actual situation, make it clearly understood by the masses. In the light of the specific situation, all places must arrange a period of time for the masses to study it and put forth views on revision. Minority-nationality and border areas must also train minority-nationality propagandists and publicize and explain the draft to the masses in minority-nationality languages.

"Fifth, the views on revision which people of all nationalities put forth in the course of discussion must be summed up respectively by prefectures, autonomous prefectures, municipalities and all systems at the provincial level and reported and then submitted to the provincial people's congress standing committee before 10 August so that the provincial people's congress standing committee can compile and report them to the committee for revision of the Constitution of the PRC."

HAN YING ADDRESSES SEVENTH BEIJING CYL CONGRESS

[Text] CYL organizations should give full play to their wisdom and strength and serve as a brave shock force worthy of the title. This was put forth by Han Ying, first secretary of CYL Central Committee, at the opening session of the Seventh Beijing Municipal CYL Congress on the afternoon of 9 June.

In his speech, Comrade Han Ying said: Your present congress has put forth the slogan of "serving as a brave shock force in building a modern capital." This slogan conforms with the spirit of the CCP Central Committee, is characteristic of our time and represents the aspiration of the youth. This is an inspiring fighting slogan.

Comrade Han Ying said: In order to serve as a heroic shock force worthy of the title, we must first have a clear aim and profound faith. We are engaged in an unprecedented and magnificent undertaking. It is not easy to attain this magnificent goal. There will be many difficulties and setbacks may also occur. However, as long as we firmly believe that the undertaking for which we are fighting is conducive to the country and nation and beneficial to the people and future generations, and that this undertaking will certainly win the support of the people, will become an undertaking in which the masses conscientiously participate and will inevitably triumph, we then will be able to overcome whatever difficulties we may encounter and tide over any setbacks we may suffer.

Comrade Han Ying said: In order to serve as a brave shock force worthy of the title, we must arm ourselves with Marxist world outlook and with modern science and technology. Shock teams are not cheering squads but are fighting forces in the van with very high fighting capacity. How can we acquire fighting capacity? In the final analysis, we must properly arm ourselves in two aspects. We should increase the youth's consciousness by various means and help them have a correct view on the significance of life and accept revolutionary and scientific world outlook and methodology. We also firmly believe that the young people will seek truth and that Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought will win them over. Recently, youths in some localities have organized themselves on their own accord to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. This is the symptom of a trend which represents the orientation of millions of young people. We should give guidance according to its course of development and let Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought call forth the tremendous strength of this generation of young people. At the same time, we should organize the youths to acquire cultural and scientific knowledge. In order to realize the modernization program, true skills and scientific knowledge are needed. Only if we are truth armed with a Marxist-Leninist world outlook and with modern scientific and technological knowledge can we stand at the forefront of the trend of our time and give full play to our abilities in carrying out the modernization program.

Comrade Han Ying said: In order to serve as a brave shock force worthy of the title, we must dare to practice and dare to explore. What is before pioneers is always a new road and new tasks. This is true of the past, present and future. Without the spirit of daring to change heaven and earth, we will find no way out and will not be able to move a single step. As a shock force, we cannot wait for others to tread a path for us to advance but should blaze a trail ourselves. Young people are in the prime of their lives. They dare to think, to act and to break through and hold the least conservative ideas. We should preserve and develop this valuable dashing spirit of theirs. On the march to build a modern and strong country, we are bound to meet many new problems.

However, if we dare to practice, dare to explore, learn modestly and study hard, we will certainly be able to overcome one difficulty after another, accumulate richer and richer experience, gradually understand and grasp the objective laws in modernization and push our undertaking forward.

Comrade Han Ying said: In order to serve as a brave shock force worthy of the title, we must unite with the young people, work with them as one and advance together. As the core of this contingent, the CYL should take the lead in strengthening unity, observing discipline, helping each other and promoting common progress. We should be good at taking into consideration the characteristics of the youths, showing concern for their direct interests, listening to their demands and helping them to overcome their troubles at home. We should try in every possible way to arouse the enthusiasm of each youth and pay special attention to those who are lagging behind so that all youths may display their talent and make their greatest effort in their work.

Leading comrades of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee were also present at the meeting. Jiao Ruoyu, second secretary of the municipal CCP committee, spoke at the meeting.

HEBEI MEETING ON MAO LITERATURE, ART THOUGHT

[Summary] The Hebei Provincial Literature and Art Federation and the federation of philosophy and social science associations held a discussion meeting on Mao Zedong's literature and art thought from 31 May to 5 June. The participants seriously studied Comrade Mao Zedong's 15 letters to literature and art figures, Comrade Chen Yun's 1943 speech, and Comrade Hu Qiaomu's "On a Number of Current Problems on the Ideological Front." The participants held: "Mao Zedong's literature and art thought is an important component part of Mao Zedong Thought. It is a complete and scientific system. Comrade Mao Zedong's literature and art theories, especially his 'Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art,' expound on a whole series of problems of theory, principle and policy in proletarian literature and art work. They have played a major guiding role in developing China's proletarian literature and art. Mao Zedong's literature and art thought remains the guiding principle our literature and art work must follow, now and in the future."

"Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee, the Central Committee has readjusted the literature and art policies and put forward the slogan that literature and art should serve the people and socialism. This is a major development of Mao Zedong's literature and art thought. The reality of literature and art work is right now proving the correctness of this slogan, and it is bound to play an important role in developing literature and art work in the new era."

The participants pointed out: "Hebei has scored notable success in literature and art theoretical work in recent years. However, we still lag behind fraternal provinces and municipalities and cannot meet the needs of the development of all literature and art work. In order to change this situation, the literature and art theory workers must make big efforts, and the leadership departments must attach importance to this work and take effective steps to strengthen the organizational and ideological building of the literature and art theoretical force."

Xu Chunxing, member of the standing committee of the provincial CCP committee and director of the propaganda department, and Deputy Director Lu Yi spoke at the meeting on 5 June.

HEBEI LEADER SPEAKS ON INDUSTRY, AGRICULTURE

Li Erzhong said: The province has recorded steady growth in industry and communications production this year. Total value of industrial output from January to May was 7.9 percent more than in the same period last year. This included a rise of 10.7 percent in light industry and 5.5 percent in heavy industry. The increase in collective enterprises exceeded that in enterprises owned by the whole people.

Li Erzhong continued: "We are now at a crucial moment. The summer and the rainy season have arrived. In particular, July and August are rather difficult months for production. This period has a bearing on whether the tasks for the whole year can be better fulfilled." It is necessary to pay attention to the difficulties and also stimulate our drive and strive to improve summer production compared with last year. The following tasks must be tackled well:

1. Take precautions against summer heat and promote safety work. Although the province is suffering drought at present, it is essential to take precautions against floods and waterlogging, and ensure normal production during the summer and the rainy season.

"2. Promote the production and allocation of coal, power, and transport. At present the province is suffering drought, and it is also the season for summer reapong and sowing. It is necessary to do everything possible to give priority to agriculture for electric power so as to support the fight against drought and summer reaping and sowing. It is also necessary to ensure normal industrial production. The electric power departments must do everything possible to generate and supply more power. Apart from that, there are two main ways of solving the problem, since responsibility systems in use of power have been applied. First, it is necessary to make rational arrangements and improve allocation. The province should limit power supplies for enterprises with high power consumption, great waste and poor economic returns. This should be done in accordance with making a comprehensive analysis of economic returns and ensuring supplies for the key enterprises. Second, it is necessary to economize in power consumption."

3. Further enhance all economic and technical indexes, centered on improving economic returns.

4. Strengthen leadership over industrial production. Leaders must get to the frontline to help the enterprises overcome difficulties and maintain normal production through the summer.

Comrade Li Erzhong made three demands on current agricultural production: 1) do a good job in summer farmwork; 2) simultaneously fight drought and take precautions against floods; 3) prepare for wheat sowing in autumn.

NEI MONGGOL URGES FIGHT AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Excerpt] According to our correspondent (Yan Ping), the Nei Monggol Autonomous Regional CCP Committee recently approved and transmitted the minutes of the meeting sponsored by the discipline inspection commission under the regional CCP committee on strengthening leadership over the struggle against economic crimes and thoroughly carrying forward the struggle. In approving the meeting minutes, the regional CCP committee urged the party organizations at all levels throughout the region to earnestly implement the minutes in line with their actual situation.

Not long ago, the standing committee of the regional discipline inspection commission and departments concerned sponsored a joint meeting to emphatically discuss ways to strengthen leadership over the struggle against economic crimes and thoroughly carry forward the struggle. A summary was made of the meeting minutes.

The summary of the minutes contends that the struggle against economic crimes has been fully under way since our region began to implement the emergency circular issued by the central authorities and that the struggle is developing well. As of 20 May, the region exposed over 1,400 economic crimes and dealt with over 130 cases. Before 20 May, there were over 140 criminals throughout the region who had surrendered themselves to authorities. The region confiscated illegal cash and articles worth over 1,783,000 yuan. However, some leading cadres have not attached great importance to the struggle due to insufficient time and efforts in launching the struggle in an all-round way and arousing the people ideologically.

The summary of the minutes notes: To deal blows at economic crimes is an important and long-term task imposed on civilians and armymen throughout the region in the days to come. Party organizations at all levels should strengthen their leadership over the struggles. Each level of authority should effectively exercise its power in conducting supervision and investigations in a timely manner and in solving problems in a down-to-earth way. In thoroughly launching the struggle, problems arising in leading bodies at league, municipality, department and bureau levels should be dealt with by the regional CCP committee. Stress in current work should be laid on doing a good job in waging the struggle among the regional-level organs.

The summary of the minutes stresses: The key to successfully launching the current struggle against economic crimes and achieving immediate results lies in doing a good job in investigating and dealing with major and serious cases. To grasp the work well, stress and make a breakthrough as soon as possible among serious cases, the region has transferred 15 cadres at department and bureau level from the regional level organs and 15 cadres at section level from the regional discipline inspection commission to organize an investigation group which is dispatched to leagues, municipalities and agricultural production areas in an effort to investigate and deal with serious cases at an early date.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN AT SOYBEAN EXHIBIT

[Excerpts] According to our sources, the Heilongjiang provincial scientific and technical committee recently sponsored a seminar in Harbin municipality on comprehensive utilization of soybeans. During the seminar, an exhibit was held displaying over 60 varieties of new products and foodstuffs made from soybeans. Visiting the exhibit were leading comrades from the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress and the provincial people's government, including Yang Yichen, Chen Lei, Zhao Dezun, Wang Yilun, Chen Jianfei, Wang Zhao, Wang Jun and (Wang Guangwei). Deputy Governors Li Rui and Xie Yunqing attended and addressed the seminar. At the seminar, participants proposed that on the basis of conducting investigations and studies, efforts should be made to draw up special plans as soon as possible for making use of soybeans in production in a comprehensive way, earnestly devise ways to solve problems concerning technology and economic policy and accelerate progress in tackling key problems in science and technology and steadily popularizing achievements scored in conducting scientific and technical research. It is also necessary to strengthen the building of scientific and technical research units in this regard, do a good job in training technicians and upgrading their technical standard and vigorously conduct propaganda and popularization work for foodstuffs made from soybeans to advance comprehensive utilization of soybeans throughout the province.

HEILONGJIANG RADIO ON ECONOMIC CRIME STRUGGLE

[Station commentary: "It Is Necessary To Make Persistent Efforts To Lead the Struggle Against Economic Crimes In a Thorough Way"]

[Text] The serious corruption and graft case exposed by Yichun municipality, Heilongjiang Province, with (Zhang Jiwei) as the prime offender, has been investigated. It is proved that (Zhang Mingxian), deputy secretary of the Yichun Municipal CCP Committee and deputy mayor of the city, and (Zhang Chengguo), member of the Yichun Municipal CCP Standing Committee and deputy mayor of the city, are involved. The provincial CCP committee took the circumstances into consideration and adopted measures in pushing the city to conduct a thorough investigation.

Judging from the serious case of the Yichun municipal party committee member, the key to successfully leading the struggle against economic crimes in a thorough way lies in strictly punishing all state officials, particularly leading cadres, who have committed crimes. As a matter of fact, many serious economic criminal cases often involve state officials and a few cadres in power. Localities and units throughout the province should examine and sum up their work in the struggle of the former period. With definite objectives in mind, they should solve some problems. For instance, although localities have exposed some serious cases, their progress in dealing with these cases is slow. Some encounter obstacles and difficulties in dealing with them. As a result, personnel in charge of these cases often take a passive attitude. This has greatly hindered the development of the struggle. Some localities have not made a breakthrough in the struggle. Another reason for these problems is that cadres and the masses are not fully confident in waging the struggle. Localities and units must review their work in the struggle of the former period, see what they have and have not done and devise ways to grasp the struggle thoroughly and successfully.

Many localities in our province have enacted responsibility systems to deal with economic cases. This is an important measure to accelerate the development of the struggle. However, it is necessary to define the duties among cadres who have taken responsibility for handling cases, such as who is responsible for conducting investigations to seek evidence and who is responsible for tracing illegal earnings and articles or making final decisions on cases. In this way, leading cadres responsible for dealing with cases have clear duties so that we can ensure smooth progress in launching the struggle in a thorough and down-to-earth manner.

HEILONGJIANG FINANCIAL CONSOLIDATION MEETING ENDS

[Excerpts] According to our reporter, the provincial experience-exchange meeting on financial consolidation for rural communes and brigades concluded on 11 June. The meeting urged various rural areas to continually, penetratingly and thoroughly conduct financial consolidation in brigades and production teams, improve management and raise economic results so as to increase agricultural income and reduce expenditures.

Since May 1981, 80 percent of production teams in our province's rural areas have conducted financial consolidation. Of them, 64 percent have conducted financial consolidation once and instituted and perfected the financial management systems. Most production teams have instituted the system of assigning fixed quotas for expenses and the subsistance system in monetary affairs. Some 60 municipalities and counties have drawn up a unified chief source for expense quotas and thus enabled the collective financial affairs to embark on a road of planned development. At the same time, a crackdown has been made on criminal activities such as graft and embezzlement, appropriating collective property and damaging the collective economy. Unhealthy tendencies of wining and dining extravagantly and giving dinners and sending gifts to curry favor have been stopped. The inventory of collective funds has been clarified.

However, some localities paid no attention to financial consolidation and failed to list it as an item on their daily agenda. Some localities managed and utilized collective funds in an improper manner and, as a result, a great amount of accumulation funds were overspent and arrears and funds on account increased continually. In addition, the poorly organized financial and accounting contingent and the poor management methods adversely affected the economic accounting and financial management.

The meeting demanded: Financial consolidation in various production teams should be basically completed by this year. Every production team should curb 1,000 yuan of expenditures under the prerequisite of increased income. By doing so, some 60 million yuan of expenses will be conserved throughout the province.

SHAANXI RIBAO ON IMPROVED IDEOLOGICAL WORK

[Commentator's article: "Heighten Understanding, Further Step Up Ideological and Political Work in Industry and Communications"]

[Text] At the national conference on industry and communications, Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: "In the new situation, ideological and political work should not be weakened. On the contrary, it should be strengthened." This has put forward an important task to the leading comrades at various levels in the industrial and communications enterprises: During the new period of the four modernizations movement, we must attach importance to ideological and political work and, in accordance with the practice of revolution and construction since the founding of the PRC, earnestly and systematically sum up experience in ideological and political work, study the tasks, characteristics and methods of ideological and political work in the new situation, and step up this work thoroughly.

Our party has aways attached importance to ideological and political work. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the industrial and communications enterprises of our province have adhered to the four basic principles and strengthened ideological and political work. We have made great achievements in implementing the party's various policies, emancipating our minds, bringing order out of chaos, clearing away the influence of "leftism," overcoming laziness and weakness, advocating the building of spiritual civilization, and dealing heavy blows at serious crimes in the economic field. By so doing, we have brought into full play the effect of powerful mobilization in ideology and politics, thus guaranteeing the smooth progress of economic readjustment and the fulfillment of the state's plan.

However, ideological and political work in the industrial and communications enterprises of our province is at present worse than it was before the "Cultural Revolution". Many good traditions of the party have been forgotten and abandoned. It is a common phenomenon that little importance is attached to ideological and political work. Also it is a common phenomenon to be unskilled in ideological and political work.

Political work is the lifeline of all economic work. All the work is done by people. Usually one thinks about this or that when one is working. Ideological and political work has to be done if we want to accomplish anything. With ideological and political work done well and the ideological problems solved well, we are well on our way to success. Today, not only do we want to build up material civilization of a high standard, we also want to build up spiritual civilization of a high standard. Spiritual civilization stimulates the construction of material civilization, while material civilization guarantees the construction of spiritual civilization. Therefore, ideological and political work should not be neglected when doing any work in any departments and units. On the contrary it should be placed in a leading position.

During the new period of socialist construction for modernization, we must stick to the viewpoint of unity of politics and economics, stick to the method of doing ideological and political work together with economic work, and carry out ideological and political work in every link of economic activity so as to guarantee that economic work will march forward toward the correct orientation of construction for the four modernizations in accordance with objective economic laws. In this field, there will be a very difficult task in ideological and political work in the industrial enterprieses: While curing the spiritual wounds caused by the 10-year chaos and clearing the influence of "leftism," it is all the more necessary for us to pay close attention to the current resurgence and spread of rightist deviation. For instance, our open-door policy has brought about many useful things as well as germs. Therefore we have to use the method of dividing one into two, which means we can only absorb the good things of others and must refuse to accept the decadent and backward things. After all, our party's ideological and political work aims at solving the problems of the people's ideological viewpoint and political stand, so as to mobilize the cadres, staff and workers to fight for the present and long-term revolutionary objective.

Faced with such difficult tasks, the party organizations at various levels on the industrial and communications front must further strengthen their leadership over ideological and political work and clear up various kinds of erroneous understanding regarding ideological and political work. In recent years, due to the misunderstanding of the party's policy of emancipating the mind, the opening up to foreign countries while enlivening the domestic economy, some comrades have, relying solely on economic methods, exaggerated the effect of bonuses to an inappropriate degree. They even preach the bourgeois fallacy of "money can do everything". As a result, there has appeared an erroneous tendency of weakening and negating ideological and political work. Untraleftist slogans and dogmas, which are formalist and divorced from economic work, are absolutely not the propaganda of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong thought on the ideological and political work. It is precisely because we have brought order out of chaos in this respect that we have today restored and reestablished the glorious tradition of party ideological and political work. We absolutely cannot neglect and weaken ideological and political work. We absolutely cannot neglect and weaken ideological and political work. We absolutely cannot neglect and weaken ideological and political work itself just because we have criticized some ultraleftist and formalist things. Nor can we harbor the thought that political and ideological work is useless and rely on economic measures of money or material reward to mobilize the labor enthusiasm of the workers. If we cannot distinguish between ideological and political work which centers on basic theoretical education in communist thought and Marxism to enlighten the revolutionary awareness of the workers, on the one hand and the ultraleftist junk of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counter revolutionary cliques on the other, it is possible that we might go from one extreme to another, and negate and do away with ideological and political work.

At present, the first group of enterprises to be straightened out in an all-round way on the industrial and communications front of our province are earnestly carrying out their work, in which the strengthening of ideological and political work constitutes an important part. Meanwhile, the four basic principles must be strictly adhered to whether in the reorganization of leading bodies or in the readjustment of funadmental economic work and labor discipline. The principle of simultaneously caring for the state, the enterprises and the individual must be adhered to. Education in communist spirit and socialist system must be carried out in every field. While laying stress on the strengtheing of ideological and political work, it is only natural that we will pay attention to the economic measure of material reward. Material reward and the reward for overfulfillment of quota and best quality are the concrete reflection of the socialist system of distribution according to work. Though belonging to the economic field, this also includes the ideological factor of socialism. Only by attaching great importance to and strengthening the leadership over ideological and political work and upholding the principle of doing ideological and political work together with economic work, can we bring into full play the powerful effect of ideological and political work in the course of straightening out the enterprises. By so doing, we can greatly upgrade our standard of management through straightening out the enterprises and achieve better economic results so as to make a new breakthrough in industrial production.

LIEN HO PAO NEGOTIATIONS WITH COMMUNISTS

[Editorial: "Necessary Understanding and Conditions for Solving the China Issue Through Negotiations"]

In Western political science, holding "negotiations" has always been regarded as one of the effective methods in settling disputes between two sides. Many Western scholars in the field of political science hold, as a matter of course, that when two groups have a dispute they should sit down and conduct negotiations to solve common problems. They should do so if both of them are unwilling to resort to the use of force. Thus, Western political science has already evolved many principles and skills, teaching the two antagonists how to clarify their respective stands, avoid making threats, understand the views of the other and seek common interests in the course of conducting negotiations so as to reach a bilateral agreement. Under this kind of cultural background, the politicians in Western countries often fail to understand why we have persistently refused to conduct negotiations with the Chinese Communists.

They do not realize that "negotiations" under the Western concept are totally different in meaning from the so-called "negotiations" of the communists. The negotiations held by the Westerners are aimed at solving problems, while the communists have never denied that "peaceful negotiations are only means, while struggle and war are basics for solving problems." The Westerners stress "negotiations with strength." They believe that both sides participating in the negotiations must maintain their own strength and show sincerity in solving their common problems. Only then will it be possible to conduct sincere negotiations. However, on the one hand the Chinese Communists have tried their best to weaken our side; on the other hand, they seek to force our side to accept terms for negotiations equivalent to capitulation and suicide. We would like to ask a question: The Chinese Communists warn the United States against the sale of military equipment to the Republic of China under the threat of downgrading diplomatic relations. What threat and ill will is couched in this warning? The Chinese Communists demand that all nations that have diplomatic relations with them refrain from setting up representative agencies in Taiwan. Is this not an effort to weaken us? The Chinese Communists have time and again announced: The precondition for the "peaceful unification" of China is to downgrade the Republic of China to "provincial government" under the control of the Chinese Communists. At the same time, they have never ruled out the possibility of invading Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu with force. Under this kind of threat and intimidation, how can we see the slightest trace of sincerity from the Chinese communists in solving "common issues" through negotiations?

We completely agree with Premier Sun's view that the issue facing the Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait today is one of "under what system will China assure the affluence, freedom and happiness of the Chinese people." We sincerely hope all the Chinese people will ponder this serious question. At the same time, we also hope the Chinese Communist leaders will continue to learn from Taiwan's experience in development, practice the three principles of the people with actual deeds and actively seek to improve the people's livelihood.

"If the political, economic, social and cultural gaps between the Chinese mainland and free China continue to narrow, the conditions for peaceful reunification can gradually mature." Only then will we believe that the Chinese Communists have the sincerity to solve the China issue. If the Chinese Communists refuse to meet these conditions, and if they stick to their ideology, exert no efforts to fundamentally solve the China issue, try 1,001 ways to weaken us, force us to accept terms for negotiations equivalent to capitulation and intend to "unify" the prosperous and affluent Taiwan with their poor and backward mainland, all the Chinese people living in Taiwan will vow to put up resistance through to the end. Also, all the Chinese people who uphold freedom and democracy will also rise to oppose the Chinese Communists.

"Reunification" should be the final procedure in solving the China issue. We hope the United States and other free nations will understand the different meaning of "negotiations" between the Western world and the communist nations, help us enhance our strength and let the Chinese people on the two sides of the Taiwan Strait achieve their goal of reunification when the conditions for this reunification have matured. We also hope that they will not be fooled by the Chinese Communists, who are vigorously carrying out their united front work for "peace," and that they will not help the Chinese Communists do evil and weaken us.

RADIO NOTES SUSPICION OF U.S. ASSURANCES

OW180633 Taipei International Service in English 0[illegible]0 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Station Commentary]

[Text] Walter Stoessel, the No 2 man in the U.S. State Department, testified on China relations before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the other day. He denied that the Reagan administration had any intention of scrapping the Taiwan Relations Act which provides for U.S. sales of defensive weapons to the Republic of China. At the same time, he admitted that the United States was continuing to talk about the arms sales to the Chinese Communists and expressed the hope for a solution to the problem.

How could this be? The Chinese Communists have maintained that the United States has no right to sell arms to the ROC. They claim this is a violation of the Shanghai communique, the recognition agreement with the United States under international law. They also threaten to downgrade relations with the United States if the sales are continued. While what the Chinese Communists really want is Taiwan, they consider disarmament of the ROC military forces a crucial step in that direction.

The Taiwan Relations Act is the law of the United States. It is superior to the executive actions of Presidents Richard Nixon and Jimmy Carter. International law has nothing to do with these factors. Regardless of the unofficiality of its relations with the United States, the ROC is a sovereign country. The China problem has not been solved. In the eyes of the ROC, the Chinese Communists are only rebels. What kind of scenario is the deputy secretary of state trying to present? He reassured the ROC and its many friends in the Senate. At the same time, he indicated the Chinese Communists cannot be placated. Could it be that what the State Department has in mind is that the reinterpretation of the Taiwan Relations Act is a way to satisfy the Chinese Communists while leaving the law on the books? This would compel the Reagan administration to reduce arms sales to the ROC to virtually nothing. In a way, that has nearly happened already. For the last year, approvals given by the Reagan administration are under $100 million compared with the $700 to $800 million of recent years.

The last couple of orders were only for parts. Not one major request of the ROC has been approved. No improved fighter aircraft, no missiles, no other modern weapons. The clear implication of the Taiwan Relations Act is for the sales of sufficient weapons to defend the people of Taiwan. At the moment that is not the case, so the ROC can scarcely fail to be suspicious of the supposed assurances.

Senator Barry Goldwater, who visited the ROC, has pointed out that the U.S. Congress has the responsibility of reviewing the administration of the Taiwan Relations Act and of seeing to it that the Executive Branch is carrying out the intentions of the House and the Senate. In view of Mr Stoessel's remarks, the Congress ought to undertake such a review at the earliest opportunity. If the ROC is sometimes suspicious of U.S. administrative motives, it might be forgiven in light of developments during the last decade.

President Nixon said he would never do anything to hurt an old friend and ally, but the ROC lost its seat in the United Nations and the President of the United States signed the Shanghai communique. Jimmy Carter repeated Mr Nixon's reassurances and then recognized the Chinese Communists, derecognized the ROC and scrapped the mutual defense treaty. These administrative actions of the United States were grievously damaging to the ROC and its free cause. Weaker countries might not have survived such a buffeting. Now the United States is saying it approves of the Chinese reunification settlement of Premier Sun Yun-husan. That is welcome. But the required evolutionary changes in the Chinese Communist system require a strong ROC to serve as the reunification model. If the United States truly believes in the China problem being settled by the Chinese people, it should not lean to one side. It should help to assure the defense of the ROC against aggression and it should not do anything to prejudice the base of Chinese freedom and democracy.

DEFENSE MINISTRY DENIES PLANS TO BUY HELICOPTERS

[Text] The Ministry of National Defense said on 7 June that it is absolutely untrue, as reported by newspapers, that helicopters manufactured by three European and American companies were given performance demonstrations recently at a military base in southern Taiwan.

It has been learned that the UH 1 H type helicopters produced by our own air force are performing well and the government is not considering purchasing helicopters from European and American manufacturers. Military circles pointed out that although our country purchases weapons from diverse sources, it is not that simple to purchase precision weapons like aircraft from Europe or the United States.

SCIENTIFIC OFFICES PLANNED IN PARIS, JAPAN

OW170550 Taipei CHUNG KUO SHIH PAO in Chinese 10 Jun 82 p 2

[Text] It is reported that the French Government has agreed in principle to let our country set up a scientific and technical office in Paris and that our government departments concerned are now actively making preparations to turn this office into a stronghold for promoting scientific and technical cooperation with West European countries in the future.

To develop international scientific and technical cooperation and to elevate scientific and technical level at home quickly, our government departments concerned have made indefatigable efforts in recent years in establishing close contacts with various countries and in identifying various possible forms of cooperation. At present, Japan has agreed to let our country set up a scientific section under the East Asia relations association in Tokyo starting in July of this year. Our country will station three scientific and technical representatives there to promote Sino-Japanese scientific and technical exchanges.

In the meantime, after planning and consultations in many ways, the French Government has agreed in principle to let our country set up a scientific and technical office in Paris. This is important to establishing scientific and technical and economic relations between our country and other West European countries.

Some departments concerned indicated that our country has maintained good relations with other countries in scientific and technical cooperation and that, besides signing agreements for scientific and technical cooperation with the United States, Korea and South Africa, our country has also signed bilateral agreements for scientific and technical cooperation recently with France, West Germany, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Japan and El Salvador.

Contacts are currently being made with Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands, Denmark and Austria in the main in West Europe. In Asia, discussions are being conducted with Indonesia on establishing relations for scientific and technical cooperation.

In addition, government departments concerned are expected to expand cooperation in clinical medicine previously signed with the United States and South Africa. Departments concerned also said that with more countries paying increasing attention to scientific and technical development in our country and showing more interest in cooperation, our government will take advantage of this opportunity to actively expand the scope of international cooperation.

U.S. REJECTION OF SOVIET ARMS PLEDGE REPORTED

[XINHUA report: "U.S. NATO Officials Reject Soviet Statement on "Not Being First To Use Nuclear Weapons"]

[Text] Washington, 16 June (XINHUA) -- Spokesman for the U.S. administration and the responsible persons of NATO have in the past 2 days successively issued statements rejecting Soviet leader Brezhnev's statement on the Soviet "pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons."

In a statement issued on the evening on 15 June, White House spokesman Larry Speaks said: "Considering the overwhelming superiority of the conventional forces deployed by the Warsaw Pact in Europe," the pledge made by Brezhnev "is meaningless."

In a 16 June statement, State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said: "The Soviet pledge is not an effective way of reducing the danger of nuclear war." He said: "A simple pledge gives no guarantee that an aggressor would not in fact resort to the first use of nuclear weapons during a conflict or crisis. A pledge of this sort is unverifiable and unenforceable."

Fischer reaffirmed President Reagan's position on NATO contained in a speech on 18 November last year. The position was that no NATO weapons, conventional or nuclear, will ever be used, except in response to attack.

In a 16 June statement issued in Annapolis, Maryland, Joseph Kuns, secretary general of NATO, said: "The reliability of our deterrent" is built on the basis of the possible NATO use of nuclear weapons. A pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons would mean "consigning the great part of our deterrent to oblivion."

In a statement issued in the same place the same day, NATO Supreme Allied Commander in Europe Bernard Rogers said: If he found it impossible to use conventional weapons to repulse an attack by the Warsaw Pact forces, thus "failing to accomplish his mission," he would suggest the use of tactical nuclear weapons.

UNIDO RELEASE CITES PRC INVESTMENT PROJECTS

[Text] United Nations, June 21 (XINHUA) -- China's open-door policy on foreign investment was firmly asserted with the signing of 59 letters of intent by overseas businessmen and their Chinese counterparts for projects valued at 500 million U.S. dollars, said a press release of the U.N. Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), which was issued at the U.N. head-quarters today.

The investment meeting, organized by the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade and the UNIDO, was concluded on June 11 at China's southern city of Guangzhou. It was attended by 400 potential investors from 24 countries and territories, mostly coming from Western Europe, North America, Hong Kong and Japan.

Ranging from textiles to engineering products, the press said, they were among a final list of 121 industrial project proposals -- worth 1,500 million U.S. dollars -- offered during the week-long first China investment promotion meeting in Guangzhou.

The press release stated most of the letters of intent were agreed on the basis of compensation trade, with the equitable participation of foreign and Chinese partners. The emphasis was on direct investment involving loans, transfer of technology, training and management. The majority of those involved medium-sized industries.

In addition, the press release pointed out, the meeting fostered a new measure of understanding between the nearly 260 foreign companies represented and the 700 Chinese participants.

The U.N. press release noted that Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Wei Yuming declared at the opening ceremony that direct investment would be China's chief means of utilizing foreign capital in the coming years. He assured potential investors that their legitimate rights and interests would be guaranteed.

RENMIN RIBAO OBSERVES PEACE MOVEMENT IN WEST

[News roundup by Ma Weimin [7456 3634 3046] "New Upsurge of the Peace Movement in the West"]

[Text] Recently a new upsurge of the peace movement has again appeared in the West. It is forming into a mighty torrent against the nuclear arms race of the two superpowers.

On 12 June some 600,000 people in New York held a parade and rally and expressed their strong desire for peace and disarmament to the special session on disarmament which was being held by the United Nations. On the same day peace demonstrations of varying sizes were also held in Boston and other cities in the United States.

Prior to this, when President Reagan of the United States was visiting Western Europe and attending the NATO summit, a total of more than 1 million people held a series of demonstrations and marches in Paris, Rome, London and Bonn calling for a halt to the arms race and the withdrawal of nuclear weapons from Europe. About 350,000 people took part in the demonstration in Bonn. On 20 June more than 200,000 people took part in a "march for peace" in Paris. In the latter part of May, the people of Japan, who had experiences the calamity of the atom bomb, also held an antinuclear demonstration in Tokyo in which several hundred thousand people took part.

These gigantic peace demonstrations in the West have caused a sensation in Western political circles and aroused the public opinion and notice of all countries.

The spearhead of the peace movement in Europe and America is directed against the Soviet Union and the United States, these two superpowers. The people are opposing the large-scale nuclear arms race carried out by them and calling for putting an end to nuclear war. In West European countries such as West Germany, the demonstrators are putting the emphasis on opposing the new type of missiles deployed by the United States in Western Europe. Consequently, the anti-U.S. flavor appears to be more prominent.

The peace movement in Europe and the United States has very extensive mass support. The demonstrators come from almost all social strata, from unemployed workers to noted public figures, from housewives to congressmen and politicians, and from soldiers in active service to religious personages and ecologists.

Because of the broad spectrum of people taking part and because most of the participants are young people, the political and ideological trends they represent are rather complex and their political slogans are also different. Most of them advocate opposing Soviet and U.S. hegemonism. Some of the people are particularly anti-American and some are particularly anti-Soviet. There is also a handful of people who advocate that Europe should remain "neutral" between the Soviet Union and the United States. Some have called for joint disarmament by the East and the West and there are also people who make the impractical advocation of unilateral disarmament. There is also a handful of pacifists who propagate such slogans as forsaking one's principles and suing for peace. Obviously, it is very difficult to use a certain "doctrine" to generalize the nature of this movement. No wonder some of the people in the West have called it "the sum and total of all doctrines." However, the common cry of most of those who participate in the peace movement is opposition to nuclear arms expansion and nuclear war.

At present, the peace movement is developing into a political force which should not be underestimated.

It has affected not only the domestic political situation of some countries, but also the development of some political events. One of the reasons the United States and the Soviet Union have eventually agreed to reopen strategic nuclear arms limitation talks is obviously because they are under the pressure of the peace movement.

The peace movement in the West sprouted in West Europe in the winter of 1980. It reached high tide in the fall of last year. According to statistics, last year 5 million people took part in the peace movement in the West. Round about the Easter of last April, the peace movement continued to surge forward and has spread to the United States and Japan. The present antinuclear demonstrations prevailing in the West mark a new upsurge of the peace movement.

The fact that the Soviet Union and the United States are increasingly intensifying their nuclear arms race forms the political background for the prevalence of the peace movement, whereas economic recession which has existed in the West for many years is the social and political reason for its developments. Let us take West Europe -- the birthplace of the peace movement -- as an example. In this small "European peninsula," the two biggest military blocs furiously confront each other and nuclear weapons have been intensively deployed. In recent years, the Soviet Union has intensified its efforts to deploy SS-20 guided missiles to destroy the military balance in Europe. This has touched off another new arms race. The U.S. views on preparing to fight a "limited nuclear war" in Europe have made the Europeans turn pale at the mere mention of it. They fear that Europe might become a nuclear experimental field of the two superpowers which are contending for hegemony. Apart from that, the broad masses of people, who are living under ecomonic recession, are suffering from unemployment and skyrocketing commodity prices. They are no longer willing to make sacrifices for the deployment of U.S. missiles and the additional military expenditure. Therefore, they are going out onto the streets one after another to shout slogans such as "Brezhnev, Reagan, give us peace," "We want work, not guided missiles," and so forth.

The United States once did its utmost to play down the significance of this peace movement and even exaggerated it as a "plot" hatched by the Soviet Union whereas the Soviet Union pretended to "sympathize with" and "support" the movement so as to extricate itself from its predicament. At the same time, the Soviet Union has tried to affect the movement by every possible means so that it will develop in a direction that is to its advantage.

However, the development of the peace movement is independent of the will of any superpower. At present, even the United States cannot but take into consideration the feelings of the masses reflected in this peace movement which is great in strength and impetus. The wishful thinking of Moscow is bound to come to nothing. That is because all people know that it is precisely the two superpowers -- the Soviet Union and the United States -- which are frenziedly engaged in a nuclear arms race that are threatening world peace.

WEINBERGER CITED ON GROWING USSR NUCLEAR FORCE

[Text] Washington, June 20 (XINHUA) -- Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said today the U.S. is "not going to sit by quietly and do nothing" while the Soviet Union develops the capability to fight "a protracted nuclear war".

Commenting on an "unprecedented" series of Soviet nuclear weapons tests as disclosed by Secretary of State Alexander Haig yesterday, Weinberger said in a TV interview: "No matter what they (the Soviets) say, they still have this growing and immense arsenal of strength, and it underlines all of our points that there is no way we can maintain a credible deterrent without modernizing our forces".

Haig said Saturday in New York after a meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko the Russian tests included anti-satellite weapons, landbased and submarine-launched ballistic missiles, and anti-ballistic missiles. This shows, Weinberger said, the Soviets "believe a nuclear war can be fought and can be won."

When asked about reports that the U.S. is preparing to fight a protracted nuclear war, Weinberger said that it is not the U.S. but the Soviet Union that is planning to fight such a war. What the U.S. is trying to do, he said, is to make sure that the U.S. has the capability "to deal with a protracted nuclear war fought by the Soviet Union against us."

"It is vital that we keep up the effort. When you give up, you are moving appreciably closer to war," he said.

CHEN MUHUA MEETS WITH U.S. BUSINESSMEN 21 JUN

[Text] Beijing, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, met today with a delegation from the U.S.-based Dresser Industries Inc. led by its executive vice-president, John Joseph Murphy.

Chen Muhua said China takes a serious and prudent attitude towards absorbing foreign capital. "We'll choose investors who can cooperate with us on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, make good use of the capital and make certain of our ability to pay back. We have had this policy for three years. During this period, we have constantly examined our experience. We'll continue to absorb foreign capital," she said.

On his impression of his fifth visit to China, Murphy said he found great changes taking place. The most significant one was that China had adopted a new policy of developing economic relations with other countries. "It is very far-sighted," he said.

Qin Wencai, general manager of the China National Offshore Oil Corporation, was present. The delegation arrived June 15 at the invitation of the corporation.

U.S. AGRONOMISTS ATTEND AGRICULTURAL FORUM

[Text] Beijing, June 20 (XINHUA) -- A forum to explore ways to streamline China's agricultural education opened here today with both Chinese and American agronomists present. Twenty Chinese professors from leading agricultural institutes and nine American scholars of Chinese origin are attending the three-week forum.

He Kang, vice minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishery, addressed the opening session. He said: "The coming decade will witness a vigorous development of China's agriculture, and agricultural education should be made to herald the development".

"We must sum up our own experiences and draw on the experiences of other countries to form a new system of agricultural education that adapts to China's realities," said the vice minister.

Addressing the forum, Huang Xinbai, vice minister of education, stressed the necessity of reforming China's educational system to realize China's modernization program. He said he hoped that the current forum would make valuable proposals and suggestions in this regard.

Dr. T.C. Tsao, chief of tobacco laboratory of the Beltsville Agriculture Research Center of the United States, spoke on behalf of all the American participants, pledging to work out constructive proposals for streamlining China's agricultural education and contribute to the success of the forum.

Xiang Chongyang, director of the Bureau of Education of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, introduced China's agricultural education. He said that at present China has 56 agricultural colleges and institutes with 77,000 students and 980 graduate students in school. China has more than 300 secondary technical schools that specialize in agriculture, animal husbandry or fishery with 68,000 students. In the past 32 years since the founding of new China, more than 250,000 college graduates and 520,000 secondary school graduates have been trained. Their graduates are now the backbone of China's agricultural scientific research and popularizing advanced farming techniques in the countryside, he said.

He said that the Chinese Government is taking measures to encourage youths from the countryside to study the agricultural sciences in colleges, while instructing institutes of higher learning to enroll more students from the rural, mountainous, pastoral and forest areas.

RENMIN RIBAO QUESTIONS U.S. GRAIN SALES TO USSR

["International Jottings" by Zhang Hua [4545 5478]: "New Meaning of 'Using Grain for Peaceful Purposes'"]

[Text] In order to quibble over the Reagan administration's removal of the grain embargo against the USSR, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block has racked his brains to make a series of absurd arguments. Not long after he boasted with all his might more than 2 months ago that U.S. grain sales to the USSR were used as "punishment to the USSR," which already sounded farfetched, he recently advocated that U.S. grain sales to the USSR are aimed at "promoting the cause of peace." This is even more incomprehensible.

However, Mr Block has found an excuse. In dead earnest he declared that "when the USSR spends its money on grain rather than on weapons, does this not mean we are promoting the cause of peace?" This is actually a sophistry. As everyone knows, the USSR needs to import large quantities of grain from other countries only because it has been doing its utmost to carry out the policy of "cannon before butter" in arms expansion and war preparations, and has thus seriously damaged its agriculture. Moreover, as was pointed out by Western media long ago, one of the purposes of the USSR's import of large quantities of grain is to create reserves for war. Is it not clear then what the United States is serving by supplying what the USSR badly needs?

Does the logic of Mr Block not mean at the same time that the USSR is also serving the "cause of peace" by buying grain? Thus, when one is willing to sell and the other is willing to buy, are the two superpowers not cooperating with each other in promoting world peace? And how earnest they look!

The United States has advocated the policy of "using grain for peaceful purposes." Perhaps, it is not wrong to regard this decision of the Washington authorities to lift the grain embargo on and to sell large quantities of grain to the USSR as the latest development of this policy!

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS U.S. CRITICISM OF SOVIETS

[Report: "The United States Denounces Soviet Union's Two Attitudes Toward Peace Movement"]

[Text] On 17 June U.S. President Reagan denounced the attempt of the Soviet Union "to control the peace movement of the West" while "suppressing a growing peace movement" at home.

When a reporter asked Reagan to elaborate on his views, White House Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes said "it looks as if" the Russians are attempting to "instigate and lead certain peaceful demonstrations in Europe, particularly in Berlin." However, Speakes said, there was no sign of communist instigation at a gathering of this kind held in New York on 12 June.

In his letter to Soviet Chairman Brezhnev, Rep. Edward J. Markey criticized the Soviet Union for "praising the antinuclear demonstration held by the American citizens in New York last week on the one hand, while sealing a house in Moscow and opposing an antinuclear gathering held by the Soviet citizens on the other; this is absolutely hyprocritical."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON GENG BIAO VISIT TO DPRK

Variant Rally Report

[Text] Pyongyang, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Pyongyang Municipal Committee of the Korean Workers' Party [KWP] and the Pyongyang Garrison of the Korean People's Army [KPA] jointly held a ceremonious mass rally at the Pyongyang Municipal Stadium on the afternoon of 20 June to warmly welcome the Chinese military delegation with Geng Biao as its head and Liang Biye as deputy head.

When the delegation head, Geng Biao, and its members ascended the rostrum in the company of General O Chin-u, standing committee member of the Political Bureau of the KWP and minister of the Korean People's Armed Forces, they were given a rousing welcome by more than 10,000 people, commanders and fighters of the KPA. Korean children presented flowers to members of the Chinese delegation.

Korean party, government and army leaders So Chol, O Kuk-yol, Paek Hak-im and So Yun-sok attended the welcome rally. Kim Man-gum, chairman of the Pyongyang Municipal People's Committee, presided over the meeting. General O Chin-u spoke first at the meeting.

He said: The warm welcome accorded you is a clear evidence of the firm determination of the Korean people and armymen "that they will forever fight shoulder to shoulder with the Chinese people and the Chinese People's Liberation Army on the revolutionary road to achieve the same goal and common ideals."

He said: "Our people will make all their efforts to further consolidate and develop the militant friendship and revolutionary unity between the parties, peoples and armies of Korea and China and always remain a faithful comrade-in-arms of Chinese comrades."

He said: "Our people sincerely wish the fraternal Chinese people greater successes in the struggle to build a highly democratic, highly civilized and modern socialist power and in the future sacred cause of restoring Taiwan to the motherland and reunifying the whole country."

On the question of Korea's independent and peaceful reunification, O Chin-u said: "No matter how desperately the United States and the Chon Tu-hwan puppet clique may try, they cannot thwart the desire of all the Korean people and the world's progressive people for reunification. Our people and all the soldiers of the People's Army will force the U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea and reunify the divided country to realize complete national sovereignty throughout the country."

He said: "We will in the future, too, as in the past, vigorously fight for the final victory of the cause of anti-imperialism and independence, firmly uniting forever with the Chinese people and the People's Liberation Army without wavering in the least in any trial."

The delegation head, Geng Biao, spoke next. He expressed heartfelt thanks for the extremely grand, warm welcome and hospitality accorded the delegation by the Korean party, people and army and the very cordial reception by President Kim Il-song.

He said: Under the correct leadership of their great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the KWP, the industrious, courageous and resourceful Korean people have built their country -- covered with wounds -- into a prosperous socialist country on debris at the chollima speed in reliance on their own talent, wisdom and hard-working two hands by implementing the line of independence in politics, self-reliance in economy and national defense.

He said: "The United States still keeps its troops in South Korea against the will of the Korean people and the world's peoples and is laying a big hurdle in the way of dialogue between North and South Korea and its reunification supporting the fascist rule of the Chon Tu-hwan clique. This once again brings to light the hegemonistic nature of the United States, arbitrarily trampling underfoot the sovereignty of another country and interfering in its internal affairs."

He pointed out: "The reunification proposal for the founding of the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo and its 10-point policy put forward by President Kim Il-song indicated the direction to the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea and was widely hailed and praised internationally. We fully support the reunification proposal of President Kim Il-song and the Korean people's sacred cause of the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and bitterly denounce the 'two Koreas' policy of the United States and the Chon Tu-hwan clique of South Korea. The United States must discontinue criminal acts in stamping out democracy and obstructing reunification."

He said: "The Chinese people and army highly value the great friendship between the Chinese and Korean parties and the two countries and are determined to make continued efforts for the further development of this friendship." "No matter what storm and change may come in the world in the future, the Chinese people and army will as ever unite with the Korean people and army, fight and win together, sharing the same storm-tossed boat" [feng yu tong zhou 7364 7183 0681 5297].

Farewell Banquet

[Text] Pyongyang, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Defense Minister Geng Biao and his Korean counterpart, O Chin-u, stressed the need to further enhance the great friendship between the people and armies of the two countries.

He reiterated China's stand of firmly supporting the Korean people's just struggle for an independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland till final victory.

He stressed that the two sides shared identical views on all issues, especially on the further consolidation and development of the traditional Korean-Chinese friendship. This has reaffirmed the unshakable determination of the two parties, peoples and armies to engage in their anti-imperialist struggle in a bigger way in view of the new developments in the world.

O Chin-u pledged that the Korean people and armymen will be forever loyal comrades-in-arms of their Chinese brothers fighting in the same trenches.

[Speech by Geng Biao, PRC minister of national defense, at 21 June banquet held at the PRC Embassy in Pyongyang -- read by announcer]

[Text] Esteemed Comrade O Chin-u, dear Korean comrades-in-arms and comrades: We are very pleased to see that today Comrade O Chin-u and other Korean comrades-in-arms have gathered here in response to our invitation to exchange farewell remarks with us. On behalf of the military delegation of our country, I first of all warmly welcome the comrades-in-arms present here and extend sincere gratitude to you.

Our military delegation of the People's Republic of China will leave your heroic country soon after winding up the friendly visit to the DPRK.

Since the first moment of our arrival in Pyongyang, we have received kind, grand and enthusiastic hospitality and heartfelt solicitude from our comrades-in-arms and have spent the days of our visit amid a friendly and happy atmosphere.

Despite his busy days, President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, received our delegation to bestow high honor upon us and had very cordial, friendly, instructive and useful talks with us.

Esteemed Comrade Kim Chong-il kindly gave instructions on the program of our delegation's visit and has shown solicitude to us.

Comrade O Chin-u and other comrade leading cadres of the Korean People's Army [KPA] accompanied us during the whole course of our tour and held talks with us. Both sides reached a complete unanimity of views on all problems discussed at the talks.

The International Affairs Department of the Korean Workers Party [KWP] Central Committee and the Ministry of the People's Armed Forces conducted thorough and elaborate organizational work so as to make our visit a smooth one. All this represents a vivid expression of the great friendship between the parties, peoples and armies of the two countries.

On behalf of the Chinese military delegation, I once again express my heartfelt thanks to the KWP Central Committee.

We toured Pyongyang, the capital of Korea, Kaesong, Wonsan and other local areas, met with many officers and men of ground, naval and air force units of the [KPA] and the military university and had cordial conversations with them.

Everywhere we went, we saw virile stamina, great changes taking place day by day under a grand far-sighted plan, daily bettering of the people's lives, good public order and a high standard of morality, which has become a social trait. In every place in Korea, green mountains and clean water decorate the earth like a picture. Rivers and mountains are very beautiful.

The Korean people have nursed a beautiful flower of socialist modernization by the sweat of their brows. You have made constant efforts and have put forward just and reasonable proposals for defending national independence and national sovereignty and for reunifying the country at an early date. Thus, you have enjoyed support from the peace-loving people of the world.

We saw that the heroic KPA is a powerful revolutionary army worthy of the name, which is in high spirits as the main force for defending and building the country and which is well trained and versed in military technology and is vigilantly guarding the northern half of the republic.

We have obtained much precious experience from your successes, which strike the people with admiration. The miraculous and tremendous successes registered by the KPA under the leadership of President Kim Il-song will shine like the sun and the moon and be everlasting like rivers and mountains.

We warmly congratulate all victories attained by the Korean people and wholeheartedly wish you a more shining victory in your future revolutionary cause.

Comrades-in-arms and comrades, our two countries of China and Korea, linked by rivers and mountains, are in the same relationship as lips and teeth. The traditional relations of friendship between our two peoples and armies are deep rooted.

The friendship between our two countries was sealed in blood in protracted anti-imperialist struggles. Rain or shine, we have advanced in the same boat, supporting each other. There may be still rain and storm in our advance in the future. The present international situation demands that we advance shoulder to shoulder in the same boat, helping each other. This is the common desire of the peoples of China and Korea. We will make constant efforts for this. We will resolutely support till final victory the just struggle of the Korean people for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea.

Though it was brief, the visit of our delegation to your country has left us with a beautiful and deep impression. Through the visit we once again felt the deep and thick emotion of friendship between the peoples and armies of the two countries of China and Korea.

We came to Korea with the emotion of friendship and we will return home, cherishing the emotion of friendship of the Korean people and the Korean People's Army toward the Chinese people and the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

In conclusion, hoping that the great friendship between the Chinese and Korean peoples and armies will be as eternal as the Amnok River, I propose a toast to the health and longevity of Comrade President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and an intimate friend of the Chinese people, to the health of Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il, to the health of Comrade O Chin-u and to health of the Korean comrades-in-arms and comrades present here.

PAPER REVIEWS SUZUKI'S 'FIVE PACIFIC PRINCIPLES'

["Newsletter From Japan" by correspondent Chen Bowei [7115 3124 1795]: "Premier Suzuki Advocates 'Five Pacific Principles'"]

Suzuki said that "because of the rapid development of means of communications supported by scientific and technical progress in recent years, the isolation created by distance has already become a thing of the past for the nationals of various Pacific nations. In spite of the political, economic and cultural diversifications in various countries of the Pacific region, the time for the strengthening of mutual reliance and understanding has been expedited. We are now at the historical moment of the meeting and integrating of various cultures in the Pacific region." This is the "birth of a newly conceived as well as creative and vigorous civilization" and "the beginning of a 'Pacific era' for opening up the way to the 21st century."

Suzuki pointed out that because of the rich manpower resources in the Pacific region, its gross national product already occupies a fairly important position in the world. Recently, the Pacific "has been regarded as a treasure house of limitless resources." For the sake of fully unearthing the tremendous potentials of this region, all countries of this region must cooperate with one mind.

The five principles for achieving "Pacific cooperation" advocated by him are: The Pacific must be a "peaceful ocean", a "free ocean", a "diversified ocean", a "reciprocal ocean" and an "open ocean".

The concept of "Pacific cooperation" cannot be described as something new either in Japan or in the international community. The deceased Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira in 1979 put forward a concept of "Pacific basin cooperation" and commissioned 23 scholars and experts to organize a brain trust for the study of this question. In November 1979, after more than 8 months of study, Ohira's brain trust made a preliminary report. In May 1980, they submitted a formal report which was officially published in August the same year. The "five principles of Pacific cooperation" advocated by Suzuki at present can be said to be the carrying forward and development of Ohira's concept.

In discussing the question of a "peaceful ocean," Suzuki made an analysis of the current situation in the Pacific region. He said that as an advanced industrial country of the Pacific region, Japan has become highly developed and "established an unshakable relationship with the United States. This region has certain "important and stable forces." At the same time he also pointed out that the Soviet Union has all along been strengthening its military forces in Asia and the Far East, stepping up its military preparations in Japan's intrinsic northern territories and increasing its activities in the waters around Japan. War continues in the Indochina Peninsula and confrontation continues in the Korean Peninsula. These are factors responsible for the tension in the Pacific region. He hoped that through the efforts of the parties concerned, the disputes will be peacefully resolved and the confrontation will be alleviated. Japan is willing to cooperate with other countries and will also make its own contributions.

The "Pacific cooperation" advocated by Suzuki covers many fields, such as the exchange of men and materials, transfer of technology, promotion of investment, upgrading of industry and strengthening of economic system between various countries.

He also emphasized increasing mutual understanding and overcoming misunderstanding caused by the "diversified value outlook." He stressed that cooperation is not for unilateral benefit but "mutual advantage," and that "Pacific cooperation" is not collective exclusiveness but "mutual ties through the development of the region and the peace and prosperity of the world."

In his speech, Prime Minister Suzuki again expressed the importance attached by Japan to the Pacific region. Needless to say, to Japan, which is industrially highly developed but lacking in resources, the vast markets and rich resources of the Pacific region are of important significance. Since the 1960's, people in Japan have been talking about the "Pacific economic circle" and the "Pacific community." Professor Kiyoshi Kojima, a Japanese scholar, had advanced the concept of "Pacific economic circle" as far back as 1969. Following the buildup of Japan's economic strength, the Japanese political, economic and academic circles have attached increasing importance to the cooperation of the Pacific region and also advocated that Japan must play an important role in it. For many years, all previous Japanese prime ministers had made it a rule to visit the ASEAN countries, and visits of the Japanese prime minister and people of the political circles to the Pacific region and other countries are on the increase. Most of the Japanese Government's foreign aid has been used in the Asian and Pacific region. Japan is not only maintaining close ties and developing cooperation with the ASEAN countries, but in recent years, it has also been providing economic and technical aid to some of the newly independent island countries of the South Pacific. Japan has sent "youth cooperation teams" to Western Samoa and Tonga. Japan has also accepted more than 300 students from Fiji, Samoa and Tonga. All this explains how active Japan has been in developing relations with various countries of the Pacific region.

On 18 June, all the major newspapers in Tokyo published an editorial on Suzuki's Honolulu speech. Some said that he used too many "beautiful phrases" in his speech, and the important question is, what Japan should do. A few reminded him that in the "Pacific cooperation," Japan should devote itself to promoting economic and cultural exchanges in the manner of Ohira's concept and avoid "political involvement." It must uphold the principle of "mutual benefit" and must not do things that will arouse the suspicion of various countries. It can be seen that the attitude of various newspapers is in agreement with the five principles advocated by Suzuki.

RENMIN RIBAO MARKS DIMITROV BIRTH CENTENNIAL

[Article by Zhu Zhaoshun [2612 0340 7311]: "March Forward Until Communism Triumphs Completely"]

[Text] Georgi Dimitrov, great leader of the Bulgarian people and celebrated activist of the international communist movement, will always be a source of pride to the people of Bulgaria. To commemorate this great communist fighter, the Bulgarian people have built two separate museums, one at his birthplace in the village of Kovachevtsi and the other at his former home in Sofia, in his honor. The fascist archvillain Hitler engineered the "Reichstag fire" in 1933 and accused Dimitrov of the crime. The Parliament building in Leipzig, where Dimitrov in former years indignantly denounced the fascists, has now also become a museum named after this revolutionary.

Dimitrov's Birthplace

Kovachevtsi is a barren mountain village 50 km southwest of Sofia. In the latter part of the 19th century, a group of Macedonians fled their homeland to escape the devastation of war and built a settlement there. The great proletarian leader was born there on 18 June 1882. Driving into the village, one can see a network of roads and row upon row of houses. The village also has a cultural center, hotels, a post office, restaurants and cafes, and a stadium.

The Dimitrov museum is situated in a spacious square. It is an imposing building with a huge statue of Dimitrov in front of the door. Nearby is a simple wooden house enclosed by a low wall. This is the place where Dimitrov was born. Although the house has been repaired several times, it nevertheless still retains its original form. What catches the eye is a bronze statue of Dimitrov's mother in the courtyard of the house. His mother was a kindly, hardworking and resolute woman, a revolutionary mother. Of the six children she gave birth to, three dedicated their lives to the revolution. The weather-beaten features of this revolutionary mother and the expression in her eyes that was filled with hope vividly expressed a lifetime of frustrations and the fervent hope she placed on her children and the future. The museum displays a vast quantity of Dimitrov's revolutionary documents and pictures which vividly reproduce the glorious lifetime of this revolutionary of the proletariat.

Dimitrov's Former Home in Sofia

In 1888, Dimirtov moved with his family to Sofia and lived in an ordinary tenement house on (Ao-bo-er-qin-si-ka) [1159 3134 1422 3830 2448 0595] Street. Dimitrov stayed there for a total of 35 years. After the victory of the revolution, the building became a museum named after him. It was in this house that Dimitrov grew up and began his early revolutionary activities. He became a printer at the age of 12. He joined the party organization and took the revolutionary road when he was barely 20. In this impoverished household, Dimitrov's only wealth was his books. The 3,000 volumes there reflected his profound knowledge and rich spiritual world. In the display room behind his former home, some 40,000 valuable documents are on display. They consist of the documents he drafted, letters, as well as photographs, negatives and various personal articles. The furniture he used during his stay in other places is also there. The display room also holds a collection of 1,500 books from his stay in Russia. In the glass show case, the various medals and decorations awarded to Dimitrov emit a dazzling radiance. On the walls, countless pictures show Dimitrov's extensive activities in the international communist movement, his heroic exploits in organizing and leading the Bulgarian people in their antifascist struggle and his enormous contributions in the work of leading the party and state after the victory of the revolution.

The Dimitrov Museum in Leipzig

In the dark days of 1933, the session held by the Reich court of Leipzig to judge the sensational "Reichstag fire case" was affecting the popular feelings of millions of people throughout the world. At that time Dimitrov, a staunch communist and member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, was facing the despotic power of the fascist gangsters. With amazing courage and eloquent logic, he denounced the fascist "new order" of Hitler's Germany and exposed the sinister motive behind the arson case engineered by them to the whole world. He openly declared: "As a communist who stands accused, I must defend my political honor, the honor of a revolutionary. I must defend my communist ideology, my ideals..."

The Leipzig trial was a record of ignominious defeat for such archvillains as Hitler, Goering and their ilk. Upon entering the museum, people seem to feel the awe-inspiring righteousness of this innocent communist who had to face trial, and to see the soul-stirring struggle between the two worlds.

The models of the museum have accurately reproduced the secret hiding place of Dimitrov in Berlin and the cell where he was ruthlessly imprisoned. At the entrance of the prison is a small showcase displaying the books he read during his detention. These include the works of Shakespeare, Goethe and Schiller. At the same time, he also read some of the works by the fascists. He studied the enemy in order to triumph over them on the battlefield.

Newspapers of various countries reflecting violent repercussions of world opinion regarding this sordid trial and strong appeals demanding Dimitrov's acquittal are displayed here. The museum has also carefully collected hundreds of memoirs written by Dimitrov's contempories, photographs and personal articles, and the dispatches and reports by progressive reporters who covered the trial are also carefully preserved. Visitors can listen to actual recordings of the trial and hear Dimitrov righteously making his final presentation. The "trial" ended in a triumph for Dimitrov. Today, people seem to still hear his resonant voice: "The wheel of history is moving forward and forward until communism triumphs completely."

'POLITICAL SOLUTION' TO LEBANON PROBLEM SCORED

[Article by An Guozhang [1344 0948 4545]: "The So-Called 'Political Solution' of the Lebanon Problem"]

[Text] While world public opinion is strongly demanding that Israel immediately withdraw from Lebanon, Israeli Prime Minister Begin has visited Washington. People worry that Israel and the United States are consulting again to coordinate new actions.

World public opinion generally holds that the large-scale Israeli invasion of Lebanon was a long-premediated plan and that the invasion was carried out under the auspices of the United States. Israeli Defense Minister Sharon openly admitted that the Americans knew about this invasion beforehand. Furthermore, the United States brazenly vetoed the UN Security Council's resolution calling on Israel to stop its invasion and immediately withdraw from Lebanon. It declared that it would not apply sanctions against the Israeli aggressive acts. Therefore, people's worries are not groundless.

Up to now, all countries in the world, except the United States, that have made their positions known have explicitly demanded that Israel immediately withdraw from Lebanon. However, by relying on their military superiority and the fait accompli as a result of the armed invasion, the Israeli authorities obstinately insist on disarming the PLO and establishing a "security zone" 40 km wide in southern Lebanon. They have demanded that Syria withdraw its troops and missiles from Lebanon. They have also claimed that they will not pull out their troops unless they attain their objectives.

The Israeli authorities are aggressors and their aggressor troops have devastated nearly a third of Lebanon's territory and leveled a great number of cities and towns, with the result that tens of thousands of people died unnatural deaths and 700,000 peaceful residents lost their home villages. They should have been punished and sanctioned for their monstrous crimes. What right have they to talk about conditions for troop withdrawal? However, the arrogant conditions put forth by Begin have in turn revealed the purposes of the large-scale Israeli invasion:

1. Thoroughly destroy the bases and command centers of the PLO in Lebanon and completely eliminate the Palestinian armed forces so that the Palestinian people will yield and give up the Palestinian national liberation cause.

2. Deal blows at the forces in Lebanon that support the Palestinian liberation struggle, prop up the pro-Israeli forces and compel Syria to withdraw its troops from Lebanon to create conditions that will affect the political situation in Lebanon, or set up a so-called "security zone" for the purpose of creating a country within a country to dismember Lebanon.

3. Further split the Arab states, and sabotage their conciliatory tendencies and efforts to restore unity with Egypt.

The PLO has explicitly made clear their attitude toward the unreasonable demands of Israel. The Palestinian people are determined to continue to resist the Israeli aggression and they will never surrender. The director of the Political Department of the PLO, Qaddumi, said that, wherever their bases are set up, they would continue to fight against Israel. The Syrians have also rejected the peremptory demands of Israel and pointed out that the stationing of Syrian troops in Lebanon is based on the collecive decision of the Arab states and is approved by the lawful government of Lebanon. The Lebanese Government has strongly demanded that Israel promptly and unconditionally withdraw its aggressor troops.

However, it is reported that Habib, the U.S. presidential envoy, who is engaged in a shuttle in the Middle East, has put forth a plan for "political solution." The contents of this plan are: "strengthening of the Lebanese Government"; disarming of the PLO so that it will become a political organization only; withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon; stationing of multinational troops in the southern part of Lebanon and establishment of a demilitarized zone in the same area in exchange for the lifting of the Israel troops' encirclement of Beirut and withdrawal from Lebanon.

It is obvious that this solution is aimed at eliminating or weakening the just struggle of the Palestinian people and is beneficial to Israel. Just as some Arab sources have said, the present situation is characterized by the coordination of the U.S. diplomacy and Israeli big guns. At present, the Palestinian people are undergoing a severe trial. However, the PLO, which has carried out numerous struggles and is rich in experience in this respect, will, under the new situation, lead the Palestinian people to crush the plots of the Israeli expansionists and persist in their struggle until victory is assured.

DENG XIAOPING ON CPPCC CONSTITUTION REVISION

[Text] The second plenary meeting of the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee opened this morning at the CPPCC Auditorium. Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPPCC National Committee and chairman of the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee, presided over the meeting and made a speech.

Deng Xiaoping said: One year and 9 months have elapsed since the first plenary meeting was held on 29 September 1980. During this period, the Secretariat of the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee has done a great deal of work. By sending out letters, holding discussions, dispatching investigation groups and by other means, it has solicited extensive opinions from all the members of the CPPCC National Committee and from the local CPPCC committees. Based on the opinions put forward and the resolution on the guidelines of the draft revised PRC constitution published by the Fifth NPC Standing Committee on 26 April 1982, the Secretariat carried out serious studies and discussions and worked out a discussion text of the draft revised CPPCC constitution. This discussion text is now submitted to the second plenary meeting for examination and approval. All fellow committee members are invited to fully express their views to change and make it better.

Deng Xiaoping said: After the discussion text of the draft revised CPPCC constitution is examined and approved by this meeting, it will be submitted to the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee. The Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee will then adopt a resolution to pass it on to all the members of the CPPCC National Committee and to local CPPCC committees at various levels for discussion. Based on opinions advanced through the discussions, the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee will make further revisions and then submit the draft to the Fifth Plenary Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee for examination and approval.

The CPPCC constitution was adopted at the First Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee in March 1978. The constitution played a positive role in the work to restore and rebuild the CPPCC. However, limited by the historical conditions at that time, some parts of the constitution contained obvious mistakes, and some articles could no longer meet the requirements of the developing new situation.

In view of this, on 12 September 1980, the Third Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee adopted a resolution on revising the CPPCC constitution and set up the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee. On 29 September 1980, the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee held its first plenary meeting.

At today's meeting, on behalf of the Secretariat, Liu Ningyi, secretary general of the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee, made a report to the committee members on the work done in the past year and more. He also gave some explanations of the draft revised CPPCC constitution.

Liu Lantao and Hu Juewen, vice chairmen of the CPPCC Constitution Revision Committee, attended today's meeting.

The meeting will begin panel discussions tomorrow.

RENMIN RIBAO ON STRENGTHENING CPPCC'S ROLE

[Article by Cheng Siyuan [4453 1895 6678]: "Realistically Give Full Play to the CPPCC's Role"]

[Text] Editor's note: On 15 June, the various democratic parties and groups and nonparty personages of the CPPCC held a special discussion on the relevant provisions in the draft of the revised constitution about the CPPCC. Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC, presided over the forum. The following are the excerpts of a speech by Cheng Siyuan, member of the CPPCC Standing Committee and a nonparty personage. [end of editor's note]

About the position and role of the CPPCC, the preamble of the constitution uses the word "important" in three places. The CPPCC is "an important organization in the united front;" it played an important role in history in the past;" in the future, it "will further give full play to its important role."

Since the promulgation of the Constitution in 1954, the CPPCC has played a positive role in uniting the people, establishing ties with the masses, discussing important national issues and in putting forth criticisms and suggestions concerning government work. All these are tried and true practices of long standing and should be incorporated in the constitution.

I suggest that the constitution describe the position and role of the CPPCC more clearly. Why?

1. This is a regional demand. Not long ago, I visited Liaoning. The provincial CPPCC in its work report said: "The CPPCC is still an important organization of the state, but many people still have not understood and accepted this ideologically. It is held that the CPPCC is only a supplement and a base for organizing people and counts for nothing." The comrades of the provincial CPPCC hoped that things would be made more clear about the nature, functions and work of the CPPCC in the new era.

2. This is the demand of our era. In the CPPCC there are a large number of experts and celebrities. Their views are quite authoritative. Since the CPPCC resumed its activities in 1978, it has done large amounts of remarkable work such as: creating public opinion for the reversal of verdicts of people connected with the Tiananmen incident; all the efforts devoted to protecting cultural relics and the ecological balance; sponsoring the "forum on economic problems," "forum on science and technology" and many other report meetings, with very satisfactory results achieved; investigating the problem of errant youths and adolescents and putting forth the "comprehensive treatment" suggestion, with great results. All this shows that the CPPCC is capable of performing still greater tasks.

I suggest that we avail ourselves of this rare opportunity of revising the constitution to reform and strengthen the national system. The CCP Central Committee is in charge of important policies and guidelines and cannot pay much attention to concrete matters about government work. This calls for strengthening the organization of the CPPCC and its authority and work. Meanwhile, it is suggested that the CPPCC be confirmed as an important organization of our country in consolidating and expanding the united front. The CPPCC must participate in discussing important national policies and guidelines and put forth criticisms and suggestions concerning government work. In this way, we can achieve results in strengthening the national system.

FLOOD PEAKS OCCUR ALONG CHANG JIANG TRIBUTARIES

[Text] Wuhan, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- Continuous torrential rainfalls have hit Jiangxi, Hubei, Hunan and other provinces in the middle reaches of the Chang Jiang. Water levels are rising rapidly and flood peaks have occurred on some tributaries. Armymen and civilians along the river are strengthening flood prevention measures.

According to a report, flood peaks have already occurred on the Gan Jiang and Fu He in the Poyang Lake water system in Jiangxi. The water levels of the Xiang Jiang and Yuan Jiang have risen rapidly. The flood peak on the Xiang Jiang has already reached 38.35 meters, which is close to the highest water level in history. From 19 June, heavy rainfalls have been registered in areas along the Chang Jiang in Hubei. A department concerned has forecast that this year's first flood peak will appear on the Chang Jiang at Wuhan in the next few days.

At present, flood prevention commands in various provinces and municipalities in the middle and lower reaches of the Chang Jiang are engaged in flood prevention work. The broad masses of cadres and people are vigilantly paying attention to any change in the rain and flood situation.

BEIJING MEETING ON ENTERPRISE CONSOLIDATION HELD

[Text] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- A meeting on exchanging experience in enterprise consolidation was held in Beijing on 19 June. The departments concerned under the State Council attended the meeting.

A responsible person of the State Economic Commission pointed out in his speech at the meeting: Enterprise consolidation has been unfolded in an all-round way. At present, we should particularly pay attention to adhering to high standards and setting strict demands. We should avoid low standards and the substitution of inferior things for superior ones. We should absolutely never undertake the enterprise consolidation perfunctorily.

At present, the consolidation has been generally unfolded among the first group of enterprises selected by various localities and departments. After 2 or 3 months of work, many enterprises have entered the stage of substantive consolidation. In the regions where rapid progress has been made, the consolidation has yielded preliminary results.

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission delivered his speech after he listened to reports on the relevant situation and experience of some provinces and municipalities at the meeting.

He said the current enterprise consolidation is consolidation of a constructive nature with many contents and strict demands. While the consolidation is being deepened at present, we should particularly lay the stress on practical results and uphold high standards. Comrades leading this enterprise consolidation in various departments and localities must keep these aims very clear in their minds in order to provide proper guidance. At the same time, they should formulate without delay concrete criteria for the enterprise consolidation and for "six-good enterprises." The enterprise consolidation should be done quickly, but quality is even more important than speed. We must consolidate enterprises well according to the demands set by the central authorities.

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission also said: During the all-round consolidation, enterprises should concentrate on consolidation and include everything in the consolidation. At present, all departments are assigning work to lower level units and emphasizing the importance of their work. Enterprises, like needles that have to take thousands of threads, have a tough job to do. Therefore, they must concentrate on the consolidation.

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission announced at the meeting: In order to further strengthen the leadership over enterprise consolidation, the State Council has approved the establishment of a national leading group for enterprise consolidation. The group will conduct an overall study of the enterprise consolidation plan, sum up and exchange the experience in enterprise consolidation and study and solve major problems and policy problems in the course of the consolidation.

RENMIN RIBAO STRESSES OBTAINING FIRSTHAND DATA

[Editorial: "Obtain Firsthand Data"]

[Text] To do economic work well, we must pay particular attention to obtaining firsthand data. This is a very important problem. It should arouse the attention of leading cadres of economic departments at all levels.

To do economic work well, we must pay attention to many problems. With regard to work methods, the most important thing is that we must obtain firsthand data. If we refuse to conduct penetrating investigations and studies and get firsthand data, but instead make hasty decisions on problems by relying on subjective will or secondhand or third-hand information, we can hardly avoid suffering setbacks, which in the past have been many. Lessons learned are painful.

Experience in economic work in the past several years shows that some matters have been handled well with good and quick results because the relevant leadership organ has obtained firsthand data. For example, the accumulation of stocks at coastal ports is a longstanding, knotty problem. Involved are not only problems concerning loading and unloading, railroads, foreign trade and customshouses, and so forth, but also problems of owners who fail to take delivery of goods in time. Between March and April last year, leading comrades of the State Council made an on-the-spot investigation and ascertained actual conditions. Problems were solved on the spot and very quick results achieved. Problems in economic construction are varied and complicated. For many years, numerous problems have piled up for various departments and various links in the economy. With the development of economic construction, new conditions and new problems have appeared. In coping with old or new problems, we must get hold of firsthand data and find the key to a solution.

Comrade Chen Yun has pointed out that in doing our work, we must devote more than 90 percent of our time to studying things and less than 10 percent to reaching a decision. If we want to do economic work well, we must follow this principle. We cannot spend the whole day handling paperwork and doing routine work. Instead, we must get deeply involved with realities and determine conditions. We must obtain firsthand data. There are many problems which are not abstract in nature or which deal with theory or principles, but ones which require us to go deep into reality to find a solution. Making an on-the-spot survey is the first step to be taken. Second, we must organize the parties concerned to join in studying how to find a solution. And third, we must make another inspection and then take action on the matter involved. If we follow these three steps in doing our work we can gradually enrich our knowledge and our experience. Our level of ability will also gradually improve and economic work will be handled increasingly better.

When confronted with problems, the leading comrades of some economic management organs are hesitant and indecisive. In doing things, they are likely to pass the buck. They talk a lot about theory, but are short on concrete measures. The main reason for this has to do with the lack of firsthand data and failure to ascertain actual conditions and failure to know the real problem. Of course, conditions vary with different areas. Economic work is also complicated. No economic department or management organ can obtain firsthand data on all matters. Drawing on secondhand or thirdhand data is unavoidable but necessary. However, the secondhand and thirdhand data supplied by lower levels must be analyzed and checked to determine if it is important enough and agrees with facts. If the problem involved is a serious one and the relevant data is not too reliable, we should appoint people to make investigations and obtain firsthand data directly. If we accept data readily without making an analysis, problems will crop up often. This not only causes a loss in our work but also makes us a laughingstock. For many years, in economic work we have relied on certain inaccurate data to formulate general and specific policies and to work out measures, and have often made mistakes in handling certain matters. This should be seriously noted. We must rectify and guard against such practices.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ECONOMIC FORECASTING, POLICIES

[Article by Wu Jiapei [3527 1367 1014]: "Economic Forecasting and Policy Analysis"]

[Text] Economic forecasting and policy analysis are two important correlated fields in the application of economic quantitative analysis. People often pay attention to the former and overlook the latter.

As a matter of fact, viewed from the trend of development, policy analysis will become more and more important. On the basis of the relative development of short-term forecasting, the importance of long-term forecasting has been realized by more and more people. Long-term forecasting usually refers to a kind of plan analysis on the possible growth of the economy and the ways for its actual growth. When the assumptions of these plans are in line with policies that may possibly be adopted in future, it actually becomes trend analysis which affects policies.

Should Our Country Develop Economic Forecasting and Policy Analysis and How To Develop Them.

Our country is a socialist country and we have a plan for the national economy. Is forecasting still necessary when we already have a plan? My answer is yes. If we say that a plan is an arrangement for future actions, forecasting is then a description of future events. With forecasting, we can make our plan better by reducing as many uncertain factors as possible and keeping it in line with surrounding conditions and possible changes. Besides, it is possible to forecast the results in implementing a plan. Forecasting is not contradictory to planning. It only helps make the latter more scientific. Statistics are used to check how a plan has been carried out, but forecasting assesses a plan before it is carried out. Forecasting is also helpful in making a decision. Forecasting provides information about the future as a reference for making a decision and increases our understanding about the future. Forecasting itself is a kind of analysis. It tells what results will be obtained under certain conditions and what results will be obtained under other specific conditions. It is needed in making any sound decision. When uncertain factors are unavoidable, the only way to make a good decision is to minimize as many of these uncertain factors as possible through appropriate forecasting. If one can project future progress through forecasting, like he knows the back of his hand he can certainly make a correct decision. On the contrary, if one does not make a forecast, he can only make a decision blindly.

"Economic forecasting is a product of the capitalist society. We should not use it." This is wrong! In fact, we sometimes make forecasts. We, for example, often say "the economic situation is changing for the better and will improve with each passing day." This is a qualitative forecast of the development of the economic situation. Undoubtedly this is a correct prediction of the development of the existing economic situation which is either not good or not very good, but it is not a quantitative prediction. What do "changing for the better" and "will improve with each passing day" imply quantitatively? This is not clear. Consequently, no quantitative assessment or accurate test of it can be made. Scientific forecasting is in no way wild guessing. After a certain period of time, a conclusion can be drawn upon valid evidence showing whether th forecast is correct or not and how great is the error. The economic forecast we are discussing is only to develop qualitative forecasting into testable quantitative forecasting, that is, to make an estimated calculation of possible future economic targets (or variables).

A forecast is used in order to find out about the future by studying the past. We can understand the future if we probe into the past. Surely there are inherent laws for things to develop from the past to the present and from the present to the future. Only if we discover and grasp the inherent laws governing the development of things can we raise the degree of accuracy. Therefore, it is not easy to make a forecast, and the forecast is not always correct. Similar to weather forecasting, it is more difficult to forecast economics than to forecast the weather because the will and activities of man are involved in the economic field.

The more important question is how economic forecasting should be developed in our country and what kind of an economic forecast should be developed. This needs separate discussion and research.

Stressing policy analysis is a fine tradition of our party and country. However, traditional policy analysis is meant to serve the formulation of policies and find out how policies are being implemented. Basically, it is also a qualitative study and its principal method is the method for ordinary investigation. The vigorous development of policy analysis in capitalist countries tells us that we should also carry out quantitative and applied policy analysis and policy analysis based on experience, and should analyze and assess the consequences and influence of policies and measures in macroeconomy, including consequences at present and in the future and direct and indirect influence. We should carefully carry out academic study on results of past economic policies and make macroscopic analysis and assessment on existing economic policy. This will provide necessary conditions for effectively improving and developing economic policies.

For quite a long time, people have regarded the analysis and assessment of economic policies as a "prohibited zone" in economic study. Some people think that economic policies are not objectives of study in economic science. Undoubtedly, to theoretical science, this is correct because what is studied in theoretical science is the theoretical basis for policies and not policies themselves. However, as far as applied science is concerned, it serves policymakers in their work and should be distinguished from theoretical science. In applied science, economic consequences of policies are objectively analyzed from another angle and policies are justly assessed. Some people think that we are prone to make mistakes in studying economic policies and that it is advisable to keep away from such study. It is wrong to adopt this attitude. People engaged in economic science should help those who lead the economy and the society. They can help them indirectly by raising their theoretical level and making clear the guiding ideology. More often than not, they have to provide them with useful views and practical suggestions. Economists should endeavor to develop various quantitative methods for analysis and assessment in order to help leaders find out various influences on society of the economic policies formulated and the mechanism which exerts such influence.

The contents of our policy analysis are entirely different from those in the capitalist countries, but this does not mean that their methods for policy analysis cannot be used for reference.

Several Questions Which We Should Pay Special Attention To At Present

1. Develop applied science and attach importance to the study of methods and methodology.

Economics should eventually serve economic practice, answer questions and solve problems in economic life and develop more effective ways to raise the level and increase the efficiency of economic work. A distinguishing feature of applied science is that it stresses the study of experience, that is, the statement of the existence of objective connections and laws is based on facts. This is conducive to carrying out deeper theoretical study and discovering scientific laws.

Marxist philosophy holds that methods (scientific methods) depend on the objective of study itself and reflect realistic objective laws. The condition for discovering objective laws is to use appropriate methods. In the field of science, the significance of methods for settling a question for study is no less than putting forth this question for study. A new method often leads to a new theory. Science is systematic knowledge and methods for acquiring knowledge. The progress of science is manifested in the continuous expansion of the range of answering questions and solving problems and also in the methods employed and the continuous rise of their effectiveness. Therefore, methods themselves are an important part of scientific research and should not be set against theory or excluded from objectives and science.Lenin drew our attention to the fact that "method is the consciousness of the form taken by the inner spontaneous movement of its content" (Lenin: "Conspectus of Hegel's Science of Logic," People's Publishing House, 1953 edition, p 43)

2. Strengthen economic quantitative analysis.

In order to develop economic science, we must endeavor to develop quantitative analysis while stressing qualitative analysis. Deepgoing quantitative analysis requires abundant materials, advanced instruments and numerous methods. In carrying out quantitative analysis, the establishment and utilization of models and their systems are indispensable. We must first make theoretical analysis of various factors, reveal the relations among them and use them as the basis for setting up models. Then we must make use of these models to gather and process material, calculate various data, compare different plans, find solutions and make selections. Finally, we must test our conclusions and give explanations. These are usual steps taken in economic quantitative analysis. In economic quantitative analysis, mathematical methods are not only a means for calculating figures but also a tool for logical analysis.

Electronic computers are used for high-speed accurate calculation as well as for processing large quantities of data and for simulated tests on economic questions.

There are limitations to any test and this is also true of economic quantitative analysis. We do not know how to process some questions quantitatively. This is an external limitation. To what extent we can carry out pure quantitative analysis is an internal limitation. Only when we understand limitations can we overcome them and further develop quantitative analysis. There are economic problems which have not yet been able to be processed quantitatively, but in principle, all economic problems can be processed quantitatively. With the development of scientific research and technological instruments, the scope of quantitative process will certainly be extended continuously.

3. Perfect economic policies and decisions and improve planning and forecasting.

One important orientation or aspect of economics in serving socialist economic practice in our country should be the study on economic decisions and economic forecasting while perfecting economic policies and improving planning.

A policy is in itself a particular decision, but not all decisions are policies. A policy is usually a decision made by the party and the government on a major event that involves the interessts of the public, whereas a decision is is usually made by administrative departments at various levels on a certain question. Correct decisions are the key to scientific management. Under normal conditions, the necessary steps for making a decision are: stating the problem to be solved and making clear the goal to attain, listing all activities and ways to deal with a situation which can actually replace one another, gathering material, and finding out the situation and trends concerned, making clear major uncertain factors and possible accidents, comparing the merits and setbacks of various feasible activities and ways to deal with a situation, and estimating possible results and expenses needed, and on this basis, selecting the most favorable plan of action for attaining the goal. Conscientiously following the steps for making a decision can help decisionmakers find new and better plans of action and make decisions which are affected by subjective judgment more scientific and suited to objective development. In making a decision, there are both certain and uncertain factors. There are also unknown factors. In making decisions, if there are uncertain factors, we need to make a forecast to avoid acting blindly.

Forecasting is not a plan; it is different from a plan. The question which forecasting explains is that under specific conditions, if no measures or actions are taken, what changes will occur. The question which a plan explains is what measures and actions should be taken to change the existing conditions and what arrangements should be made in order to attain the expected goal. However, there are things common between a forecast and a plan. Both are related to the future and pass judgment on future developments on the basis of an understanding of the past and the present. Judgment plays an important role. Forecasting is an art and science. Its accuracy depends on the skills of those who make forecasts in using material, selecting methods and putting forth assumptions. It depends even more on better models, reliable material and advanced mathematical technology.

It is very harmful to improving planning if forecasting is set against planning. The idea that forecasting is not necessary since plans are worked out and implemented in a socialist society at least overlooks that there are bound to be uncertain factors in the process of formulating and implementing a plan in a socialist country. In formulating a plan, it is necessary to take forecasting as a reference in order to decide whether or not corresponding actions should be taken and to estimate what results will be obtained in implementing the plan and what other side effects may occur. In this way, we can really know how things stand. Forecasting can help reduce uncertain factors and minimize as much as possible our ignorance of the future. Planning workers and decision-makers can use the results of a forecast to stay with that which is good and to avoid that which is bad in future development and to meet the expected goal in keeping with changing economic environment and conditions. Only if planning and forecasting are well integrated can the work of planning be improved.

BAN YUE TAN CITES LI DA ON LIU BOCHENG'S SKILLS

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In connection with the publication of the book "Reminiscences on Liu Bocheng's Military Skill," Li Da, who for a long time was the chief of staff of the troops commanded by Liu Bocheng and Deng Xiaoping, explained to BAN YUE TAN's reporter some characteristics of Liu Bocheng's military skills. A report of the reporter's interview with Li Da is published in the 12th issue of this journal.

Liu Bocheng is a famous marshal of China. He is now more than 90 years old. In the past, he was successively appointed to the posts of chief of staff of the CCP Central Committee Military Commission, chief of staff of the General Headquarters of the Central Red Army, president of the Red Army University, commander of No 129 Division of the Eighth Route Army, commander in chief of the Second Field Army of the PLA and vice chairman of the National Defense Committee. Several of China's military specialists have published many articles on Liu Bocheng's military achievements and the book "Reminiscences on Liu Bocheng's Military Skill" is a collection of these articles.

Li Da said that Liu Bocheng's military theory and art of commanding troops was highly evaluated by Chairman Mao, General Commander in Chief Zhu, Chen Yi, Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian and other older generation proletarian revolutionaries and strategists. General Commander in Chief Zhu said: "He (Liu Bocheng) is not only a brave, skilled and resourceful commander, but also a man who has made great attainments in military theory and who has achieved many good results in developing military theory."

Li Da said that Liu was very familiar with and very well versed in using Mao Zedong's military thinking. Liu Bocheng once said that Mao Zedong's military theory is the military theory of a small and weak force of the people defeating a strong enemy armed with modern equipment. Mao Zedong's military thinking attaches special importance to "mobility." Liu Bocheng pointed out: "Increasing our mobility, finding the enemy's weak points or leading the enemy to commit mistakes so as to expose some weak points, and then exploiting these weak points to launch sudden attacks on the enemy in a planned manner is the most effective way of taking the initiative into our hands and defeating the enemy." Later, he further developed the theory in those words and said: "Generally speaking, tactically, if the weak point is being attacked, a strong force will be put into a weak position. Conversely, if the strong point is being attacked, a weak force will be put into a strong position. Therefore, in deploying our army, we should use a small number of troops to pin down other parts of the enemy forces in order to deploy a strong force both in number and in quality to attack the enemy at its weakest point."

Liu Bocheng is very well versed in handling the dialectical relationships between being strong and being weak, between concentrating and scattering the force and between wiping the enemy out and wearing down the enemy's strength. He pointed out: "We should use a weak force to wear down the strength of the enemy's strong force while using a strong force to wipe out the enemy's weak force, and we should use our scattered force to wear down the strength of the enemy's concentrated force while using our concentrated forces to wipe out the enemy's scattered forces. These words mean that using our weak force to wear down the strength of the enemy's strong force is aimed at using our strong force to wipe out the weak force of the enemy, and that using our scattered force to wear down the strength of the concentrated force of the enemy is aimed at using our concentrated force to wipe out the scattered force of the enemy."

Li Da unumerated Liu Bocheng's achievements in developing the art of war. For example: "Dividing our force into two parts, using the first part to draw the enemy's ambush and the second part to wipe out the ambush force when the ambush force attacks the first part of the force." Other examples are "attacking where the enemy will surely send a rescue force in order to wipe out the rescue force and attacking where the enemy will surely retreat in order to wipe it out when it is retreating;" "wiping out a part of the enemy first and leaving the rest of the enemy to be dealt with later;" "attacking a part of the enemy in order to induce all the enemy force to come out to rescue that part of the enemy and then selcting a weak part of the enemy and wiping it out in isolation, thus dividing the enemy up and wiping it out one part after another;" "leaving a break in the ring of encirclement when surrounding the enemy and deploying an ambush near the break in the circle in order to wipe out the enemy when it makes a breakthrough at this point;" "deploying some of the troops to attack the head and tail of the enemy's line and deploying some of our troops to cut the enemy into two in order to completely wipe out the enemy;" and "taking away fuel from under the pot." All these are discussed and studied in "Reminiscences on Liu Bocheng's Military Skill."

CHINA DAILY REPORTS REVIVAL OF BUDDHISM

HK200044 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 20 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] Many temples and monasteries in China are now open for public worship after being closed more than ten years during the "Cultural Revolution," Wang Xin, a council member of the Buddhist Association of China told a CHINA DAILY reporter.

Among the well-known Buddhist holy centres and temples repaired and reopened are those on the four most famous mountains in China; Mount Putuo in Zhejiang Province, Mount Jihua in Anhui, Mount Emei in Sichuan and Mount Wutai in Shanxi. All were badly damaged during the "Cultural Revolution."

According to Wang the famous Baima Temple (the White House Temple) in Luoyang, Henan Province, which an old legend describes as the first temple built in China, the Longhua Temple in Shanghai, the Lingyanshan Temple in Suzhou, the Lingyin Temple in Hangzhou and the Xingjiao and Xiangji Temples both in Xian, Shaanxi Province, have also reopened.

When asked about the role of the Buddhist Association of China, Wang Xin said local Buddhist associations have been set up in all the provinces and autonomous regions since the downfall of the gang of four. The mission of these associations is to help the government carry out national religious policy and to convey the believers' demands to the government, to train young monks, to organize research work and to conduct friendly exchanges with Buddhists in foreign countries.

In the past year, more than 1,700 foreigners were received by the Buddhist Association of China. "More young monks have to be trained," Wang said. Preparations for opening a nine-month training course in Nanjing for about 200 monks a year, starting 1983, are getting into full swing.

The first Chinese Buddhist Theological Institute founded in Beijing in 1956, was revived in 1980 after nearly 14-years' suspension. With its affiliated school in Suzhou, Jiangsu Province, the institute has now trained about 80 young monks.

More Buddhist theological institutes are to be set up in Nanjing, Qinghai, Gansu and Tibet. Wang said the Venerable Bhikkuni (nun) Longlian, president of the Sichuan Provincial Buddhist Association and the abbess of the Tiexiang Temple (the Iron Idol Nunnery) in Chengdu, is planning to open an institute for nuns.

Since 1980, many Buddhist scriptures and theses concerned with religion have been published, including a series on "Buddhism in China," "A Collection of Buddhist Scriptures and Charms," and a translation of "Buddhist Logics" from Tibet.

The centry-old Jinling Buddhist xylograph and printing house reopened in 1981 with about 40 books reprinted since then, Wang said. The house was founded by the lay Buddhist Yang Renshan in 1866, and was on the brink of bankruptcy on the eve of 1949. It revived in 1952 but was severely damaged during the "Cultural Revolution."

He attributed the reopening of the house again in 1981 to Dr Zhao Yuanren and his wife Yang Buwei, the granddaughter of the founder. During their 1973 visit to Beijing from the United States, they suggested to Premier Zhou Enlai that the house be restored. Premier Zhou approved their proposal, but nothing could be done until 1976 when the gang of four was crushed.

Wang said that, under the guidance of Bainqen Erdini Qoiqi Gyaincain, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and honorary president of the association, 16 Tibetan scriptures and five Tibetan Buddhist images will also be printed in the near future.

The association now also publishes a bi-monthly FAYIN (THE VOICE OF BUDDHIST DOCTRINE) for Buddhist research. It has been circulated in more than 10 countries in Southeast Asia and other regions.

Wang said Buddhist scriptures carved on both sides of about 15,000 stones long buried under two pagodas and in nine sealed turnels were discovered in 1958 in Fangshan County in Beijing's suburbs.

This was an important discovery because the scriptures cover a period of more than 1,000 years starting from the Sui Dynasty (581-618) down to the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644) and will provide rich material for historical and cultural study of ancient China, he said.

It took three years to copy down all the scriptures and the catalogue of them has now been printed.

He said Buddhist ceremonies are held in the Guangji Temple in Beijing four times a month with around 100 worshippers each time.

He said a great number of bronze Buddha statues and incense burners from Tibet were destroyed in attempts to remove their gold coating. About 50 painting scrolls from the Ming Dynasty were taken from the Fayuan Temple in Beijing and burned. "But some important relics survived due to the efforts of Premier Zhou," Wang said. "He gave orders to the local governments to protect them by every possible means."

Wang said the government has paid much attention to religion. In previous and current constitutions, citizens are entitled to enjoy freedom of religious belief.

He is especially satisfied with the more specific stipulation in the current draft of the constitution which reads: "No organs of state, public organizations or individuals shall compel citizens to believe in religion or disbelieve in religion, nor shall they discriminate against citizens who believe, or do not believe, in religion."

GONGREN RIBAO URGES LEARNING FROM FEMALE WORKER

[Text] We were filled with excitement and respect when we read the report "She Devoted All Her Light and Heat to the Four Modernizations." This is a report about the deeds of a good daughter of the working class, Zhao Chune, who was a worker at Laoji coalyard of the Luoyang municipal coal company. Her lofty communist spirit in working wholeheartedly for the revolution and wholeheartedly serving the people gives us a profound education. We believe that when all the staff and workers in the country have read this report, they will also be greatly moved by Comrade Zhao Chune's precious spirit of devotion.

Comrade Zhao Chune was a very common worker. He job was also very common -- a job at a coalyard where she had to deal with coal every day. She engaged in common labor. Every day she would sweep and shovel coal, check the coal received and send coal to consumers. However, at her common position and in her common labor, she performed extremely uncommon glorious deeds. She closely integrated her ideals into practice. In doing her work, she never haggled for better working conditions or remuneration but devoted all her energy and abilities to the coalyard. She not only conscientiously and satisfactorily did what was assigned to her, but also quietly did many other things that were not assigned to her. She showed concern for other people more than for herself and warmed the hearts of other people with her sincerity. What was especially moving was that during the critical time when she was seriously ill, she still tried to work as much as possible. She said: "I would rather die on a heap of coal than on a sick bed," and "I have only one thing to ask from the organization -- the permission to work." These stirring words clearly showed the loyalty for the revolutionary cause and the dauntless heroism of a CCP member. Comrade Zhao Chune's revolutionary spirit of putting revolution first, putting work first, putting the interests of other people first and giving her all until her heart stops beating was the concentrated expression of the communist ideology. She deserved to be called a good daughter of the party and an excellent representative of the working class, and she deserved to be an example for all the staff and workers to learn from.

Since the founding of our country, hundreds and thousands of advanced and exemplary people like Zhao Chune have continued to emerge in our ranks of staff and workers. These people have fought hard on various frontlines and have contributed their talents and wisdom to our cause of socialist revolution and socialist construction. They are the backbone of the new China. We are proud to have such a large number of fine working class elements. However, we cannot deny that because of the impact of the decade of turmoil and because of the corrosion of capitalist and various other nonproletarian ideologies, and in addition, owing to our laxness and weakness in carrying out ideological and political work for a few years, there have been quite a large number of workers, especially young workers, who do not really have a working class ideology mentality, although they have already become members of the working class. Some of them have no ideals and are not concerned about politics. They pay attention only to earning money. They put money first and see money in everything. Others are particular about clothes and food and seek enjoyment. They pursue the so-called doctrine of "if there is any meaning to life, it is but food and clothes." Still others are empty-minded and are leading a meaningless life. They work perfunctorily and are lax in observing discipline. A small number of them even violate the law and discipline and commit crimes. Therefore, one of the urgent tasks facing us is to carry out education in communism among the staff and workers and strive to raise their ideological consciousness and their understanding of the historical mission of their own class, and thus firmly establish in their minds the communist world outlook, the communist outlook on life and the communist ideal.

One of the important measures now is to conscientiously develop among the staff and workers the mass movement of learning from and catching up with the advanced, and to turn the working class into a powerful force with communist consciousness, modern cultural knowledge and modern production skills, adequate political initiative and production with the spirit of unity, cooperation and strict discipline.

At present, responding to the CCP Central Committee's call, activities of learning from and catching up with the advanced are being carried out everywhere. In carrying out these activities, we should propagate on a large scale the deeds of the advanced individuals and the advanced collectives. Most of the advanced and exemplary people are the type of people who are willing to endure great hardship and willing to work hard like Comrade Zhao Chune. They are the advanced people who are like the "old oxen" described by some of the masses. Another type of advanced person is one who has achieved great results in renovating tools, machinery and other apparatus, inventing advanced technological processes and advanced techniques to raise labor productivity and in strengthening scientific management and in raising the economic results in their enterprises. Both types of advanced people are examples for us to learn from. However, in a sense, only when one has the spirit to serve the people wholeheartedly like an "old ox" can he put the interests of the people first and concentrate all his energy on renovation and creation.

Though Comrade Zhao Chune died, her communist ideology of hard struggle, working selflessly and devotion to the four modernizations will live forever. This is the most precious spiritual wealth she left us. We should learn from her forever!

PROGRESS IN ALLOY STEEL PRODUCTION REPORTED

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- China now produces 2.5 million tons of alloy steel a year in over 600 varieties, up from an annual total of 2,000 to 3,000 tons in the early 1950's, today's PEOPLE'S DAILY reports.

The paper notes that China has established a number of alloy steel producing bases and has made marked improvement in the quality of its manufactured high-speed tool steel, bearings steel, cold-rolled stainless steel plates, small-bore pipes for geological use and low alloy reinforcing bars.

In the past two years, Chinese high-speed tool steel and several other alloy steel products have entered the world market, including some 50 million pieces of cutting and drilling tools made for export with M 2 [as received] new rolled steel jointly by the Dalian steel mill, Beijing iron and steel research institute and related units.

In the 1950s, the paper recalls, ordinary carbon steel was used in building the Yangtze River Bridge at Wuhan, with a span of 128 meters. In the 1960s, the Anshan iron and steel complex turned out low alloy steel and it was selected and used in building the second Yangtze Bridge, at Nanjing, where the span was increased to 160 meters. In the 1970s, the complex produced -- on a trial basis -- a new type of low alloy steel with greater strength, which has recently been chosen for building yet another Yangtze River Bridge at Jiujiang with a span as long as 216 meters.

Railway departments across China have in recent years begun to replace carbon steel rails with medium manganese steel rails and, as a result, the life expectancy of the rails can be extended by 26 percent. The blooms trial-produced by the Qiqihar steel mill have been used in the manufacture of cold rolls for the 1.7-meter rolling mill in the Wuhan iron and steel complex, which were earlier imported from abroad, the paper says.

In addition, the paper goes on, various alloys steel producing enterprises have reoriented their service direction by providing cheaper alloy steel products for light industry. The Dalian steel mill is now using strip spring steel it has produced to turn out qualified springs for washer timers, which have been imported for some time.

In an accompanying brief commentary, the paper calls for expansion of alloy steel production, saying that the increased proportion of alloy steels in steel production represents an important step toward raising the quality and increasing the variety for China's metallurgical industry.

The paper also urges the pooling of technical resources of existing research institutes, colleges and universities as well as in industrial enterprise to make new breakthroughs in this field.

CONSERVATION GROUP ESTABLISHED IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jun (XINHUA) -- The national water and soil conservation work coordination group held its first meeting since its establishment in Beijing on the morning of 18 June.

Qian Zhengying, head of the group and minister of water conservancy and power, presided over the meeting. Lu Kebai, vice minister of the State Planning Commission; Li Ruishan, vice minister of the State Economic Commission; and responsible persons of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery and the Ministry of Forestry attended the meeting.

The meeting listened to reports on the nationwise situation in water and soil conservation work. They held that water and soil conservation work is an important part of the work to manage and put in order the country's land resources. Over the years some achievements have been made in this field of work, but there are still many problems, particularly the phenomenon of improvement and destruction going on at the same time, which hitherto has not been effectively stopped.

The meeting studied and determined that at present it is necessary to pay attention to work in the following three areas: 1) to energetically publicize the harms of soil erosion and the great significance of water and soil conservation; 2) to resolutely protect the existing forests, grasslands, wastelands and so forth against further destruction; and 3) to bring soil erosion under control in key areas stage by stage and area by area with departments concerned at various levels paying attention to their own respective key areas.

The meeting also decided to hold national water and soil conservation work conference in good time following the promulgation of regulations governing water and soil conservation work by the State Council.

The meeting studied the question of division of labor and coordination among ministries and commissions concerned.

'THREE FIXES' POLICY IN FORESTRY PROGRESSING

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- Salient success has been achieved in fixing the ownership of hills and woodlands, the ownership of privately owned hills on the peasants, and the responsibility in forestry production -- the three tasks known as the "three fixes" -- since the spring of 1981 when these projects started. According to statistics from 27 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions in April, the "three fixes" had already been carried out in more than 1,900 counties and cities, and had been basically completed in over 500 counties. In the course of launching these projects, over 100 million mu of hill country have been granted to over 30 million rural households as private plots, an average of 3.6 mu per household.

Facts have proved that fruitful results have been achieved wherever the "three fixes" have been properly carried out. The most notable results are:

1. Enthusiasm of the broad masses of cadres and people in developing forestry has been aroused. In many localities where the "three fixes" have been completed, individual households as well as the state and the collectives, are enthusiastic in afforestation. Last spring, Hunan Province afforested over 3.4 million mu of land, of which 110,000 mu were afforested by the state, 950,000 mu were afforested by collectives, and over 1.1 million mu of privately owned hills were afforested by peasants. During the same period, people in Sichuan Province planted over 800 million trees -- more than 50 percent higher that the same period of 1989 -- and more that 70 percent of the trees were planted by individual households.

2. Administration of woodlands has been strengthened. In the course of launching the "three fixes" projects, many localities have handled large numbers of cases concerning unauthorized logging. They have reinstated and established the organs, and also formulated regulations, for protecting the local woodlands. The amount of unauthorized logging and number of forest fires has thus been greatly reduced. In Guizhou Province, various responsibility systems have been established for administering the 3.8 million mu of collective woodlands and economic forests, thus ending the previous situation under which ownership of the woodlands, the responsibilities for tending them and the benefits derived were all unclear. In Sichuan, no forest fire's have occured in six prefectures and cities over the past year.

3. Stability and unity have been enhanced. Thanks to the "three fixes," the causes of instability have been eliminated as many disputes over ownership of woodlands have been resolved, the chaos in certain localities of scrambling for wooded areas, cutting trees and fights between groups of armed people has been halted. As a result of settling the disputes over the ownership of woodlands between the state-owned lumber areas and communes and brigades, the state-owned lumber areas have been consolidated and their unity with the local communes and brigades has been enhanced.

XINHUA ON PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC DICTATORSHIP

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jun (XINHUA) -- China's State System Is Socialist State of the People's Democratic Dictatorship -- Lecture Series on the Draft Revised Constitution (3) [title of article]

The system of any nation contains two parts -- the state system and the political system. The so-called state system refers to the status of the various social classes in the state. It indicates the class nature of the state. China's state system is a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship as specified by the draft of the revised constitution.

China's constitution is of a socialist nature. Therefore, to confirm the class nature in China is an important aspect in the Chinese constitution. The 1954 Constitution stipulated: "The people's Republic of China is a people's democratic state led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants." The 1975 Constitution and 1978 Constitution stipulated: "The people's Republic of China is a socialist state of the dictatorship of the proletariat led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants." The draft of the revised constitution this time has amended the relaeted stipulation of the 1978 Constitution. It says: "The People's Republic of China is a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance or workers and peasants." That is to say that the draft of the revised constitution has amended "the socialist state of the dictatorship of the proletariat" specified in the 1978 Consittution to "the socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship."

Why does the draft of the revised constitution make such a stipulation? The most fundamental point is that such wording about the people's democratic dictatorship will reflect the special features of Chinese history and conform with the state of affairs in China even better.

1. The people's democratic dictatorship is a creation of the Communist Party of China and a product of the combination of the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism and the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution. In proposing the theories of the dictatorship of the proletariat, Marx and Engels had assumed that the dictatorship of the proletariat, could be exercised in two forms: the form of "direct achievement" and the form of "indirect achievement." In the course of leading the Russian Revolution, Lenin had put forward the idea of forming worker-peasant alliance. However, in the course of leading the Chinese revolution, the Communist Party of China has not only formed a firm worker-peasant alliance, but also established the anti-imperialist and antifeudalist united front on the basis of the worker-peasant alliance by combining the urban petit bourgeoisie with the national bourgeoisie. Based on the peculiarity of the Chinese revolution, Comrade Mao Zedong made a proposal to establish the people's democratic dictatorship led by the proletariat and based on the worker-peasant alliance. The "Common Program" that played the role of the constitution in the early years of the People's Republic of China had reaffirmed this proposal. We can see from this that the people's democratic dictatorship has reflected the historic characteristics of the Chinese revolution.

2. After the founding of new China, the united front had remained intact. At that time, there were two forms of alliance: the worker-peasant alliance and the alliance formed on the basis of the worker-peasant alliance by the working people and the cooperative non-working people. After the completion of socialist transformation, the exploiting classes have been eliminated and the united front has become a broad alliance for all the socialist workers, the patriots who have supported socialism and the patriots who have upheld the reunification of the motherland. The political foundation for the united front has even been further expanded. At the same time, the targets of the dictatorship have been narrowed while the scope of democracy duly expanded. Therefore, such wording as the people's democratic dictatorship conforms with the actual conditions in China even better.

3. The people's democratic dictatorship combines the practice of carrying out democracy among the people with the practice of exercising dictatorship over the enemy. To adopt such wording as the people's democratic dictatorship not only can specifically manifest the class essence of China's state power, but also can guard against any distortion or any abuse of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

In its "preamble," the draft of the revised constitution points out: The people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants is the dictatorship of the proletariat. This statement is necessary, because China's people's democratic dictatorship is exercised by the working class through the leadership of its vanguard -- the Communist Party of China. It shoulders the proletarian mission of building socialism and realizing communism, and implements the policies of the proletariat. In addition, the above-mentioned statement can also correct some misunderstandings such as: whenever the people's democratic dictatorship is mentioned, it seems like such "dictatorship is no longer needed or such dictatorship is not the same as the dictatorship of the proletariat.

HONGQI ON REFORM OF TOP ADMINISTRATIVE ORGANS

[Article by Xu Chongde [6079 1504 1795]: "An Important Reform in the Supreme State Administrative Organs"]

[Text] The State Council of the PRC, or the central people's government, by means of exercising its supreme administrative power, handles our country's major domestic and foreign affairs and realizes the state function of the people's democratic dictatorship. The work of the State Council is directly related to the success or failure of our country's socialist modernization. Thus, the reform and perfection of the administrative system of the State Council is of far-reaching significance.

There are only three articles under the section "The State Council" in the present constitution, which was adopted in 1978. However, they have been increased to nine in the draft of the revised constitution (referred to below as the draft) after being revised, adapted and redrafted. The content is more substantial than the present constitution and represents a new development. Regarding the nature and status of the State Council: it is the executive organ of the highest organ of state power and is the supreme state administrative organ. This basic point was determined when our country's first socialist constitution was promulgated in 1954. The later two constitutions were formulated on the basis of the first one. The objective of this revision is to more perfectly display the above-mentioned nature of the State Council and further strengthen its status and give play to its role. This kind of revision on the one hand reflects the continuity of our country's consitutions and on the other hand shows the vitality of our country's organs of power, which are incessantly developing and perfecting.

Based on the original constitution, the draft has made great changes, mainly regarding: 1) the organization of the State Council; 2) the leadership system of the State Council itself; 3) the tenure of office of the State Council leading personnel; 4) the power and function of the State Council; 5) the establishment of an auditing organ. In addition, since the State Council is the organic constituent of the whole country's structure, the series of reforms of other organs, such as the enlargement of the function and power of the NPC and, in particular, the Standing Committee of the NPC, the restoration of the PRC chairman, the establishment of the Central Military Commission, and so on, will definitely exert certain influence on the structure and activities of the State Council. In short, the draft has reflected the reforms of the State Council in many ways and cannot be talked about in detail in this article. Let me give my view on several questions.

The change of the structure of the State Council proposed in the draft is a summation of experiences over a long time in the past and is also a reflection and affirmation of the results of the reforms in the structure of the State Council which are being carried out at present. The structure of the country's highest administrative organs has undergone three stages of development.

The first stage was the government administration council of 1949-54, which was a committee system. The council consisted of one premier, several vice premiers, a secretary general and several administrative councillors. Administrative councillors could hold concurrent posts as directors of council commissions or ministers, who were not necessarily administrative councillors. That is to say, the directors of council commissions or ministers were not necessarily members of the administration council. Such a regulation was made at that time because the administration coulcil had 30 subordinate ministries, committees, councils, departments and administrative offices. Besides the administrative councillors who did not belong to any ministries, if all the ministers and directors were administrative councilors, there would be too many administrative councillors. Thus, it would be more difficult to conduct administration council meetings. The structure and work methods of the administration council have provided valuable experience for the reform of the leadership system of the present State Council, the appointment of state councillors and the establishment of a standing committee of the State Council which consists of a premier, vice premiers, state councillors and a secretary general.

The second stage was a system stipulated in the 1954 Constitution. Under this system, the State Council consisted of a premier, several vice premiers, all ministers, directors of all commissions and a secretary general. This system lasted the longest. There have not been any changes except that the secretary general was deleted from being a member of the State Council in the 1975 and 1978 Constitutions. It was different from the structure of the administration council in that there were no committee members holding either concurrent posts as ministers or ministers without portfolio; and all ministers and directors of commissions were without exception members of the State Council. Therefore, we called this an organizational form of ministerial meeting.

The advantages of this system were that all ministers of the State Council and directors of all commissions were members of the plenary meetings of the State Council. They could participate in the critical discussions of matters of overall importance under the charge of the State Council. Such a form, in principle, is still kept by the current draft of the revised constitution.

The structure of the State Council stipulated in this draft of the constitution is the third stage of the development of our country's highest administrative organs. Looking at article No 86 of the draft -- members of the State Council -- it is different from both the administration council and the original State Council. It is based on the two kinds of structures which have been practiced by the country's highest administrative organs since the founding of the country and has absorbed their strong points. It is also a development of the former structure. In accordance with the stipulation of the draft, the leadership system of the State Council itself after being reformed is called the premier responsibility system. This system is a form of what we usually refer to as a directors responsibility system. Its main characteristics are:

First, the number of vice premiers is reduced to the minimum, appointing state councillors so that the leadership system is more centralized. The draft explicitly points out: "The premier directs the work of the State Council. The vice premiers and state councillors assist the premier in his work." This shows that the premier holds the dominant post in the leadership system of the State Council although the State Council is under collective leadership. The vice premiers and the state councillors are assistants of the premier. The state councillors are entrusted by the premier to be in charge of certain work and certain major tasks. They are also entrusted by the premier to carry out important foreign activities.

Second, the draft stipulates that "the premier calls and presides over the regular meetings and the plenary meetings of the State Council." This kind of meeting is different from that of other organs which practice the collegiate system of work procedure and method of making decisions. The status of each member of the organs which practice the collegiate system is fundamentally equal. While making decisions, each member has the same right to vote. But it is different in the premier responsibility system. The premier not only has the power to call and preside over the regular meetings and plenary meetings of the State Council, but also has the power to gather correct opinions and make the decision of the State Council during the meetings in which major problems are discussed fully by all members.

Third, the draft stipulates that "the premier is to be appointed by the chairman of the People's Republic of China." The chairman appoints the premier with the approval of the NPC. In the past, people have not paid much attention to the significance of such procedures. As a matter of fact, the chairman is the symbol and representative of the state. Therefore, the premier actually receives the mandate from the state. He is to represent the interests of the people in organizing the government and in bearing the responsibility of managing state affairs and leading the highest administrative organ. In the future, after the restoration of the post of chairman of the PRC, this solemn legal procedure of appointing the premier will also be restored and the responsibilities of the premier will be made more explicit. On the other hand, the premier has the right to propose to the highest organ of state power the appointment of State Council vice premiers, state councillors, ministers, directors of various commissions, the chief auditor and the secretary general. When he thinks necessary, the premier the dismissal of the function and power of these people. In light of this, we see that the administrative responsibilities of all people involved are clearly laid down.

It can be readily seen that the draft has changed the former leadership system of committee members and the system of ministerial meetings. It has further strengthened the status and duties of the premier. Undoubtedly, this is a significant change needed to meet the objective demands of the four modernizations drive. It has realized the new development of our country's administrative and management system.

Collective management is feasible under certain conditions. Lenin has figuratively called such a system a "preparatory class" in learning management. ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 30, p 420) It is, however, liable to create multiple leadership with no one assuming ultimate responsibility. According to Lenin, the system of collective leadership should be transmitted to the system of individual responsibility. This is a demand of the objective nature of execution and administration. In the light of our country's situation, the State Council is the executive organ of the highest organ of state power and the State Council enforces the laws and decrees formulated as a result of the collective discussions of the NPC and its Standing Committee. When the state decisions which are made on a democratic basis by means of collective discussions are to be enforced, the executive organs must combine forces and rapidly implement them and demand explicit personal responsibilities in the course of enforcement. Otherwise, the enforcement of the laws and decrees will be procrastinated and thus be unable to bring about prompt and correct results. Lenin has acutely pointed out: "At best, corporate management involves a tremendous waste of forces and is not suited to the rapid and accurate work demanded by the conditions of centralized large-scale industry." ("Collected Works of Lenin" vol 30, p 279) He also pointed out: "The main principle of administration is -- a certain person is fully responsible for some specified work." ("Collected Works of Lenin", vol 36, p 554) Lenin's expositions are perfectly correct. Our country's State Council shoulders the heavy task of organizing and realizing the socialist modernization drive. It leads all ministries, all commissions in local people's governments at all levels in their work, leads in an all-round way and manages the state's economy, finance, monetary affairs, commerce, education, science, culture, public health, sports, civil affairs, public security, diplomatic activities, state defense, urban and rural construction, Overseas Chinese affairs and so forth. Under the circumstances that the objective situation is ever changing, the socialist cause is rapidly developing, both domestic and foreign work are tough and complicated and various problems and all kinds of contradictions are cropping up one after another, if we do not clarify the responsibilities of the individuals, strengthen the authority of the premier or stress a high degree of centralization on the basis of democracy, the State Council will not be able to give play to its high efficiency or to successfully fulfill the tough tasks.

As viewed from our country's current situation of administration and management, there really exist the problems of overstaffing in government organizations. There are more hands than are needed, complicated work procedures, petty disputes, incidences of shifting responsibilities onto others and doing things in a sluggish way, and not being responsible for work. All this is out of tune with the demands for socialist modernization and is totally intolerable. The future of our country will be dreadful to contemplate if we continue to content ourselves with endless collective discussions, produce a tremendous amount of documents, and spend a lot of time reading documents, or if we lack appropriate centralism and make many different policies which contradict each other. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that, in a certain sense, reform of the government structure is a revolution. If we want to create more prospects for our cause, we must carry out this important reform with revolutionary spirit. The draft explicitly pointed out that "the State Council implements the premier responsibility system." This is one of the essential and correct measures for launching this revolution.

Some people think that the premier responsibility system contradicts democratic centralism. They think that the premier responsibility system is antagonistic to the system of democratic centralism. This is a purely wrong understanding. There was a similar view when Soviet Russia discussed the question of restructuring in 1918. At that time and in accordance with such a view, Lenin clearly expounded on the theory that collective discussion and the setting up of a strict responsibility system are two categories of democratic functions, and he solemnly pointed out that it is extremely wrong to hold the view that a strict responsibility system is incompatible with the democratic system and collective management.

As viewed from the draft of the revised constitution, the premier responsibility system is actually not contradictory to the system of democratic centralism in principle. It is because under the premier responsibility system, decisions on major problems are to be discussed by all members during the regular meetings of the State Council and the plenary meetings of the State Council. The regular meetings of the State Council play a special role in exercising collective leadership. As Comrade Zhao Ziyang said in the "Report on Problems of Reforming Structure of the State Council:" "The regular meeting of the State Council is the routine leading organization of the State Council. Under the direction of the premier, it is responsible for leading various kinds of important work within the scope of power of the State Council and making decisions." In light of this, the premier responsibility system is set up on the basis of giving play to the role of the collective and is a leading cadres' responsibility system which is integrated with the collective. Lenin said: "We need committees to discuss certain basic problems and personal responsibility and personal leadership to avoid procrastination and shirking of responsibility." ("Collected Works of Lenin" vol 30, p 213) Our country's premier responsibility system in the State Council is exactly like this. It is, certainly, a system of centralism; however, it is a system of centralism on a democratic basis and is a form to manifest the system of democratic centralism. Therefore, it conforms with our country's basic organizational principles.

Similarly, all ministries and commissions which are subordinate to the State Council practice the system of decision-making by the leading cadre. Regarding this single point, we have always been working in compliance with it although there was no written stipulation in the constitution. However, it is clearly stipulated in the draft that "all ministries and all commissions practice the minister or director responsibility system." Now that the number of deputy positions and vacant positions is reduced, the personal responsibility of the department heads will become greater in actual work.

Among the various subordinate departments of the State Council, there is the establishment of the auditing organ which is to independently exercise the power of auditing and supervision under the leadership of the chief auditor. This is a new characteristic of the draft on reform of the administrative organs. By means of supervising the accounting procedures and the qualifications of the auditors themselves, the auditing organ exercises overall supervision over financial and economic activities. Therefore, the auditing department should be separated from the department of financial accounting in modern economic management. The objective of auditing supervision is to ensure that the state's capital is more rationally and legally gathered and utilized and that it brings better economic benefits. It also helps to strictly enforce financial discipline and prevents possible flaws that may occur in the state's financial and economic activities and is thus conducive to the socialist modernization drive.

Since ours is a vast country with a dense population, there are several hundreds of thousands of enterprises and an enormous number of work units and administrative organs, and it is necessary to practically protect the state's huge capital and property. For many years in the past, because there was neither a perfect legal system nor a complete auditing system or an organ in charge of auditing supervision, unsavory trends appeared in the area of financial and economic management. There was also malpractice which made serious inroads on the state's property. Thus, it is extremely necessary to perfect the auditing system and set up an independent organ in charge of auditing supervision. In the wake of the development of socialist construction, and in the wake of the expansion of the decisionmaking rights in the localities, departments and enterprises and the adoption of open economic policies, new contradictions crop up incessantly, and thus the demand for the establishment of an organ in charge of auditing supervision has become more urgent. The draft stipulated: "The State Council will establish auditing organs to audit and supervise finance and the financial revenue and expenditure of the people's government at all levels and of the financial and monetary organizations, enterprises, institutions and organizations under the people's government." This complies with the demand of China's financial and economic management and the building of the four modernizations.

In order to continue to make the best possible use of the State Council and bring the role of the highest administrative organ into full play, the draft has, to a certain extent, expanded the authority of the State Council. One relatively important item is that the State Council has the authority to stipulate and approve administrative laws and regulations. The State Council is the executive organ of the highest organ of state power. In the course of carrying out laws and decrees, the State Council must make administrative strategic decisions and promulgate regulatory documents in accordance with the actual complicated situations. This is called administrative laws and regulations. This is the first concept stipulated in the draft on China's administrative laws and regulations. In our actual life, the administrative laws and regulations deal with a wide range of things. According to the stipulation of the draft, the State Council has the authority to use the administrative laws and regulations to define the obligations and duties of all ministries and commissions. This shows that the authority of the State Council has expanded.

As a matter of fact, that the State Council has the authority to stipulate and approve administrative laws and regulations does not mean that the State Council has legislative power, nor does it mean that the State Council is a legislative body. Although determined by the nature and characteristic of the administrative power, in actuality, the quantity of administrative laws and regulations is much more than laws and decrees. However, administrative laws and regulations are after all different in principle from laws and decrees. First, laws and decrees are stipulated by the highest organ of state power. In China, only the NPC and its Standing Committee, which are state legislative organs, can exercise state legislative power. Moreover, administrative laws and regulations are but administrative regulations promulgated by the State Council in the course of implementing the law so that the law will be carried out smoothly. Second, from the binding force and compelling force's point of view, although administrative laws and regulations are almost similar to laws and decrees, administrative laws and regulations must abide by laws and decrees and must not contravene the law. If there is any contradiction, the NPC Standing Committee can change and repeal the administrative laws and regulations. The difference between administrative laws and regulations and laws and decrees is manifested in the subordinate nature of the State Council to the highest organ of state power. In China, democratic centralism and the system of "integrating discussions with action," are the basic principles of the socialist political system. Even though this is the fact, the draft has, for the first time, defined the status of administrative laws and regulations in the constitution. We cannot deny that this is an important feature.

The reform of China's highest administrative organ manifested in the draft of the revised constitution is very important. We can predict that the working system of China's government will continue to improve and its efficiency will be greatly enhanced. This will certainly perfect and strengthen the organization and leadership of the socialist modernization.

ANHUI REAPS BUMPER WHEAT, RAPESEED HARVESTS

[By XINHUA Correspondent Tian Wenxi]

[Excerpts] Hefei, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- By successfully combating various natural calamities, Anhui Province has again reaped a bumper harvest of wheat and rapeseed this year on the basis of last year's record harvest. The province's total output of wheat and rapeseed exceeds 9.5 billion jin and 1.74 billion jin respectively. This represents an increase of 4 percent for wheat and 34 percent for rapeseed in comparison with last year's record level. Growth in production is reported for most of Anhui Province's 70 counties, except for a few that have suffered from serious disasters.

After reaping a bumper agricultural harvest for 3 consecutive years, Chuxian Prefecture has again increased the total output of wheat and rapeseed this year by 20 and 35 percent respectively compared to last year.

Anhui Province is one of the principal wheat - and rapeseed-producing areas in China. In order to realize a bumper harvest of wheat and rapeseed this summer, the provincial CCP committee promptly convened an experience-exchange meeting last summer in the wake of a bumper harvest. Besides summing up experience and commending the advanced, the meeting worked out various effective measures, such as improving the techniques of topdressing and methods for disease and pest control, to boost production.

ANHUI STEPS UP SUMMER CROP PROCUREMENT WORK

[Report: "Fine Situation of Bumper Summer Grain and Oil Crop Harvest in Anhui; Provincial Grain Departments Take Steps To Increase Procurement"]

[Text] According to XINHUA, in the face of the excellent situation of bumper summer grain and oil-bearing crop harvests, the Anhui provincial grain departments have taken effective steps to increase procurement somewhat. Summer grain and oil crop output in the province is estimated to exceed that of the great bumper year of 1981. At present, the rapeseed has started to come into the storehouses, while harvesting of most of the summer grain is complete. Procurement and storage work is about to unfold all around. The resources of the Anhui peasants have been relatively sound following last year's bumper harvest. A situation of rapid momentum and concentration in time may arise in summer grain and oil crop storage work. The provincial people's government has demanded that the staff and workers of the grain departments make full ideological and material preparations; they must organize sales work according to voucher and delivery of grain according to plan on the one hand and resolutely carry out their work to the end on the other. All grain and oil that is up to standard must be procured as it comes in, and it is necessary to investigate responsilitity in cases of unnecessary failure to procure it.

Getting a good grasp of allocation and transfer of grain and oil is a major measure adopted by Anhui Province this year to solve the problem of difficulties in selling grain due to shortage of granaries in some places. The provincial grain department decided to ship out grain and oil that should be allocated and transferred elsewhere as soon as possible, before the onset of the busy procurement period, and to do everything possible to make granaries available for increasing the crop procurement. The provincial government also held a special meeting of the railroad, highway, and waterway transport and other departments to arrange the safe transport of grain and oil being allocated and transferred elsewhere.

To ensure that, in the wake of this year's bumper summer harvest, crop failures are made up for by bumper harvests, the provincial grain departments have decided to further do a good job in purchase and sales at negotiated prices after the completion of the state procurement and excess procurement quotas. Last year, under the premise of upholding the policy of state monopoly in purchase and sales of grain and oil, the Wuhe County grain departments sold, in excess of the plan, 12 million jin of grain and 4.8 million jin of oil at negotiated prices to 80 units in 18 provinces and municipalities, making a net profit of 970,000 yuan. Apart from reversing the situation of operating at a loss in managing grain and oil, this move also effectively solved the peasants' problem of "finding it difficult to sell their grain." The Anhui Provincial CCP Committee recently popularized this county's experience. Grain departments in the province have created various new and convenient grain procurement methods, so that the masses need not form long queues to sell their grain. The He County Chengguan grain station and the peasants have discussed and formulated a method for "procurement by appointment, arrival at the station at a certain time, sale of grain at a certain point, reception at a certain point, and weighing and storage at a certain point." As a result, the peasants only have to queue once, spending only 10 minutes or so, before receiving their cash and payment in kind to take home.

OW190625 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Excerpts] The Jiangxi Provincial People's Government called an urgent meeting on the morning of 18 June to discuss measures to be taken against the flood. Governor Bai Dongcai presided over the meeting, which was attended by Liu Zhonghou, deputy secretary of the provincial CCP committee and general commander of the provincial flood prevention command, and the principal responsible comrades of the various provincial departments and bureaus.

The meeting heard a report of the provincial flood prevention office on the situation regarding rainfall, floods, flood control works in danger and efforts made to deal with emergencies in the past few days, and studied the priority problem of rushing to deal with flood emergencies and carrying out relief work in the areas of the Fu He valley.

Governor Bai emphatically pointed out that leaders of all localities and departments must (?give priority to) combating the flood. [Words indistinct] duties should be clearly defined and everyone should act in coordination with others through a division of work and responsibility in fighting the flood. Work should be done fully and well with respect to human, material and financial resources and public opinion so as to win a victory in the fight against the flood.

It is mandatory to institute a system of personal responsibility and maintain rigid organizational discipline. Investigations should be carried out to affix responsibility and take measures accordingly if there should be any loss as a result of improper direction, failure to exercise effective leadership or indecision and delay. All units directly under the province should form work teams and send them down to help in combating flood and in relief work.

In the same afternoon, leading comrades Bai Dongcai, Liu Zhonghou and Lu Mingqing, a leader of the provincial military district, personally went to the flood-fighting front along the Fu He, where they directed the efforts in dealing with the flood emergencies and comforted victims of the flood. Vice Governors Xu Qin and Zhang Guozhen also went separately to the flood-fighting front to study and decide on the ways to channel the floodwater.

According to the correspondents and reporters of this station, incessant rainstorms in the areas along the upper reaches of the Fu He in the past few days have caused the river's water level to rise sharply. By 18 June, the waters of the river at the (Jiefang) bridge surged as high as 41.2 meters, which was close to the highest peak ever recorded there. At present, the river is continuing to rise.

The situation of the flood demands action. In coordination with the judicial and public security organs, various departments have conducted internal and external investigations and exposed and brought to justice a number of big and serious cases including crimes committed by party member cadres. Comrade (Wang Yaoshan) said: Facts exposed in the struggle show that today's economic crimes are far more serious than in the priod of themovement of the three antis, so serious that resolute actions against them have become imperative. OW180258 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Excerpts] Deputies attending the Fourth Session of the Fifth Zhejiang Provincial People's Congress and members attending the fourth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee have in the past few days concentrated their efforts on studying and discussing the draft revised constitution. Speaking passionately at the panel discussions, they pledged to set a good example for the people in studying and discussing the draft revised constitution. They pointed out that it is imperative to include the four fundamental principles in the preamble as the basic rules that the people of the whole country must follow.

NPC Deputy (Luo Changgeng) said: In the past century many patriots with lofty ideals tried their utmost to reform the Chinese social system, but none succeeded. Only under the leadership of the CCP and guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought can China embark on the socialist road and become strong and prosperous. Historical facts amply prove that adherence to the four fundamental principles is the foundation for building our country.

The deputies to the people's congress and members of the CPPCC committee enthusiastically discussed the articles about the system of people's democratic dictatorship in China and rights of the people. (Luo Xuebao), deputy and lathe operator of the Jiaxing No 2 woolen mill, said: The draft revised constitution once again affirms the leading role of the working class and stipulates, for the first time, the right of workers and staff to take part in the management of enterprises through workers' congresses and other forms. This is an important event. As a veteran worker, I will take the lead in training and teaching young workers so that they can become competent members of the leading class.

Many CPPCC members were delighted to note that the draft revised constitution, for the first time, includes the Chinese People's Political Consultatie Conference and its role. Cai Bao, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee; (Sheng Chuankai), member of its standing committee; and other members said: As CPPCC members, we should take various means to unite more people and continuously expand the ranks of the united front in order to contribute to the four modernizations.

[Summary] (Wang Gaixiang), deputy director of the import and export office of the Sichuan provincial light industry bureau; (Zhang Yibo), manager of the Chongqing clock and watch industrial company; and other people have carried out unlawful and criminal activities while on trips abroad and before and after the trips. They obtained an enormous sum of public funds by deception. The provincial procuratorate decided to arrest (Wang Gaixiang), (Zhang Yibo) and (Yang Fukui), the latter being an engineer from the Chengdu measuring and cutting tools plant, whose crimes were serious, in accordance with the law.

"From 6 January to 12 February 1981, when (Wang Gaixiang), (Zhang Yibo) and other people went to Switzerland to investigate clock and watch industrial production and technology, they took advantage of the upward revaluation of the dollar to obtain and privately share among themselves 1,000 francs, which was the difference between the actual exchange for some 90,000 Swiss francs at four exchange rates in Switzerland and the exchange at the low exchange rate. Moreover, under the excuse of additional living expenses, they practiced false accounting on bank notes. They practiced fraud. With packing lists as invoices, they made fraudulent applications and claims. According to preliminary investigation and verification, (Wang Gaixiang), (Zhang Yibo) and other people fraudulently obtained some 20,000 Swiss francs. In the middle of April and at the beginning of May, the provincial procuratorate decided to successively arrest (Wang Gaixiang), (Zhang Yibo) and (Yang Fukui), the engineer from the Chengdu measuring and cutting tools plant, who served as an interpreter while on trips abroad, in accordance with the law. After the crimes of (Wang Gaixiang) and the other people are clearly investigated and verified, the judicial organ will deal with them in accordance with the law.

SICHUAN COMMUNE URGES PEASANTS TO BECOME RICH

[Text] According to SICHUAN RIBAO, the CCP committee of the Deyuan people's commune, Pixian County, recently issued honor certificates to 136 peasant households who became rich through hard work, to boost their enthusiasm both in production and in getting rich through hard work.

Recently, some people in this commune wrongly confused getting rich through hard work with illegal economic activities. In some production brigades, even such things as hitting at and restricting the development of the households who tried to become rich through hard work have occurred. For fear that the party's economic policy will change, some commune members dare not go on to develop sideline production and the diversified economy. In order to help the cadres and the commune members draw a correct distinction between becoming rich through hard work and economic crimes, and to encourage the commune members to get rich through hard work, the commune CCP committee issued honor certificates to 136 households who received an income of over 1,000 yuan last year from sideline production and from developing the diversified economy. The commune members who attended the ceremony to issue certificates then said that we must have firm faith in the party's economic policies and resolutely follow the road of becoming rich through hard work, so that we can make more contributions to the country and the collective.

SICHUAN HOLDS MEETING ON GRADUATE ASSIGNMENT

[Text] Recently the Sichuan provincial personnel bureau and the provincial higher education bureau jointly held a meeting on the allocation and assignment of this province's 1982 graduates from universities and colleges, including postgraduates who have completed their prescribed courses. The meeting put forth six specific measures to ensure the smooth progress of the allocation of this year's graduates of institutes of higher education.

First, leading cadres at all levels and comrades who take part in the work of allocating graduates must persist in principles, handle matters impartially and not practice favoritism. They must act as models in implementing the policies and all regulations of the party. They are strictly prohibited from taking advantage of their position and power to get back-door benefits, from offering and receiving bribes and from using crooked ways to interfere with the work of allocating graduates. Responsible persons are not allowed to use any means to try to get graduates from specific schools or to try to allocate children of their relatives and friends to units and places designated by them.

Second, work personnel at all levels who are responsible for the work of allocating graduates must strictly observe security discipline. Before the formal publication of the program for allocation and the specific name list, relevant departments are not allowed to divulge to the public any specific information while they are studying the name list of assigned graduates.

Third, graduates are not allowed to disregard the state plan for allocation and to find units to work in by themselves. No units or individuals are allowed to meet the graduates' incorrect needs of finding units to work in by themselves.

Fourth, in accordance with the principle of "studying for the purpose of application" and with the rational requirements of employing units and the practical situation of graduates, and with reference to the wishes of applicants, schools must rationally work out the name list of assigned graduates. We must appoint and allocate people on their merits and allocate graduates who develop morally, intellectually and physically and excel morally and academically, to posts which the state urgently needs and which can bring their specialities into play.

Fifth, in accordance with the regulations of relevant documents, it is necessary to disqualify graduates from allocation who disregard the needs of the state, persist in their own unreasonable demands and continue to refuse to accept allocation after receiving education. Units under the system of ownership by the whole people are not allowed to employ them within 5 years.

Sixth, it is hoped that all graduates will spontaneously observe the foregoing regulations and demands and supervise each other. It is imperative to report unlawful incidents of interference with and sabotage of the work of allocating graduates to discipline inspection departments. It is essential to promptly investigate and verify the cases and, in accordance with the seriousness of these cases, to criticize and educate offenders and take disciplinary action against them where necessary. Offenders whose mistakes are especially serious and who violate criminal law must be punished in accordance with the law.

[Text] The provincial forum on enterprise consolidation which ended on 18 June noted that the major tasks for our future enterprise consolidation are to conscientously improve and build leading bodies and further promote and improve economic responsibility systems and staff according to the fixed number of personnel.

The forum noted: In enterprise consolidation, we should boldly staff leading bodies with fine young and middle-aged cadres and remove those who are incompetent to make leading bodies revolutionized, younger, knowledgeable and professional. At the same time, we should do a good job in making arrangements for veteran cadres to retreat to the second line. When this is done, we whould promote and improve economic responsibility systems. All enterprises in the province should learn form the experiences of the Shou Du Iron and Steel Company to designate each work post and individual to assume certain production, technical and financial responsibilities. We should staff work units according to the fixed number of personnel. This should be done group after group at different times. Surplus manpower should be transerred from their production posts to engage in other lines of production or be organized to attend rotational training classes to raise their productivity.

Attending the forum were responsible persons of pertinent prefectural, autonomous prefectural, municipal and provincial offices and bureaus, responsible persons of the first group of key enterprises to be consolidated and responsible persons of other enterprises.

Lanzhou rolling stock plant, the provincial coal industrial administration bureau and Jiuquan Prefecture's (Hexi) chemical industrial plant introduced their consolidation experiences at the forum.

Xiao Jianguang, secretary of the provincial CCP Committee and deputy governor, spoke at the forum.

Commentary on Consolidation

SK211052 Lanzhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 20 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Continue To Grasp Enterprise Consolidation Firmly"]

[Excerpt] Enterprise consolidation is progressing smoothly in our province, and initial achievements have been scored. It is, however, only a beginning. Our tasks are still very arduous. We should continue to grasp it firmly.

In consolidating enterprises we should first correct our thinking. Thinking that our tasks are too heavy and we are too busy to conduct enterprise consolidation or that enterprise consolidation is done every year but [words indistinct] are wrong. We should overcome such ideas. We should make it clear that comprehensively consolidating enterprises to put them in order through the improvement of leading bodies, workers contingents, managerial systems and labor and financial discipline is very important to the improvement of enterprise economic results and enterprise development.

Enterprise consolidation should be done by the existing leading bodies and the masses of workers under the leadership of the party organizations of the enterprises. Party committees of enterprises should stand on the forefront of the enterprise consolidation work and grasp it boldly. Investigation groups sent by higher levels to enterprises should refrain from either standing on ceremony or doing everything themselves. They should work in coordination with the party committees of enterprises to investigate, study and sum up experiences and lessons and solve the problems arising in the course of consolidation in a timely manner to promote enterprise consolidation in a steady and sound way.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEMS

[Text] Speaking at the provincial rural work forum which ended on 18 June, Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Feng Jixin pointed out: At present we must concentrate forces to sum up and perfect the various types of production responsibility system.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: More than 3 years of practice have proven that the development of the agricultural production responsibility systems in Gansu is healthy and is affirmed and endorsed by the cadres and masses. The various types of production responsibility system have played a positive role in reviving and stimulating agricultural production. They displayed their power in 1980, a year of good weather, and were tested in the particularly great natural disasters of 1981. They have promoted agricultural revival and development in areas in difficulties and also stimulated successive increases of production and bumper harvests in places where the production foundation was already relatively good.

There are many advantages in practicing responsibility systems. The two most fundamental ones are as follows: First, they have done away with the erroneous methods of eating out of a big pot and practicing egalitarianism. The peasants' enthusiasm for production has been truly stimulated, and they are full of confidence in eliminating poverty and getting rich. Second, as a result of more than 3 years of practice and probing, we have found an appropriate management method for organizing the peasants to carry out socialist collective agricultural production and opened up a broad road for future great development of the rural productive force.

Of course, we have only been operating the responsibility systems for 2 or 3 years, and it is unrealistic to demand that they rapidly transform the difficult situation that had formed over many years. We cannot censure the responsibility systems on that score, and still less can we harbor doubts and hesitations about them.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: At present we must shift the work focus to summing up and perfecting these systems and presistently operate the systems for a long time. Perfecting the responsibility systems and establishing a corresponding management system is much more difficult that choosing and deciding on the form of responsibility system; much more work and time are required. In the wake of the development of the productive force, new problems will crop up in practice, and we must ceaselessly work to solve them. It can be said that perfecting the responsibility systems is a long-term and regular task.

At present, in the course of perfecting the responsibility systems, we must further seriously study the spirit of the central documents, carry out in-depth education in keeping two things unchanged and simultaneously taking care of the interests of three parties, continue to eliminate leftist influence, and emancipate our minds. At the same time we must pay attention to solving the problem of trends of liberalization. We must persistently seek truth from facts, follow the mass line, and avoid treating all cases the same regardless of the circumstances. We must promptly guide the enthusiasm stimulated by the responsibility systems into developing the productive force.

Comrade Fang Jixin also spoke on issues of planting trees and grass, rectifying the basic-level organizations, paying attention to work methods, and strengthening leadership over rural work.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN SPEAKS ON CENSUS WORK

[Text] Gansu Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Feng Jixin spoke at a telephone conference on provincial census work convened by the provincial CCP committee and government on the evening of 18 June.

He said: We must further strengthen leadership, set up strict quality control responsibility systems, and carry out the census in a thoroughly sound way.

Comrade Feng Jixin stressed: We must pay particular attention to strengthening leadership at the commune level. He said: In the census registration stage, the commune level is right in the frontline. This level is responsible for training enumerators and organizing census registration. These are two arduous tasks. There can be no reliable guarantee for the accuracy of census data without a leadership backbone force familiar with local conditions, earnest in work, and with a knowledge of census work, which could ensure quality right from the grassroots. Comrade Feng Jixin demanded that all prefectures and counties carry out a strict inspection of the state of leadership of the commune-level census offices and the quality of their professional backbone force. Incompetents must be immediately replaced. The force must be strengthened wherever it is weak, and further training must be carried out for those not sufficiently familiar with professional work. Comrade Feng Jixin stressed: We must ensure success all in one go for the census registration. In accordance with the quality acceptance criteria laid down by the state, we must decide on a whole series of specific measures for avoiding errors, together with the corresponding responsibility systems.

Comrade Feng Jixin demanded that the party and government leaders at all levels put census work at the top of their agenda and mobilize and organize the forces of all sectors to grasp the census as a major affair. Provincial CCP Committee Deputy Secretary (Liu Bin) presided at the meeting. Vice Governor Wu Junyang gave specific arrangements for the provincial census at the meeting.

SHAANXI MEETING ON CONSTITUTION STUDY PROBLEMS

[Summary] The Shaanxi Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee held a meeting on 17 and 18 June to listen to reports from the prefectures and municipalities on the situation in studying and discussing the draft of the revised constitution. The meeting focused on the problem of study and discussion by the rural cadres and peasants.

The reports indicated that the prefectures and municipalities have scored a certain degree of success in carrying out study and discussions. "However, the main planned and organized study and discussion carried out under leadership is still confined to the leadership organs and the cadres of enterprises and other units. The work has hardly got going at all in the rural areas. Not enough has been done to organize and train propagandists." The meeting therefore stressed: "The leadership at all levels must fully understand the great importance of having the whole people study the draft of the revised constitution, put this work in an important position on their agenda, assign people to take charge of it and get a really good grasp of it."

Study and discussion in the rural areas must be extensively launched after the current busy summer farmwork period. Secondary school pupils should be organized to study and discuss the draft before the summer vacation. Workers and urban residents must also be organized for the study and discussion. The meeting also stressed that forums and meetings should be held at all levels to solicit people's views on the draft.

KUOMINTANG ISSUES POLITICAL STATEMENT ON SPEECHES

[Text] Taipei, 16 Jun (CNA) -- The Chinese Kuomintang today issued a political statement entitled "Intensify Consciousness Over the Possible Perils the Nation Faces, Actively Promote Production, Achieve Unity and Work Hard, and Reopen a New Situation -- Our Understanding of the Important Speech Delivered by Chairman Chiang Ching-kuo and Appropriate Actions Thereon on Our Part." The text of the political statement reads as follows:

I.

Since our country and our party are at a difficult, but hopefully crucial, moment, our party's chariman, Chiang, delivered a speech at the Central Standing Committee session on 2 June entitled "Unite and Work Hard To Create a Bright Future," calling on all comrades to enhance their confidence, ambition and moral fortitude and work harder than ever before. At the same time, he also issued firm instructions for carrying out future tasks in the face of the present economic, military, diplomatic, political and social problems. In order to popularize the main concept and guidelines laid down by this speech, he called on all comrades and compatriots, on different occasions and in different forms, to achieve unity and create a new situation.

At the Central Standing Committee session on 9 June, Chairman Chiang praised President Reagan's farsighted speech to the British Parliament, in which President Reagan called for a worldwide democratic movement and for efforts to put Marxism-Leninism on "the ash heap of history." Chairman Chiang held: We, and all people who cherish freedom and democracy in the world, will support this worldwide call made by President Reagan and turn it into actual deeds. Thus, from this we will score further new developments and perform new deeds in our struggle against communism.

At an Executive Yuan session held on 3 June, Comrade Sun Yun-hsuan, premier of the Executive Yuan, immediately urged all departments and administrative personnel at provincial and municipal levels to implement this important instruction of an overall policy nature issued by the state leader and the chairman of the ruling party in analyzing the world situation and the state of affairs in the country. Once again, at the reception honoring participants in the 11th Sino-American conference on mainland China held on 10 June, he delivered a speech reaffirming the essential points of Chairman Chiang's speech. In his speech, Premier Sun also clearly pointed out our national policy and our stand and principle on the "problem concerning mainland China" and the problem of "unifying the nation with the three principles of the people" -- problems of great concern to the people of the world and compatriots at home and abroad. Premier Sun's speech promptly aroused attention abroad and helped compatriots at home and abroad to achieve a deeper understanding and enhance their confidence.

II.

In his 2 June speech Chairman Chiang said: Tremendous changes have taken place in the world situation and in the current situation in mainland China. In the face of many problems, we naturally take careful steps and proper measures. However, as long as we adhere to our national policy, adopt a firm stand, hold to our principles, handle our state affairs calmly, resolutely and courageously, and work hard to promote construction, no difficulty, complex environment or problem can possibly prevent us from continually marching forward toward our goal with giant strides. Chairman Chiang said: We should currently do the following economically, militarily, diplomatically, politically and in social affairs:

On the economic front, we still need to follow the policy of achieving growth and stability simultaneously in developing our economy. Now, our country is about to join the ranks of economically advanced countries. However, the worldwide economic recession has had some adverse effects on us. On the one hand, the government must exert every effort to surmount difficulties in the field of industry and commerce, while on the other hand, it must work with those in the fields of industry and commerce to strive to hasten the revitalization of the economy.

Militarily, although we are unafraid of the threat by communist bandits on the use of force, we must remain highly vigilant at all times, maintain an independent, advanced system of science and technology, strengthen our combat readiness and simultaneously develop army building and strengthen preparedness against war.

In foreign affairs, we must work harder to formulate plans, create new opportunities and open up new relations with foreign countries to ensure the existence and development of our country. At the same time, we must strengthen Sino-American relations, stick with the democratic camp, smash the communist bandits' united front tricks and ensure the stability and security and prosperity of the bastion island.

Politically, we have made considerable progress in forming our constitutional system of freedom and democracy. However, we must still examine and improve our political measures from time to time. There are also a few people in the country who fail to completely understand the present situation in the state. They have consciously or unconsciously become tools to cause the disintegration of the nation. Therefore, politically we must unite with all the people, increase our strength by achieving unity and strive to fulfill our national goal.

Regarding social affairs, our state is currently in difficulties. We are faced with a formidable enemy. All compatriots must practice strict frugality and create fine social ethics. It is up to our party, government, the educational circles and mass media organizations to improve public morals, intensify consciousness over possible perils the country faces, and inspire a lively and vigorous social climate in order to hasten the progress of our society.

In concluding his speech, Chairman Chiang greatly encouraged all compatriots and comrades, saying: Our continuous efforts to fight for China's future and the mode of life for the Chinese people will never be influenced by countries in the international arena who intrigue against each other. We must stand high and see far, march boldly forward, unite as one under the great target of "unifying China with the three principles of the people" and achieve the goal of our era.

In his speech, entitled "The China Issue and China's Reunification," Premier Sun Yun-hsian solemnly pointed out: Studies of mainland China should focus on understanding the true wishes of the Chinese people and the overall trend of China's future development. We must transform Chinese studies from a field of study of the Chinese Communist regime alone to one dealing with the direction and processes of the modernization of the Chinese nation as a whole. If we can agree on this, then we may want to shift our attention from the study of the conduct of Chinese Communist leaders to that of the response of Chinese culture and society to the communist system. Only by following this path can we unravel the true nature of evolving Chinese problems and find the key to a deeper understanding of the common inner aspirations of the Chinese people.

The "Taiwan issue," as it is termed by people in the world, is a view that puts the cart before the horse. Free China on Taiwan has achieved progress, prosperity and stability, and its people enjoy a happy life. Therefore, it does not constitute an issue. The real issue is that of mainland China. This is what the Free World calls the China issue -- the issue of preference for a strong, hostile Communist China or a peace-loving non-Communist China. If a non-Communist China is to be preferred, the Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait should be allowed to make their own choice. In other words, we should leave the problem of China's future to a decision by the Chinese people.

Premier Sun's speech also dealt with the Chinese Communist regime's nine-point "peace proposal," a united front tactic, and our attitude toward it.

Regarding Chinese reunification, free China calls for "Chinese reunification under the three principles of the people," whereas the Chinese Communist regime has launched a united front peace offensive in an attempt to communize free China. Therefore, the central question at present is whether a "democratic and free China" or a Communist and despotic China" can best serve the interests of the Chinese people and the Free World.

Negotiations are another form of communist struggle. The Chinese Communists have clamored for "peace" and "unification" in an attempt to implement their conspiracy to isolate us by pulling the wool over the eyes of the Free World. We have learned many traumatic lessons and will not take the communist bandits' words lightly again.

The Chinese Communists have recently raised the view that "the supply of weapons to the Republic of China on Taiwan will strengthen its stand against peace talks." This is an attempt to deceive the United States. We hope that the Free World and the Government of the United States will recognize the Chinese Communist regime's conspiracy of attempting to disarm free China and communize its people through diplomatic pressure. The Free World should never be lured into making further concession by the Chinese Communists' bait.

Premier Sun then dealt with the goal of our country: In keeping with the aspirations of the Chinese people at home and abroad, the Republic of China on Taiwan has proposed to unify China on the basis of the three principles of the people. Developments on both sides of the Taiwan Strait during the past 30-odd years have proved that the three principles of the people are far better than communism in being suited to the national development of China, solving the China problem and assuring the freedom, affluence and happiness of the Chinese people. The consistently dogmatic Chinese Communist regime has been compelled to bow to reality and make an aboutface after a series of setbacks. Now, it has tacictly followed the successful experience of Taiwan, the base for national rejuvenation, in seeking national development in accordance with the three principles of the people.

In advocating the reunification of China on the basis of the three principles of the people, we are not trying to embarrass the communist bandits. As early as 1937, the Chinese Communists announced: "Dr Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people are needed today in China and this party is willing to work for their thoroughgoing implementation." In recent yeras a host of facts in Communist China have shown that the Chinese Communists have indirectly recognized the superiority of the three principles of the people. All freedom-loving Chinese sincerely hope that the Chinese Communists will truly "return to" and "identify with" the three principles of the people and that they will take earnest action to implement the three principles.

China's reunification should be based on the free will of the Chinese people as a whole. We hope that the communist bandits will not continue to beat around the bush and engage in the plotting of ruses. We also hope that they will make no more gestures to confuse the people of the world. Instead, they should give up the "four fundamental principles" as quickly as possible and take steps to change their way of life. If the political, economic, social and cultural gaps between mainland China and free China continue to narrow, the conditions for peaceful reunification can gradually mature. The obstacles to reunification will be naturally reduced with the passage of time.

This speech is a firm, concrete national policy statement to the world and our compatriots at home and abroad which was made with a solemn, clearcut and sincere attitude. It also explains our basic attitude that we will "never hold peace talks" with the Chinese Communists, as well as our conviction that Marxism-Leninism will be left on "the ash heap of history."

III.

Chairman Chiang's policy speech, which has strengthened our spirit, and Premier Sun's statement on the country's reunification, our goal and stand embody our basic attitude and the target we work in unity to fulfill. We hope that all party comrades, friends of our party and the people will pool their wisdom and make joint, conscientious efforts to carry them out. Meanwhile, we also raise the following expectations:

1. To party comrades holding official positions: We hope that party comrades holding official positions in the cultural, educational, military, political, parliamentarian and other fields will grasp the essence of Chairman Chiang's speech and his instructions on policy as well as Premier Sun's call for effectively implementing the president's instructions in the administrative branch. The key political proposition of our party is that "no interests are higher than those of the entire people, nothing is more important than national construction and nothing is more urgent than the struggle against communism and for national recovery." Under the guidance of this proposition, they should act according to actual conditions and the developing situation, coordinate with the party's action, pay close attention to checking up on the implementation of the party's policies and effectively carry out these policies at their posts and in their work.

They should particularly maintain vigilance against the enemy's conspiracy to "isolate us from without and split us from within." It is necessary to constantly urge comrades and compatriots to guard against such a conspiracy and simultaneously promote close unity among the comrades and compatriots. In this way, a few lawbreakers who interfere with order and social tranquility will no longer be able to harm us politically and socially, and it will be possible for us to smoothly perform the work of upholding democracy and constitutional rule.

2. To party comrades in trades and professions: We hope that party comrades engaged in agriculture, industry, commerce, service trades and enterprises, together with the government, will make concerted efforts to bring about economic recovery by surmounting difficulties and breaking through the economic bottleneck at this turning point when national construction is being accelerated, our country is turning into a developed one economically, and the world is facing an economic depression. They should step up their policy studies and speed up the development of strategic industries. Efforts should be made to encourage people to invest, make our products more competitive and open new markets abroad for our exports in order to revive our economic prosperity as early as possible and achieve the aim of steady growth. At the same time, we also hope that party comrades in the press and mass communications will assume the responsibility of educating and inspiring the whole society and fulfill the function of guiding society toward harmony and onto a broad road.

3. To comrade cadres handling party work: It is hoped that all comrade cadres handling part work will realize that our party is faced with a new situation and a new need, and that it is necessary, therefore, to grasp the initiative, refine our organization, transform our concepts and improve the methods in our party work so that we may carry out new activities and create a new atmosphere.

Comrade cadres handling party work should be especially able to throughly understand our party's activities and government policies at the present stage and provide full assistance in these activities and policies and push them forward. They should also render wholehearted service to all comrades and people, strengthen mutual communications, commend and promote talented personnel, carry out study and development, absorb new knowledge to integrate the ruling party's political programs and policies with the people and turn them into a motive force in national construction through the implementation of these programs and policies by comrades working in the government and the efforts of all comrades in the party. At the same time, they should strengthen their psychological power and spiritual armament to rectify social practices and stabilize social order, thereby enabling the ruling party to inspire all comrades and compatriots with its revolutionary spirit of struggle and become a stabilizing force in the reconstruction and recovery of the country.

IV.

During the Standing Committee meeting of the Central Committee on 9 June, Chairman Chiang extended his appreciation for the efforts and progress made by all the comrade cadres handling party work in the grassroots level units. Chairman Chiang also gave instructions that comrade cadres in the grassroots level units should transform their concepts, refine their methods, integrate party members, serve the people and speak for the people to reflect their opinions, contribute their strengths in the interests of all comrades, promote unity, and also attach importance to the training, commendation and examination of party members and cadres while stressing party spirit, party ethics, party integrity and strengthening the communication of ideas, exchange of sentiments and promotion of the revolutionary spirit in order to enable everyone to have the determination to bring into play the lofty ideal of struggling for the benefit of the party.

It is hoped that all comrade cadres handling party work in the grassroots level units will realize the profound significance of Chairman Chiang's appreciation and accurately and practically grasp the meaning of the demand for "strengthening the organization, reforming work style, integrating with friends of the party, serving the people and pooling the wisdom and efforts of everyone" as currently set by our party:

Strengthening the service functions of party branches and service stations, rendering assistance in local construction work and promoting local unity, stability and progress;

Stimulating the initiative, liveliness and mass nature of group activities to enable comrades to realize each other's spirits and aspirations;

Strengthening contacts, consultations and cooperation with the comrades working in the government and jointly implementing the party's political programs and policies;

Positively reflecting the people's opinions and expanding our party's communications with the people to enable our party to be "with the people forever";

Stressing the examination of party members' characters and morals, inspiring comrades' party spirit and ethics and regarding these as the basis for training, commending and promoting cadres, especially those who handle political work;

Provincial, county and municipal party units should strengthen the commendation, promotion and training of comrades handling party work at the grassroots level units while attaching importance to ensuring their well-being and livelihood.

V.

The late Chairman [Chiang Kai-shek] called on us to "be firm with dignity, be self-reliant with vigor, be undisquieted in time of adverse changes and be prudent in contemplating and analyzing the situation." During the Standing Committee meeting of the Central Committee on 3 February this year, Chairman Chiang urged all party members to face the present situation and overcome adversities and difficulties with the spirit of "serving public interests throughout the world, training people for the recovery of lost territory, maintaining vigilance toward contingencies and cementing sincere unity." These important repeated instructions on our national policy and our party work can be described as an extension and a development of the instructions given by the late chairman. Today is precisely the crucial moment for all comrades of our party to struggle for our party and "take the dangers and difficulties into account, cement sincere unity, preserve our strength, and persevere in our efforts to bring about success" and thus recreate a new situation.

CHU ON U.S. ASSURANCES ON ARMS SUPPLY TO TAIWAN

[Text] Jiddah, June 21 (CNA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung has said the United States has assured the Republic of China of the supply of all the weapons it would require for defense purposes.

Chu was quoted by the English-language daily, ARAB NEWS, as saying that the U.S. policy in this respect remains unchanged and set at rest speculation about a possible stoppage of arms supplies to the Republic of China.

Commenting on the Peiping regime's peace offensives, Chu said: "Its main objective is to further isolate my country in the international field and discourage the U.S. from sending us more weapons." "But the U.S. is continuing its policy of arms sales to us," he added.

The minister said he is aware of Peiping's designs and that is why he has rejected all these overtures. He declared that the Republic of China's policy now is not to negotiate with Communist China and not to compromise with communism.

Chu arrived here last Thursday as President Chiang Ching-Kuo's special envoy to offer condolences to the death of King Khalid ibn 'Abd al'Aziz. He is to leave here Tuesday for home.

CHIANG SENDS MESSAGE TO AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE

[Text] Taipei, June 21 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo called on the nation's agricultural experts to work out concrete measures to expand agricultural development in the country. Future goal and work should center on using enterprise spirit to run farming business, raising productivity, increasing farmers's incomes and uplifting living standards in the rural areas, President Chiang stressed.

President Chiang made the remarks in his written message to the first national conference on agriculture which opened at the Taipei Armed Forces Hero House in Taipei Monday.

Over the years, agriculture has played an important role in developing the economy of this country. Through the research of experts, cooperation among government units and farmers' hard work, remarkable achievements in agriculture on this national bastion have brought great benefits to the farmers, President Chiang pointed out.

As the nation is about to enter the rank of developed nations, and the government is taking more steps to strengthen local economic development, the conference is timely and vital in seeking the best solutions for many agricultural problems and in accelerating the agricultural reconstruction under the principles of livelihood, the president said.

More than 260 experts, scholars, and local representatives are attending the meeting, which will close Wednesday.

STREAMLINING OF ARMED FORCES DISCUSSED

[By foreign affairs editor David Chen]

[Text] Long-awaited streamlining of the 4.5 million armed forces in China has begun, with a very cautious start in one of the largest and most strategic military regions -- the Guangzhou units. At the same time, a quiet revolution appears to be under way to reduce the power of the party Central Committee's Military Affairs Commission, studded with elderly veteran officers, and transfer party control of the armed forces to the reinstituted party Secretariat, according to observers. The latter move is in line with the proposal for a Central Military Council in the state structure, whose task is to lead all the armed forces.

This is viewed as yet another indication to separate the functions of the party, state and the military. However, party theoretical journals have stressed that party control over the armed forces not only would remain, but would be strengthened.

Observers view as significant the choice of the Guangzhou Military Region as the first of 11 regions for the streamlining process. Since the fourth field army of Lin Biao swept south in the final stages of the liberation war in 1949, it has remained in the region and has preserved itself fairly well, even after removal of most of Lin Biao's close followers.

The central authorities have appointed trusted generals and political commissars to leading positions there, but many original officers are still stationed in the region, a strategic command looking after the two provinces of Guangdong and Hunan and the autonomous region of Guangxi.

Though not regarded as suspect, the armed forces there often presented irritating problems to the authorities. A demonstration by demobilized soldiers in Guangzhou last year and a reported "uprising" by about 300 soldiers in southwest Guangdong were some of the manifestation of the latent defiance of the central authorities. The Guangzhou Military Region also did not do as well as the Kunming region in the anti-Vietnam border war of 1979, although it was commanded by General Xu Shiyou, one of the trusted lieutenants of the party vice-chairman, Mr Deng Xiaoping, who himself spent many years in Guangxi following the establishment of the People's Republic.

The Guangzhou region is not the only grouping that has presented the authorities in Beijing with problems. Similar problems had occurred in another sensitive border region, Xinjiang, and even a former long-serving veteran official, Mr Wang Zhen, could not resolve the issue, arising partly from the Han people migrating there 30 years ago and partly from differences with local indigenous races. Only after the former commander, General Wang Enmao, was restored to his position were the problems brought to a manageable level. Other regions with problems of a different nature include Jinan and Fuzhou. Both had been under heavy influence of the gang of four. However, it is the Guangzhou region where the authorities decided to carry out the streamlining in the first stages. "if the task is successful," said one observer, "it will serve as an example for similar moves elsewhere."

The streamlining in the Guangzhou Military Region was carried out in a low-key manner. On May 23, radio Guangzhou announced briefly that the "leading organs" of the region had begun to take antibureaucracy measures. It said that action had been taken to reduce the number of bulletins, brief reports and meetings "and to restructure the administration" with a view to combating bureaucracy and improving efficiency.

The region, it said, had suffered from "too many circulars and telegrams, meetings, bulletins, brief reports and urgent messages and an excessive number of leading offices." the measures taken were: The number of bulletins and brief reports published would be reduced from 38 to 14. Some commissions, leading groups and administrative offices would be abolished; the number of commissions and leading groups would be reduced from 32 to 15, while the number of administrative offices would be reduced from 14 to seven. Meetings and cadres' training would be reduced. The 100 meetings scheduled to be held this year would be cut by 37, while the leading cadres' training courses at regimental level would be limited to five this year. The quantity of circulars and cables would be reduced, but their quality would be raised.

The reduction in the commissions and administrative offices as well as the reduction in the training courses was a clear indication of the restructuring of various units, entailing the retirement of many officers in senior ranks. This move was also in line with the decision to reduce the number of serving men and women -- one recent report indicating that the strength of the People's Liberation Army might be reduced by as many as one million soldiers, to 4.5 million [figure as published]. The streamlining has been under way for only about a month, and initial results have yet to be announced.

The Guangzhou Military Region is under the command of General Wu Kehua, formerly with the PLA general headquarters in Beijing. It has six deputy commanders. Party control is exercised through the first political commissar, Mr Ren Zhongyi, who is also the party first secretary of Guangdong Province. But it is General Xiang Zhonghua, the political commissar, with about five deputies who are exercising de facto party control. The Guangzhou region is also the base for the country's largest of three naval fleets -- the South China Fleet -- and it has sizeable air force units stationed in several strategic areas.

Meanwhile, first indications of a strengthening of party control have come to light in an extremely brief, and subtle, broadcast by radio Beijing's home service on June 8. It quoted the LIBERATION ARMY DAILY as reporting on its front page that day that, with the approval of the party Central Committee's Military Commission, the PLA General political department has decided "to set up a Communist Youth League general branch committee at battalion level throughout the army." According to military analysts well versed in the political setup of the People's Liberation Army, CYL units did exist in the PLA before the Cultural Revolution and possibly revived after the arrest of the gang of four, but only at the company and platoon level. There were no CYL units at the regimental or battalion level, let alone at brigade or division level. The elevation of such units to battalion level is a clear indication of a very round-about way of consolidating the party's hold on the armed forces.

Analysts pointed out that the chairman of the Chinese Communist Party is Mr Hu Yaobang, a former head of the Communist Youth League and other related youth groups and federations. The CYL, regarded as his bastion, was disbanded during the Cultural Revolution and was not revived until Mr Hu was returned to power in 1977. Since then several senior party cadres, who once served in the CYL and related bodies, have been appointed to key posts. One of them is the former Tianjin mayor, Mr Hu Qili, now director of the party Central Committee's General Office. Mr Hu Yaogang is not involved in military matters, though he is party chairman. He is not known to be a member of the Military Affairs Commission [MAC].

(The MAC is headed by Mr Deng Xiaoping, who is expected to retire in two or three years, and it will be difficult to fill the void left by his departure.)

However, Mr Hu heads the party Secretariat as its secretary-general, and he can exercise some degree of influence over the military through one of its members, General Yang Dazhi, the chief of General Staff, a vice-minister of defence and a standing committee member of the Military Affairs Commissions. Such an arrangement, however, is not entirely satisfactory and observers regard the establishment of CYL cells in the military at battalion level as significant in that it may pave the way for Hu's ultimate control of the armed forces.

Analysts also saw conflicts between the party Military Affairs Commission and the proposed Central Military Council in the future state constitution.

There has been speculation that the MAC might be reduced in scope or scrapped altogether, its functions to be transferred to the party Secretariat now under Mr Hu Yaobang. Such a development was not impossible, said some analysts, noting that the prime minister, Mr Zhao Ziyang, in his talks with the Japanese press during his recent visit to Japan, had hinted at just such a course.

There is also the likelihood that many MAC members may be retired or relegated to the status of advisers, retaining perhaps only the MAC secretary-general, Mr Yang Shangkun. The elderly Mr Yang was a former mayor of Guangzhou. He is a close associate of Mr Deng. His post in the MAC (from Mr Geng Biao, who became the defence minister) is regarded as a stop-gap measure until a more suitable person is found or the MAC is reorganised.

However, it appears increasingly clear that the party, far from relinquishing control of the People's Liberation Army, intends to tighten its grip through measures other than traditional ones. A logical way would be for the revived party Secretariat exercising control of the armed forces through the PLA's General Political Department, members of which would be serving in the party Secretariat in junior posts.

The chairman of the proposed state's Central Military Council, which would lead the armed forces, could be appointed from the party Secretariat. In such a position, he would be responsible to the state's National People's congress and also to the party through the Secretariat, analysts said. If such a course did evolve, Mr Hu, or a very close associate, could become the chairman of the proposed Central Military Council under a new state constitution. However, such a development was not likely to evolve until after the 12th national congress of the Chinese Communist Party some time next year.

In the meantime, military analysts are looking for signs to establish an army headquarters and appoint army commander. At present, the People's Liberation Army has a General Staff headquarters, headed by the chief of General Staff and a number of deputy and assistant chiefs. Between them they look after the three branches of the armed forces.

A cursory look a the structure of the PLA shows that while the navy and air force have a commander each, there is no army commander, or a commander of the land forces.
Except for the General Political Department and the General Logistics Department, the General Staff headquarters is in charge of not only the navy and the air force, but numerous land units, including the armoured corps, the artillery corps, the second artillery corps (in charge of missiles), the engineering corps, engineers for capital construction, the railway corps and the signal corps. These land units have their own commanders, but there is no single overall commander.

In modern warfare, where close co-ordination and a unified chain of command are absolutely essential, the present state of affairs in China's land forces needs urgent revision. Hence, analysts said, the need for an overall commander of the army was paramount. At present, the navy commander is Admiral Y Fei, formerly of Fuzhou, and its political commissar Mr Li Yaowen. The air force commander is General Zhang Tingfa, and its political comissar Mr Gao Houliang.

The search for an army commander, if necessary, can be conducted from among the group of deputy chiefs of General Staff, or more appropriately, from among the handful of young assistant chiefs. At present, four are known to be assistant chiefs: Liu Kai, Liu Huaqing, Han Huaizhi and Xu Xin. They are all relatively young, some in their mid-40's or early 50's, and almost all have training and experience in modern military technology. Military analysts believe they are not only qualified to head the army, but are also deserving candidates for the post of chief of General Staff, would the incumbent General Yang Dezhi and other older officers retire.

After a rather stagnant period, the armed forces have finally begun to stir in the quest for a more streamlined command. And the armed forces of other countries, both friendly and otherwise, will be watching this new development with keen interests.

TA KUNG PAO ON CHINA'S SUMMER GRAIN HARVEST

HK200604 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 20 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Tien Ming: "China's Summer Grain Harvest Not Too Good"]

[Text] The rural areas throughout the country are now reaping the summer grain. According to central authorities' estimates, this year's summer grain harvest is not too good and may fail to reach the original target for increased output. However, total output may yet be close to last year's level. The spring weather was abnormal. The drought in north China has continued 2 or 3 years in places, and in the south, the spring was cold and rainy. Natural disasters are still the greatest threat to agricultural production. The work of fighting drought and floods has never ceased in recent years, but viewing the country as a whole, summer grain output in the middle and lower reaches of the Huang He in north China is less than last year; bumper harvests were reaped over fairly large areas throughout the Chang Jiang basin in central China; and most parts of the southwest and northwest also increased production, so the general situation is good.

North China has been suffering from drought for a long time. In the Beijing outskirts, for instance, there was little rain or snow for several months after planting the wheat last winter, and the peasants had to sink wells for irrigation. Their harvest this summer is nevertheless quite good.

The agricultural situation is relatively good in east China and south of the Chang Jiang. Zhejiang Province has done very well, reaping a bumper spring grain harvest with a total output of 2.9 billion jin, 400 million jin more than last year. The Shanghai outskirts are also expected to record a bumper harvest. Anhui Province has developed agriculture quite rapidly in recent yeras, and the situation this year is not bad either. For instance, Fengyang County, a poor place which "suffered famine 9 years out of 10" in the past, reaped a great bumper harvest last year and has again reaped a bumper summer grain harvest this year, with total output exceeding 300 million jin, more than 10 percent more than last year. This country can now meet its grain rations for the whole year from the summer grain harvest alone.

Sichuan in the southwest, China's most populous province, is expected to reap 1.3 billion jin more summer grain than last year, representing a 9.9 percent increase. Despite the serious floods there last summer, it seems that the province has now recovered. It has reaped a bumper harvest on its 53 million mu of summer grain and oil-bearing crops.

As for Guangdong Province, there have been serious natural disasters this year. At the beginning of spring the weather was cold and rainy, and in late spring and early summer there were torrential rainstorms that affected a relatively wide area, including the grain-producing Pearl River delta. Crop losses have been heavy due to the recent heavy rains and floods. It seems that the province's summer grain harvest will be poor.

Guangdong has not done too well in grain production in the past 2 years. Last year output of the spring and summer-harvested grain crops was 940 million jin less than in the previous year, and output of the late rice also declined. The fall in the province's grain output was the biggest in any year since the liberation. However, the province's agricultural economy still improved last year, as output of basically all the major industrial crops increased, and the peasants' income was higher than in 1980. This point illustrates the advantages of promoting diversification and also the correctness of the agricultural policies.

The Guangdong authorities are by no means satisfied with this. They recently proposed that the province must squarely face the problems in grain production and seek a correct counterstrategy. It is said that in the 12-year period 1970-81, unit yields of late rice, a key element in Guangdong agriculture, declined compared with the previous year on seven occasions, while total output fell on six occasions. This shows that late rice production is rather unstable. Even if production increases, the increase is not great, and there is the problem of the decreases exceeding the increases. This is particularly the case in the Pearl River delta grain areas. According to statistics, in the past 12 years Foshan Prefecture, which includes Nanhai, Shunde and Zhongshan Counties, has only twice achieved a late rice average yield exceeding 500 jin per mu, while the yield was twice below 400 jin. The best year was 1980, when the average yield was 563 jin, but in 1981 it fell to 398 jin. The increases and decreses are very great. The main reason for the unstable grain output is the abnormal weather. It is said that there have been more autumn typhoons than usual in the past 10 years, while the "cold dew wind" [of early October] has also arrived earlier than usual. These new problems await research and solution by the agricultural scientists and technicians.

Autumn grain production has become all the more important since the summer grain harvest is not too good. This is the case for the entire country. Beijing has therefore recently called on the whole country to continue to give all-out support to agriculture and by all means reap a bumper autumn harvest.

U.S. HOUSE COMMITTEE CALLS FOR NUCLEAR FREEZE

[Text] Washington, June 23 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. House Foreign Affairs Committee today passed for the first time a resolution calling for a freeze on nuclear weapons. This is in contrast to a resolution approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on May 27 to reject a freeze proposal. The House committee's resolution asks the United States and the Soviet Union to begin the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks immediately and urges the United States to approve promptly the SALT Two agreement "provided adequate verification capabilities are maintained." The SALT Two agreement signed by former President Carter and Brezhnev was not ratified by the Senate because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In its May 27 resolution, the Senate stopped short of calling for SALT Two's ratification. The House Foreign Affairs Committee's resolution was voted for by all 19 Democratic members along with seven Republicans.

Meanwhile, the big-city mayors' conference held in Minneapolis also adopted a nuclear weapons free resolution today after a heated debate on this issue. The resolution calls on Reagan "to initiate negotiations with the Soviet Union to bring about a verifiable freeze on all further deployment of nuclear weapons."

The two nuclear freeze resolutions were adopted at a time when the mass movement against nuclear weapons is continuing to spread in the country and the controversy over the issue is growing deeper and deeper among different circles.

DPRK ENVOY HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- Chon Myong-su, ambassador of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to China, gave a press conference at his embassy here this morning marking the "month for the anti-U.S. common struggle from June 25 to July 27."

In a statement, the ambassador recalled how the U.S. imperialists launched the war of aggression against Korea 32 years ago and listed their crimes committed against the Korean people.

He condemned the U.S. for keeping U.S. troops in South Korea and conducting new war provocations against the northern part of Korea. "The U.S. imperialism should pull its army, nuclear weapons and allother lethal means out of South Korea without delay and stop all kinds of interference in the internal affairs of Korea," he said.

He reiterated the Korean Workers Party and government's firm position on realizing the peaceful reunification of the country by the Korean people themselves without any interference from outside and on the basis of independence and democracy and the three principles and five point propositions for the reunification put forward by President Kim Il-song.

He expressed deep thanks to the world's peace-loving people for their active support to and firm solidarity with the just struggle of the Korean people. With their support, the Korean people will achieve the historic cause of independent and peaceful reunification of the country, he said.

ROK'S CHON STAGES SECOND CABINET RESHUFFLE

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- The Chon Tu-hwan clique in South Korea today replaced "Prime Minister" Yu Chang-sun with Kim Sang-hyop in its second Cabinet reshuffle in little over a month, according to reports from Seoul.

Kim Sang-hyop was a university president who had served as education minister in the early 1960s. The ministers of finance, of justice and of energy resources were also replaced.

A Western report said the reshuffle was carried out "following a strong demand from the parliamentary opposition that the government should bear responsibility over the recent outbreak of a multimillion-dollar financial fraud which has rocked the country for over a month."

After the surfacing of the loan fraud scandal in which an uncle of Chon Tu-hwan's wife was found to be involved, Chon Tu-hwan replaced half of his 22 Cabinet members on May 21. This move, however, had failed to alleviate public resentments.

Sihanouk Interview

[Text] Penang Island, Malaysia, June 24 (XINHUA) -- "As a French proverb says, union provides strength, so I deem the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea as a new demonstration of unified strength to combat the Vietnamese colonialists," Prince Norodom Sihanouk declared in an exclusive interview with XINHUA correspondent Yang Mu here this evening.

After the signing in Kuala Lumpur of the declaration of the coalition of the three factions of the Kampuchean patriotic resistance forces, President Sihanouk of Democratic Kampuchea flew to Penang yesterday for an unofficial visit at the invitation of former Malaysian Prime Minister Tunku Abdul Rahman and Chief Minister of Penang Lim Chong Eu.

Questioned about the significance of the declaration, the prince said: "It is of historic importance, because it implies a bright future of Kampuchea. The coalition came into being earlier than I expect, but actually it is the natural outcome of the situation in Kampuchea. I am satisfied with the declaration which reaches tripartite identity after long discussions and mutual compromises. We hope that through collective efforts and international aid we can liberate our own land eventually and rebuild Kampuchea into an independent and very strong country."

In order to attain this aim, the prince said, the coalition government must resort not only to diplomatic and political means but also to coordinated military actions. "Although there are differences among us, more or less, we are guided now by the common principles set forth in the declaration. The three factions must cherish harmony, cooperation, friendship and mutual understanding," he stressed.

President Norodom Sihanouk said: "We realize that Vietnam is still stronger than us. We have to face difficulties and hardships. I imagine that in the forthcoming dry season the Vietnamese occupation troops may launch still stronger offensives against our resistance forces, but we will not be defeated. Vietnam tries to split the Kampuchean patriotic forces, but they cannot succeed."

Dealing with his visit programme after the assumption of presidentship, he said that within two or thee days he would start a brief visit to Singapore, the Philippines, Indonesia and Thailand. Then, of course, he would go to his motherland to chair the first session of the Kampuchean coalition government.

"I must abide by the tripartite principles and our inner cabinet will make diplomatic arrangements for me to cope with Vietnam's activities," he stressed. "Our prospect is bright, but only by coalition can we be hopeful," he concluded after pondering.

[Commentator's article: "Strengthen Unity To Fight the Common Enemy"]

[Text] The "Declaration on the Establishment of a Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea" signed by the leaders of Kampuchea's three patriotic forces in Kuala Lumpur on 22 June represents an important development in the Kampuchean people's resistance against Vietnam. The Chinese people heartily rejoice at it and offer their congratulations.

A united struggle against Vietnamese aggression is the trend of the times and the desire of the people in Kampuchea today. Backed by the Soviet Union, the Vietnamese authorities have occupied Kampuchea and wantonly trampled on the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kampuchea, exposing the Kampuchean people to the mortal danger of genocide. Therefore, to resist Vietnamese aggression and defend national existence has become the common objective and task of all Kampuchean patriots. Unity is strength. It is a sacred mission of all Kampuchean patriotic forces to strengthen unity and join forces to oppose and drive the Vietnamese aggressors out of Kampuchea. Since 1979 the Government of Democratic Kampuchea has advocated a joint resistance against Vietnamese aggression, always kept to this stand and taken the initiative to meet and consult with other Kampuchean patriotic forces many times in an effort to form a coalition of all patriotic forces. Thanks to the common efforts of all patriotic forces, gratifying results have eventually been achieved and a declaration on the establishment of a coalition government has been formally signed.

The Kampuchean people's resistance against Vietnam has not only provided a safeguard for the independence and survival of their own nation, but also made a significant contribution to checking the aggression and expansion of the Soviet Union and Vietnam, the bigger and lesser hegemonic powers, and to maintaining peace and security in Southeast Asia and the world. Many peace-loving and justice-upholding countries have expressed their appreciation and support for the realization of the aspirations and efforts to form a joint anti-Vietnamese resistance force of all Kampuchean patriotic factions. The ASEAN nations have devoted their efforts to bringing about a coalition of all Kampuchean patriotic forces. The signing of the declaration on the formation of a coalition government by the three Kampuchean patriotic forces constitutes a heavy blow to the Vietnamese authorities' scheme to legalize their Phnom Penh puppet regime.

The declaration on the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea points out that the purpose of the coalition government is "to mobilize all efforts in the common struggle to liberate Kampuchea from the Vietnamese aggressors with the view to restoring the motherland as a sovereign and independent country." It says: "The workings of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea shall be guided by the principles of tripartism, equality and nonpreponderance." This clearly shows that to unite with all patriotic anti-Vietnamese forces and strengthen the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnam is the primary task of the coalition government. The declaration is bound to encourage and promote unity among all the Kampuchean patriotic forces on the basis of the principles to be abided by all and the common commitments and to enable them to strike more effectively at the Vietnamese aggressors so that the Kampuchean people will win early victory in their struggle for safeguarding state sovereignty and national independence.

The Chinese people have always supported the Kampuchean people's just struggle and stood for unity against the common enemy by all factions of the Kampuchean patriotic forces. The future of the Kampuchean state lies in the hands of the Kampuchean people. It is our hope that with the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, all the Kampuchean patriotic forces will take the overall situation into account, strengthen unity and mobilize all capabilities to fight the common enemy, thereby making their contributions to the Kampuchean people's war of resistance against Vietnamese aggression.

Radio Commentary

[Text] The leaders of the three parties representing the anti-Vietnam, patriotic Kampuchean forces signed a declaration on the establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in Kuala Lumpur on 22 June.

The declaration includes detailed provisions on the aims and guidelines for action of the coalition government and the formation of its cabinet, thus laying a solid foundation for forming the tripartite coalition of the patriotic Kampuchean forces. This new, important development will have a bearing on the situation in Indochina. Supported by the Soviet Union, the Vietnamese authorities have invaded Kampuchea with 200,000 troops, bringing great suffering to the entire Kampuchean nation. The primary task facing all Kampuchean patriots is to wage an indomitable struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors in order to safeguard their national independence and survival.

The declaration of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea explicitly stipulates: the purpose of the coalition government is to mobilize all efforts in the common struggle to liberate Kampuchea from the Vietnamese aggressors with the view to restoring the motherland as a sovereign and independent country. This stipulation gives expression to the common aspirations of the entire Kampuchean nation as well as the political basis for and the objective of struggle of the coalition of the tripartite patriotic Kampuchean forces. People hope that guided by this aim the coalition of the tripartite Kampuchean patriotic forces will help strengthen the forces against the Vietnamese aggressors so that they can deal ever heavier blows to the Vietnamese aggressors.

Regarding the aim of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, the declaration also clearly stipulates that it is necessary to implement the declaration of the international conference on the Kampuchea issue and the relevant resolutions adopted by the UN General Assembly. The relevant documents of these international conferences call for withdrawing all foreign troops from Kampuchea, letting the Kampuchean people decide their own political future without outside interference and restoring the status of Kampuchea as a neutral and nonaligned country. These requirements accord completely with the fundamental interests of the Kampuchean people and are conducive to restoring peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

The coalition of the tripartite Kampuchean patriotic forces is welcomed by the ASEAN and all other justice-upholding countries in the world. The common, just struggle by the Kampuchean people against the Vietnamese aggressors is bound to receive broader and broader international sympathy and support. Although the Soviet Union and the Vietnamese authorities have attacked the tripartite Kampuchean patriotic forces in every possible way, the general trend of all Kampuchean patriotic forces fighting in unity against the Vietnamese aggressors can never be stopped by the Soviet and Vietnamese authorities.

The Chinese people have consistently supported the coalition of the tripartite Kampuchean patriotic forces. Now the three Kampuchean parties have reached an agreement on the formation of a coalition government through joint effort. This is a turn for the better that we welcome and support. We hope that on this basis the three Kampuchean parties will continue to strengthen their unity, scrupulously abide by their agreement and make concerted efforts to drive the Vietnamese aggressors out of their country and to build an independent, unified and prosperous Kampuchea.

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA commentator) -- The declaration of the leaders of the three Kampuchean patriotic forces on the formation of a Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea constituted a major step forward in their joint resistance against the Vietnamese aggression.

The three leaders had [word indistinct] expressed their common desire to fight Vietnemase aggressors together in a joint statement signed in Singapore on September 4, 1981, but during the ensuing nine months of negotiations, the three sides had differed on not a few points with regard to the principles and ways and means for organizing the coalition government. However, repeated consultations brought them to mend their principal differences step by step and to reach agreement at last.

The tripartite declaration this time, signed in Kuala Lumpur on June 22, represented a no small significant progress as compared with the Singapore joint statement and the agreement reached between Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and Khieu Samphan in Beijing in February this year. In addition to expressing their common desire to join hands to fight the Vietnamese aggression, the three parties specified the responsibilities to be assumed by the top leaders of the coalition government and decided on the government setup. The three sides also agreed to follow, as principles to govern the workings and operation of the coalition government, tripartism, equality and non-preponderance and the principle of consensus. If these principles are fully implemented, it would place the tripartite coalition government on a relatively solid basis and ensure its continuity.

Obviously, the issuance of the Kuala Lumpur declaration is not tantamount to solving all problems facing the coalition government. However, if each side places the fundamental interests of the nation before all, strictly observe the agreement already reached and acts on the guiding principles, it would be possible to maintain unity and carry out joint resistance against the Vietnamese aggression.

It may be predicted that the coalition government will be able to lead the Kampuchean people in their struggle against Vietnam and for national salvation and make contributions to the maintenance of peace in Southeast Asia so long as the actions to be taken by all parties to the coalition are aimed at maintaining rather than disrupting unity, strengthening rather than weakening the anti-Vietnamese forces and inspiring rather than discouraging the morale of the fighters in the frontline.

Unite as one in resistance to the Vietnamese aggression -- this is the common will of the Kampuchean nation as well as the ardent wish of the peace-loving people the world over. Any progress toward a tripartite joint struggle against the Vietnamese aggression has been acclaimed worldwide. The ASEAN countries have done a lot to promote this coalition. With the signing of the declaration, the Kampuchean people are enjoying greater sympathy and support in the world in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggression. This is a powerful blow at the strategic plans of the bigger and lesser hegemonists for expansion in Indochina and Southeast Asia. The Vietnamese authorities and Soviet propaganda machines have launched unbridled attacks on the tripartite coalition, and undoubtedly Hanoi and Moscow will play all sorts of tricks to undermine it. But it can be said with certainty that both the situation in the Kampuchean battlefield and international opinion will become more and more unfavorable for Moscow and Hanoi. So long as all Kampuchean patriotic forces get united and wage a protracted and bitter struggle, they will drive Soviet-backed Vietnamese aggressors out of their country. Facts in the past few years show that the day when the Kampuchean people reach this goal is approaching fast.

FRANCE'S MAUROY HITS U.S. ECONOMIC ACTIONS

[Text] Paris, June 23 (XINHUA) -- French Premier Pierre Mauroy today accused the United States for taking some economic and financial actions that do not "seem to match the orientation adopted at the Versailles summit conference." Speaking at the National Assembly, Mauroy mentioned the U.S. dispute over European steel exports to the United States, President Reagan's decision to ban the use of the U.S. technology by other countries in laying the trans-Siberian pipeline, and the U.S. Senate Finance Committee's approval of a bill to increase "the President's powers of retaliation in case of unfair trade practices." Mauroy said he was sorry to see the fact that the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank "only intervened timidly" to buy francs "notwithstanding declarations of intention" to bolster the franc. All this caused worries to France, he said. "They require a vigorous reaction by France and its Euromart partners," he added.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON GEORGI DIMITROV CENTENARY

Beijing Meeting

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- The centenary of the birth of Georgi Dimitrov, a great leader of the Bulgarian people and a well-known activist in the international communist movement, was marked here today at a meeting arranged by the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries. Wang Bingnan, president of the association, presided over the meeting, attended by 300 people.

Among those present were Tan Zhenlin, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Fu Hao, adviser to the Foreign Ministry; Huan Xiang, vice-president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; leaders of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the Central Committee of the Communist Youth League of China and the All-China Women's Federation; as well as Ilia Tabakov, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Bulgarian Embassy in Beijing, and his wife.

Wang Bingnan said, over a half century Dimitrov had made outstanding contributions to the Bulgarian people's liberation and construction as well as to the development of the international communist movement. "As a staunch and heroic anti-fascist fighter and a noted activist and leader of the international communist movement, he had been deeply loved by his people and enjoyed high prestige among the people of various countries," he said.

Wang Bingnan recalled the time when he worked together with Dimitrov during the 1930's in Germany. He said: "Dimitrov had consistently supported the Chinese people in their revolutionary struggle. He was the Chinese people's respected and great friend."

Qian Junrui, director of the Institute of World Economy and Politics of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, said: "Dimitrov devoted all his life to the world people's anti-fascist struggle and the cause for peace and socialism, for which he had won the love and respect of the labouring people of China and of the world."

After giving an account of Dimitrov's life, he said: "Since he began his revolutionary activities in the international arena, he had been very much concerned and sympathized with the Chinese revolution and paid great attention to the experience of the Chinese revolution and the Chinese Communist Party. Particularly when he took the office of the secretary-general of the Communist International, he kept himself abreast with the process of the Chinese revolution and the Chinese people's war of resistance against Japan.

"Through various channels, he became aware of and studied various problems of the Chinese revolution. He mentioned the progress of the Chinese revolution at many international meetings, hailing every victory in the Chinese revolution and calling on proletariats of all countries and world public opinion to give the Chinese people moral and political support."

Qian Junrui urged all present to learn from Dimitrov's spirit, combining patriotism with internationalism, and to treasure and strengthen the friendship between the people of China and Bulgaria.

In an introduction at the meeting, Charge d'Affaires Ilia Tabokov detailed Dimitrov's revolutionary activities during various periods from the end of the 19th century to July 1949, and his contributions to the Bulgarian revolution and the international communist movement. [Article by Wang Bingnan [3769 3521 0589]: "In Memory of Georgi Dimitrov"]

[Text] The 100th anniversary of the birth of Georgi Dimitrov, the great leader of the Bulgarian people and a renowned activist of the international communist movement, falls on 18 June. We commemorate this occasion with the Bulgarian people with our greatest respect so as to cherish our memory of Dimitrov and express our affection for the Bulgarian people.

Dimitrov is a good son of the Bulgarian people. He came from a poor worker's family and actively participated in the Bulgarian revolutionary activities from the age of 15. He became one of the leaders of the workers movement at a very early age. In 1902 Dimitrov joined the Bulgarian Socialist Democratic Party and struggled against erroneous parties by adopting a Marxist stand. From 1909 to 1923, he was the secretary of the joint alliance of the Bulgarian revolutionary workers. He worked enthusiastically and waged selfless struggles for the interests of the working class. During the years he had to seek refuge in foreign countries, 1923-1945, Dimitrov enthusiastically took part in the antifascist struggles and was engaged in promoting the international communist movement. He was a member and chief secretary of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. He was a resolute and bold fighter of the international antifascist struggle, an outstanding activist and an important leader. After the liberation of his motherland, Dimitrov led the Bulgarian people in the struggle to restore the national economy, consolidating the people's democratic regime and building socialism. His name is closely linked to the revolutionary cause of the Bulgarian people and his whole life is inseparable from the international communist movement. He gained the deep love of the Bulgarian people and enjoyed high prestige among people throughout the world.

While commemorating the 100th anniversary of the birth of Dimitrov, I cannot help recall those unforgettable days in Germany in 1932 and 1933 and the days when Dimitrov and I worked together.

I arrived in Berlin in the spring of 1931. While I was working in Germany, I was chairman of the eastern section of the international anti-imperialist alliance. Revolutionary ideas and spirits were high in Germany at that time. Dimitrov was then secretly guiding work in Germany at the instruction of the Communist International. As the chairman of the eastern section of the international anti-imperialist alliance, I often took part in the central meetings of the alliance. One day, while attending a central meeting, (Minzenberg), leader of the Central Committee of the German Communist Party, (also the responsible person of the alliance), brought along another comrade. He did not announce the name of this comrade, who did not say anything. This stranger was tall and big, with flashing eyes and an imposing appearance. He left a very deep impression on me. This comrade attended all the subsequent meetings of the Central Committee. He usually brought along a stack of foreign newspapers when he came to the meetings, simultaneously reading them and listening to other comrades' speeches. During the meetings, the participants carried out heated discussions on the situation in Germany, fascist activities, the policies of the German Communist Party and other questions. When no conclusions could be drawn from the discussions, he would put down his newspapers and give his opinions in a calm and unhurried manner. He was full of confidence and strength when he spoke and his speeches were so penetrating and thorough that they appeared to be summation speeches, and all participants were convinced by him. What left the deepest impression on me was that once, when we talked about the question of the Chinese revolution, he took out a worker's pictorial, which was published by the German Communist Party, in which there was a picture of the Chinese workers, peasants and soldiers of the Red Army. The Red Army soldiers wore ragged quilted coats, with straw sandals on their feet, but they were full of vitality. Pointing to the picture, he said: "Revolutions cannot be achieved only by holding ideal discussions indoors. Let us look at the Chinese revolutionary fighters who persist in their struggle with straw sandals on their feet during the cold season.

"This heroic spirit is very touching and working classes of various countries should learn from them. China has great prospects for achieving success in its revolution." I was greatly encouraged by his speech, which was full of intense emotion. Therefore, from that point on, I always sought his advise on certain questions after the meetings and he always kindly answered them. However, I still did not ask his name.

On 30 January 1933, the German monopoly capitalist class tore up the Weimar Constitution, forced Hindenburg to hand over political power and put the fascist leader Hitler in power and established the fascist dictatorial regime. The Communist Party and the Socialist Democratic Party were suppressed, and white terror enveloped the entire country. Members of both the German Communist Party and the Socialist Democratic Party faced the same fate. Many comrades were imprisoned and sent to concentration camps. In a bid to "pull up Marxism by the roots in Germany" and destroy the international communist movement, Hitler carefully planned the provocative incident of the "Reichstag fire" on the night of 27 February. On that same night, Hitler made an announcement: "It is time to eliminate the communists now!" On the day following this incident, I led Comrade Zhang Hao, who was going to Moscow via Berlin to attend the international workers congress as the representative of the Chinese Communist Party, to the scene, and smoke was still seen rising from the Reichstag building. Not long after that, I saw on a post in the street the pictures of certain so-called "prisoners." I was shocked to see that the respectable comrade that I always came into contact with was among them. He was Georgi Dimitrov. I only learned later that three Bulgarian Communist Party members (Dimitrov, Popov and (Tanev)) were arrested during the "Reichstag fire." They were discovered and arrested by the German police while meeting in a restaurant. Dimitrov was the leader of the Bulgarian Communist Party and had been sentenced to death in absentia twice by the Bulgarian fascist regime. He was secretly working in Germany as a member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. The fascists in Germany attempted to deal blows at the German Communist Party, the Bulgarian Communist Party and the Communist International by trying Dimitrov in public. This was the shocking "Leipzig trial."

Dimitrov continued to read and write in jail, enduring severe mental torture and pain. He refused to accept the lawyer who had been offered by the authorities concerned to defend him, but was determined to defend himself using the legal knowledge he had acquired mainly by reading in jail. During the trial, he adopted struggle strategies of a high degree and displayed his outstanding revolutionary spirit and iron will and determination. From the very beginning, Dimitrov pressed forward steadily, shifting himself from the position of defendant to prosecutor and judge and turning the court into a stage where communism was propagated. During the struggle against the fascists, he showed great contempt for them. Pointing at Goering and Goebbels, Dimitrov severely refuted them, pointing out that the case was a political frameup fabricated deliberately by them. As a result, all these "witnesses" were at a loss, became tongue-tied and were put in an extremely awkward position. Speaking with the force of justice, Dimitrov revealed the fascists' false charges against the communists and uncovered the fraud of the "Reichstag fire." He safeguarded the dignity of the Bulgarian people and the international communist movement, setting a glorious example for all communist fighters throughout the world.

At that time, the "Leipzig trial" aroused the attention of the whole world. Thousands upon thousands of people were concerned with the news and destiny of Dimitrov and progressive mankind launched a rescue campaign. One day, while I was getting a haircut in a barber shop in Berlin, I heard the barber tell his colleague: "Have you read today's newspaper? No one knew Dimitrov had such wide knowledge; he knows everything, and is an outstanding debator. If there were any heroes in the world, Dimitrov would be one." In light of this, we see that Dimitrov had a great influence on the people. His bold words and deeds in the court gained the sympathy and respect of people thrpughout the world. The Leipzig trial ended on 23 December 1933, with acquittal of the communist. Dimitrov was released on 27 February 1934, and people all over the world were pleased.

Whenever I recall my experience in Germany and the times that I came into contact with Dimitrov, it seems that his tall body, his confident looks and his strong voice are in front of me again, and I feel that kind of tense and encouraging atmosphere which prevailed in Germany at that time. Dimitrov's sympathy and support for the Chinese revolution has deeply touched me and is unforgettable. Later, when Dimitrov was the chief secretary of the Communist International, he showed greater concern and sympathy for the emancipation of the Chinese people and played an important role in building the international anti-fascist united front. At the Seventh Congress of the Communist International, he said: "We must resolutely support the Chinese people in their struggle to emancipate themselves from all imperialist bandits and the Chinese running dogs." He had contacts with Comrade Mao Zedong through letter writing. When Dimitrov died on 2 July 1949, Comrade Zhou Enlai also said: "Although Bulgaria is a small country, it has a great Dimitrov." Comrade Dimitrov is a respectable communist fighter and a revolutionary with whom the Chinese people are familiar. In 1972, on the 90th anniversary of the birth of Dimitrov, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries conducted commemorative activities. Today, while marking the 100th anniversary of the birth of Dimitrov, we must learn from his revolutionary spirit of being resolute and waging a bold struggle and learn from his lofty moral quality of being infinitely loyal to the communist cause.

XUE MUQIAO VIEWS ECONOMIC MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

[Text] Shanghai, 23 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China's noted economist Xue Muqiao has said that our recent formulation of the relationship between planned economy and regulation by market mechanism is slightly different from what it was 2 years ago, but our orientation for reforming the economic management system has not been changed. We have changed the formulation of the relationship between them as follows: "It is imperative to practice planned economy on the basis of the system of ownership by the whole people and at the same time bring into play the supplementary role of regulation by market mechanism."

Xue Muqiao made this statement in a speech at the second sino-Japanese annual meeting on exchanging economic knowledge. The full text of his speech has been published in the latest issue of SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO.

Xue Muqiao said, in 1979 we put forth the principle that China can practice the combination of regulation by planning mechanism with regulation by market mechanism in the national economy. We rely mainly on regulation by planning mechanism while at the same time paying full attention to the role of regulation by market mechanism. This principle of reform has undoubtedly played a positive role in enlivening the economy.

Xue Muqiao said that in order to enliven the economy, we have gradually expanded the decison-making powers of the localities and enterprises and implemented the system of dividing financial income and of dividing the profits of enterprises. The expansion of decision-making powers has played an important role in bringing into play the initiative of the localities and enterprises. However, our reforms of the economic tools such as the price and tax system have failed to keep pace with the changing situation and to guide the localities and enterprises to develop along the course charted by the state plan. They tend to violate the state plan for their own interests. Under these circumstances, we cannot help but strengthen planned guidance and administrative management over some trades and professions and some products, that is to say, we have considerably relied on administrative measures to ensure the fulfillment of the state plan. Therefore, recently we changed our formulation as follows: "It is imperative to practice planned economy on the basis of the system of ownership by the whole people and at the same time bring into play the supplementary role of regulation by market mechanism."

Xue Muqiao pointed out that in the past, some articles have called the socialist economy a commodity economy under the guidance of state planning or planned economy of commodities. It now seems that this is not a precise formulation. Our idea is to change it into a planned economy of commodity production and commodity exchange on the basis of the system of public ownership of the means of production.

Xue Muqiao said that some friends may suspect that China has gone to extremes in the past in stressing the role of commodities and the market and that it is going to take the beaten track. This is not so. We still want to develop commodity production and commodity exchange and therefore still must learn how to make better use of the market role. In this respect, we have not done much in the past; in fact we have done very little. We stress the necessity of utilizing economic tools such as pricing, tax revenue and banks to guide the enterprises to observe the state plan. This is necessary. Our shortcomings in the past 3 years have not resulted because we have overstressed the economic tools, but rather because we have talked too much but done little, which has resulted in our encountering a lot of difficulties in our reforms. If we are not good at applying the economic tools to ensure the fulfillment of the state plan and the planned and proportionate development of the national economy, it will be impossible for us to expand the decisionmaking powers of the localities and enterprises and to enliven the economy.

In conclusion Xue Muqiao said that China's policies of opening to the world and of enlivening the domestic economy will never be changed. Owing to the fact that this has been a very great turn in our economic policies of the past 30 years, we are bound to encounter a lot of new problems and difficulties in implementing this new principle. The specific measures we have adopted in implementing this new principle should also be studied in the course of practice and readjusted according to need. The formulation of our principle for reforming the economic system should also be changed gradually to make it more precise and perfect and thus enable all people to be clear about the orientation of their advance.

WANG RENZHONG ADDRESSES LITERARY MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the second plenary session of the fourth committee of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, Wang Renzhong, member of the CCP Central Committee Secretariat, said this morning: New men with a communist spirit have merged, one group after another, in the great struggle to build a modern, powerful socialist country. With communist ideals and ethics, they are pace setters for the broad masses of people. It is a glorious duty of the literary and art workers to frequently sing the praises of them and to educate the people in communist ideology.

At the meeting, Wang Renzhong made a long speech entitled "Unite and Write More and Better Communist Songs of Triumph." He said: We promote singing the praises of new persons, new things, advanced people and advanced collectives, but we do not oppose writing about historical figures, nor do we oppose exposing evildoers and evil deeds. However, we hold that singing the praises of advanced people, advanced collectives, new persons and new things is a requirement of the orientation of literature and art serving the people and socialism as well as a requirement of the times for us to meet.

Wang Renzhong said: Now is the era in which heroes are coming forth in large numbers on various fronts. New things and new ideas are bound to triumph over old things and old ideas. Communism will certainly be accepted by more and more people and will gradually become the ideology that dominates our society.

Wang Renzhong pointed out: Advanced persons with communist ideas and ethics gradually mature through study and struggle, and they cannot be perfect in every way. At the same time, these advanced persons may be suppressed and hit hard by bureaucrats, subjected to jealousy by some people, satirized by backward elements or even framed by bad persons. Good persons and good things exist in comparison with evildoers and evil deeds and advance by struggling against the latter. For this reason, singing the praises of heroic figures is often inseparable from exposing and criticizing evildoers and evil deeds.

In dealing with the standard for communist ethics, Wang Renzhong recalled life in Yanan in the past and hoped that people would carry forward the revolutionary Yanan spirit. He said: How should we handle the relations between the party and ourselves and between the people and ourselves? What attitude should we take toward the cause of socialist construction? We should do what the party and the people expect us to do. We should work hard for the prosperity of the country, seek neither fame nor gain, fear neither hardship nor death and serve the people heart and soul.

In his speech, Wang Renzhong hoped that literary and art workers would step up their studies -- they should study books and society. He said: Literary and art workers themselves should first be educated in order to create good works that can play a role in educating the people.

Wang Renzhong pointed out: Literary and art workers should first study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and adopt the communist world outlook. He then said: Only with the stand, viewpoint and method of Marxism-Leninism can one accurately and penetratingly observe and analyze social problems and make a clear distinction between right and wrong and between ourselves and the enemy.

Wang Renzhong said: Literary and art workers should also study history and natural science. In dealing with the question of engaging in the study of society, Wang Renzhong particularly stressed that literary and art workers should delve into real life and learn from advanced persons and advanced collectives.

In his speech, Wang Renzhong also hoped that people in literary and art circles would strengthen their unity on the basis of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, under the guidance of the four fudamental principles and on the basis of resolutely implementing the party's line, principles and policies.

Today's meeting was presided over by Xia Yan, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles.

URBAN, RURAL CONSTRUCTION CONFERENCE CLOSES

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Jun (XINHUA) -- The national urban and rural construction and environmental protection work conference came to a close today. The conference emphasized that the main tasks of urban and rural construction and environmental protection departments at present are to do a good job in urban and rural planning and construction, to prevent and remedy environmental pollution and destruction, and to create fine working and living conditions for the people throughout the country.

The conference was convened by the newly established Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection. Attending were 350 people, including responsible persons of various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional capital construction committees and urban construction, building, environmental protection and surveying and drawing departments, and representatives of departments concerned under the State Council.

The purpose of the conference was to pool the wisdom of the masses, sum up experience in urban construction and environmental protection in a down-to-earth way, discover problems, search for ways and means to solve these problems and mobilize the broad masses of workers and staff members to work hard in realizing the task of creating a better environment.

The conference held that the prime task in urban construction at present is to plan well. It is necessary to adopt effective measures to closely link city planning with state planning and at the same time strengthen control over planning to ensure that plans are carried out.

An arduous, complicated and urgent task now facing urban construction departments is to solve the housing shortage in the cities. The conference called on various localities to make maximum use of reserve funds and enterprise funds in building houses.

With regard to rural construction, the conference held that since peasants are now very enthusiastic about building houses, steps must be taken to strengthen guidance. It is a matter of top priority to curb unhealthy tendencies of indiscriminately occupying farmland and to coordinate housing construction by peasants with village and township planning so as to build comparatively backward villages and townships in our country into modern and cultured new socialist villages and townships.

To curb continuous environmental pollution and deterioration, the conference called on environmental protection departments at all levels to earnestly implement the environmental protection law and other relevant regulations issued by the State Council; to formulate and perfect various specific rules without delay; and to urge industrial enterprises, through technical transformation and comprehensive utilization, tightening control, readjustment and reorganization and other means, to effectively control and reduce industrial pollution.

ACHIEVEMENTS IN URBAN CONSTRUCTION NOTED

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- XINHUA reporters have learned the following from departments concerned: In the 3-odd years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, remarkable achievements have been made in urban construction in our country and city residents' living and working conditions have been improved to a certain extent as a result of conscientiously implementing the policy of readjusting the national economy.

The achievements made in housing construction are most remarkable. By bringing the initiative of the state, localities, enterprises and individuals into play, a total of more than 253 million square meters of floor space has been built over the past 3 years, or half of the total housing built in the 30 years since the founding of the PRC, thus solving the housing problem for some 5 million city households. Floor space of housing projects started in the first 5 months of this year increased 23 percent over the same period of last year.

To speed up housing construction, the State Council this year approved a pilot project to build houses in the four cities of Changzhou, Zhengzhou, Shashi and Siping with subsidies from the State and from enterprises; these houses are to be sold to workers and staff members. This is a new way of solving the housing problem for workers and staff members step by step.

Progress has also been made in building public utilities in cities. In recent years, the state has grasped the installation of central heating systems as an important measure for saving energy. As a result, the building of central heating systems in cities has progressed rather fast. In connection with technical transformation in powerplants, Shenyang, Fushun, Fuxin, Anshan, Dalian, Changchun and four other cities have, since 1980, built central heating systems which make use of residual industrial heat.

These systems cover a total area of 6.6 million square meters, accounting for 29 percent of the central heating systems in all the country's cities. Cities in the country built 62 new waterworks and laid 3,540 kilometers of waterpipes last year. The daily supply of running water in the country's cities has increased from 25.3 million dun in 1978 to 30 million dun at present.

New developments have been made in mass transit service in cities in the past 3 years. Now 221 cities in the country have opened mass transit service, with more than 30,000 buses and over 4,000 streetcars. Taxi service is now available in 80 cities.

More than 40 million trees were planted in the country's cities last year, and an additional 80 million trees were planted in the spring of this year.

Urban planning has received the attention of departments concerned. As of June this year, the State Council examined and approved overall plans for urban construction in the eight cities of Tangshan, Hohhot, Lanzhou, Shenyang, Changsha, Wuhan, Hefei and Nanning. Provinces and autonomous regions have also examined and approved 51 such overall plans.

The departments concerned hold: Our country has made relatively big achievements in urban construction in the past 3 years. However, since very little such work was done in the past and the urban population has increased rather fast in recent years, it is still necessary to make unremitting and arduous efforts and do a great deal of work in order to completely solve the problems in housing, water, power and gas supply and mass transit. They hope that the departments concerned and the broad masses of people will make concerted efforts to successfully build our country's cities.

CPPCC MEMBERS ATTEND FORUM ON PRC CONSTITUTION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Jun (XINHUA) -- Members of the CPPCC National Committee attending the third forum sponsored by the committee on the draft revised constitution held that the draft, by giving relatively full expression to socialist democracy, has laid a solid foundation for establishing and improving the socialist legal system.

The forum, held at the CPPCC Auditorium this morning, discussed in particular the provisions of the draft revised constitution on carrying forward socialist democracy and upholding the socialist legal system.

Lei Jieqiong, Standing Committee member of the CPPCC National Committee, vice chairman of the All-China Women's Federation, vice chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy and vice mayor of Beijing Municipality, held that the draft revised constitution reflects the interests of the broad masses of women in our country. She said: Article 46 of the draft revised constitution is an improvement on the 1954 Constitution by adding such stipulations as: "men and women shall receive equal pay for equal work;" "children have the duty to support their parents; violations of the freedom of marriage are prohibited; maltreatment of old people, women and children is prohibited." This is conducive to implementing the policies of the party and the government on the protection of women and children, arousing women's enthusiasm and developing the women's movement in our country.

Han Youtong, Standing Committee member of the CPPCC National Committee and head of the CPPCC judicial group, said: Article 5 of the draft revised constitution stipulates that no organization or individual shall enjoy privileges that transcend the constitution and the law. This is a reflection of our socialist system, a result of the continuous development of socialist democracy and a powerful weapon for upholding the socialist legal system. This stipulation gives full expression to the common will and strong desire of the people of all nationalities throughout the country, and we must resolutely implement it.

Zhang Su, standing committee member of the CPPCC National Committee and member of the Commission for Legislative Affairs under the NPC Standing Committee, held that as far as democratic centralism is concerned, the draft revised constitution is an improvement on the three previous constitutions. He said: The draft strengthens the system of people's congresses and enlarges the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee. Standing committees shall be set up for all local people's congresses at or above the county level, the state shall establish the Central Military Commission, and so on and so forth. Article 3 of the draft also specifically stipulates that the state shall apply the principle of democratic centralism, which the 1954 Constitution failed to mention. These stipulations are bound to play an important role in the great cause of building a modern, powerful socialist country.

Li Yunchang, standing committee member of the CPPCC National Committee, stated his views on the stipulations of the draft revised constitution on safeguarding public order and dealing blows to criminals. He said: Effective blows must be dealt to criminal offenders who seriously endanger public order and to economic criminals who do damage to socialist economic construction, in order to protect the lives and property of people engaged in peaceful labor and to ensure the smooth development of socialist construction. All law-breakers should be referred to judicial organs for punishment according to law; they should not be subjected only to economic measures, such as by imposing fines on them; nor should they be subjected only to party or government discipline because all such measures are no substitute for punishment according to law.

Dealing with the pernicious influence of decadent capitalist ideas on people's thinking and social ethics and practices, Li Yunchang said; In addition to strengthening socialist and communist education of people throughout the country, especially the broad masses of young people, it is also necessary to punish according to law those degenerates who have committed crimes in violation of the law.

PEASANTS, WORKERS DEMOCRATIC PARTY HOLDS MEETING

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SYSTEM

[Article by Xiao Weiyun [5135 5588 0061]: "A New Development in the People's Congress System in Our Country"]

[Text] Our country's political power is in the hands of the people. The conscientious improvement and development of the people's congress system is a major issue affecting whether or not the people can truly be masters of their own future. The "draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China," which has now been published, has made numerous major reforms to our country's people's congress system. This is in line with the spirit of the "resolution" adopted at the sixth plenary session to the effect that, since the founding of the PRC, we have failed to pay attention to the "gradual building of a highly democratic, socialist political system," and that we must in future "transform the people's congresses at various levels and their standing bodies into authoritative organs of the people's power."

First, the draft of the revised constitution greatly strengthened the Standing Committee of the NPC, effecting an almost all-round enlargement of the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee. The 1954 Constitution provided that the NPC Standing Committee had 19 functions and powers. The 1975 Constitution changed this to seven, thus greatly reducing the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee, and also abolished the special committees which were under the leadership of the NPC and its Standing Committee. The 1978 Constitution changed the number of functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee to 13, but did not restore the comprehensive functions and powers laid down by the 1954 Constitution. The present draft of the revision of the constitution has enlarged the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee to 22, adding many important ones. According to the 1954 and 1978 Constitutions, the main functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee are: 1) to interpret the law and enact decrees; 2) to decide on and appoint and remove relevant personnel in state organs; 3) to supervise the work of the State Council, the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate; and 4) other functions and powers. The functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee as enlarged by the present draft of the revised constitution are: 1) The NPC Standing Committee also exercises legislative authority in the country, enacts laws, enacts and revises laws other than those which should be enacted by the NPC and, when the NPC is not in session, may partially revise and supplement the basic law enacted by the NPC. Thus the NPC Standing Committee has become a legislative organ and its legal status has been enhanced. 2) When the NPC is not in session, it examines and approves plans needed for partially readjusting plans of national economic and social development and the state budget, while they are being implemented. This has increased the NPC Standing Committee's powers of supervision over the State Council. 3) When the NPC is not in session, it decides, upon the recommendation of the premier of the State Council, on the appointment and removal of ministers of the various departments, chairmen of the various commissions, the chief auditor and the secretary general of the State Council. Upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Central Military Commission, it decides on the appointment and removal of other members of the Central Military Commission. This has increased the power of the NPC Standing Committee to decide on and to appoint and remove personnel in state organs. Judging from these three points, the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee have been enlarged in almost all respects.

The draft of the revised constitution has also strengthened the organization of the NPC Standing Committee. The draft provides that members of the NPC Standing Committee may not take up duties in state administrative organs, judicial organs or procuratorial organs. That is to say that the majority of the members of the NPC Standing Committee will be full time. The fact that the personnel in the above state organs do not hold posts in the NPC Standing Committee is also favorable to strengthening the supervision of the NPC Standing Committee over these organs. In the past, the NPC Standing Committee only had a small number of special committees. Now, the draft provides for the setting up of various special committees within the NPC to discuss and draw up relevant proposals under the leadership of the NPC and its Standing Committee.

The draft provides that the chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, the vice chairman and the secretary general shall together comprise a chairmen's meeting to deal with the important everyday work of the NPC Standing Committee. These provisions have undoubtedly strengthened the NPC Standing Committee. The participation of the chairman or a vice chairman of a people's congress in the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government in NPC Standing Committee meetings is favorable to strengthening the links between the NPC Standing Committee and the localities and the masses.

The actual situation in our country is such that, with such vast numbers of NPC deputies, they have found it difficult to do their work and to exercise their functions and powers regularly. Plans had been made to reduce the number of deputies, but here again there have been difficulties. Many laws were in urgent need of enactment and many important questions were in urgent need of being answered. What was to be done? After much conscientious consideration, the draft of the revised constitution provides that certain functions and powers originally belonging to the NPC shall be exercised by its Standing Committee. Members of the NPC Standing Committee are in fact standing deputies. They are elected by the NPC. They represent all walks of life. The number of people is better suited to holding frequent meetings. The draft of the revised constitution provides that certain functions and powers originally belonging to the NPC shall be exercised by its Standing Committee. Will this lessen the role of the NPC? Of course not, because it still retains the following functions and powers which must and should be exercised by it: 1) to amend the constitution and to make and amend basic laws concerning criminal offenses, civil affairs, the structure of the state and other matters; 2) to elect the chairman and vice chairman of the PRC, the chairman of the Central Military Commission, the president of the Supreme People's Court and the chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate and to decide on the choice of the premier of the State Council and other members of the State Council; 3) to examine and approve plans of national economic and social development and the reports on their implementation and the state budget and the report on its implementation; and 4) to decide on major questions of war and peace. These functions and powers may only be exercised by the NPC and not by its Standing Committee. We can see that, although the functions and powers of the NPC Standing Committee have been enlarged, they do not exceed those of the NPC. The provisions of the draft of the revised constitution on the functions and powers of the NPC enable the NPC to concentrate its energy on dealing with major questions which must be dealt with by it and to play its role better, without playing down or weakening this role. Past facts have already shown that, if those functions and powers which cannot be conveniently exercised on a regular basis are kept within the NPC and are not given to its Standing Committee, this will affect the work of both the NPC and its Standing Committee.

As for the rights and protection of the NPC deputies, in addition to provisions in the 1954 and 1978 Constitutions that NPC deputies have the right to address inquiries, have the right not to be arrested and are subject to the supervision of the units that elected them, the present draft of the revised constitution has added the following: 1) Deputies to the NPC and members of its Standing Committee have the right to submit, according to procedures prescribed by law, legislative bills within the scope of the functions and powers of the NPC and its Standing Committee. 2) Deputies to the NPC shall not be subjected to legal investigation for speeches or votes at its meetings. 3) Deputies to the NPC should maintain close contact with the units which elected them and with the people, listen to and report the opinions and demands of the people and, in their own production and other work and public activities, assist in the enforcement of the constitution and the law. This provides a clearer provision of the rights, protection and demands of NPC deputies, thus enabling the deputies to play their role better.

Not only does the draft of the revised constitution place emphasis on strengthening the role of the NPC, but it also pays attention to strengthening and developing the role of local people's congresses at all levels. The draft provides that: 1) local people's congresses at and above the county level shall set up standing committees.

This has strengthened the role of local people's congresses at and above the county level and their supervision of the people's governments, courts and procuratorates at the same level. 2) People's congresses in the provinces and in the municipalities directly under the central government and their standing committees can enact and promulgate local laws and regulations. This has enlarged the functions and powers of the organs of state power in the provinces and municipalities directly under the central government. 3) Direct elections shall be extended to the county level and organs of state power at the county level shall be placed directly under the effective supervision of the people. 4) People's communes in townships shall be separated from those in villages. People's congresses shall be set up in townships. The people's commune in the villages is merely an organization of the collective economy. This is both favorable to the strengthening of township government and to the development of the organization of the collective economy.

The establishment of people's congresses on the basis of democratic centralism is the organizational form of our country's people's democratic dictatorship. Not only does it include people's congresses at all levels, but also a whole set of state bodies created by them and responsible to them, like the administrative organs, judicial organs and procuratorial organs. People's congresses at all levels must rely on the administrative organs to carry out vast amounts of administrative work, and on the judicial organs and procuratorial organs to try cases and carry out legal supervision respectively. Only then can we fully develop the role of the people's congresses at all levels. To this end, article 3 of the draft of the revised constitution expressly defines the relationship between the people's congresses at all levels and the people and between other state organs and people's congresses at all levels. These legal relationships are: The people are the masters of the state. The NPC and the local people's congresses at all levels are the products of democratic elections. They are responsible to the people and are subject to supervision by the people. People's congresses are organs of state power and the state administrative organs, judicial organs and procuratorial organs are all products of organs of state power. The present draft of the revised constitution has not only strengthened organs of state power at all levels, but also reformed and reestablished other state bodies. For instance, we have reestablished the post of state chairman, to show that life in our country has been normalized even further and to represent the country at home and abroad, so that the chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and the premier of the State Council can concentrate their energy on the work pertaining to their own posts. In order to raise the efficiency of the State Council's administrative work, the State Council has implemented the responsibility system. The various ministries and commissions have implemented a ministerial responsibility system, reduced the number of vice premiers to between two and four, established state councillors and enlarged the functions and powers of the State Council. They have established a Central Military Commission to lead the military strength of the whole country, thus making clear the role of the army in the state system. They have enlarged the functions and powers of local executive organs, like managing urban and rural construction in their administrative districts, and training, examining and rewarding executive workers and so forth. They have reformed and reestablished other state organs. This is also in order to strengthen and develop the whole people's congress system. If we merely strengthen the organs of state power at all levels without reforming the other state organs, the organs of state power cannot be truly strengthened. As was pointed out by Comrade Peng Zhen in the explanations on the draft of the revised constitution: "In this way, the rational division of powers of state and their effective exercise will enable our country to be more able to withstand hazards and ensure the development of the socialist cause. At the same time, the division of functions and powers between the organs of state power and administrative organs at various levels from the central to the local bodies, is more reasonable and clear. This is conducive to strictly carrying out the responsibility system in work, raising work efficiency and overcoming bureaucratism.

GUANGDONG SUMS UP DECORUM, COURTESY DRIVE WORK

[Summary] From 14 to 19 June, the propaganda department of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial CYL committee held a forum on the activities of "the five stresses and four beauties." The meeting pointed out: On the basis of noticeable results achieved in the all people decorum and courtesy month, we must take advantage of this opportune moment to arouse the people of the whole province to penetratingly carry on the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties." Through the activities, we will cultivate our cadres and the masses of people who cherish good ideals and are embued with good moral character, culture and discipline and will build an ideological Great Wall in their minds to resist the corrosive influences of capitalist ideology so that they can strive to build the southern gate of the motherland into a show window for displaying our socialist civilization.

Present at the meeting were the propaganda department heads of CCP committees and secretaries of the CYL committees at the prefectural and municipal levels and responsible comrades of departments directly under the province. On the morning of 18 June, comrades participating in the meeting listened to a report on rural work made by Comrade Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee. On the morning of 19 June, Comrade Chen Yueping, member of the standing committee of the provincial CCP committee and head of the propaganda department, made a summation at the meeting.

The forum held: The results achieved in the all people decorum and courtesy month in March were much better than expected. Through the activities, environmental sanitation has obviously changed in large- and medium-sized cities and county towns, public order has taken a favorable turn, and work in service trades has improved. Meanwhile, remarkable success has been achieved in mopping up such spiritual rubbish as reactionary and pornagraphic audio and video tapes and obscene books. However, development of the movement is still uneven. A slackening mood appeared in some localities and departments after March. How to make the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" become a regular practice and institution is a problem calling for solution. We are far from cultivating the habit of doing this and making it a custom. We must exert persistent and unremitting efforts. The forum pointed out that the following problems should be tackled in earnest:

1. It is necessary to deepen the understanding of cadres and the masses in the strategic significance of building socialist spiritual civilization and to form the guiding ideology of building the two civilizations simultaneously. All cadres and the masses must clearly realize that the building of socialist spiritual civilization is one of the essentials to ensure unswerving orientation toward socialism and fulfillment of the general tasks of the four modernizations. All trades and professions including ideological and political work departments and economic work departments must grasp the work of building spiritual civilization and integrate it with their daily work.

2. The activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" must be regarded as the core in the building of socialist spiritual civilization. At present, efforts should be concentrated on paying attention to sanitation, hygiene, politeness and moral character and making the practice a regulation and institution.

3. It is necessary to strengthen education in communist ideology, unrelentingly resist the corrosive influences of the bourgeoisie and mop up spiritual rubbish of all types. It is necessary to further call on party members and cadres to take the initiative in refusing to watch TV programs from Hong Kong and persuade the masses to dismantle the "fishbone antennas." Organs directly under the province must remove all the antennas before the end of June according to the notice issued by Guangzhou municipality.

4. The building of socialist spiritual civilization must also be strengthened in the rural areas by development of the work in the fields of culture, education, sanitation and athletics. We must imbue peasants with socialism, patriotism and collectivism and teach them to work hard for production in order to become affluent. It is necessary to push the activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" according to local conditions so as to change prevailing habits and customs and remold the society.

5. The activities of the "five stresses and four beauties" is a matter of prime importance for the whole party. We must strengthen leadership over it. The CCP committees at all levels must grasp this work to the utmost and resolutely establish the guiding ideology of building the two civilizations simultaneously. They must continue to carry forward the good work style of personally taking a hand in the work and earnestly practicing what they advocate.

On the other hand, we must create public opinion and faster an upsurge in creating progressives. In light of the different characteristics of the PLA units and militia, we must concentrate on solving well the problem of establishing communist ideals, and teach the cadres and fighters to become people with ideals, morality, culture and discipline. They must ensure that they concentrate their minds and energy on unity, wealth and civilization and promote all aspects of work in Xiong County with one heart and one mind.

HEBEI RIBAO ON GRASPING 'SPIRITUAL WEAPONS'

HK250218 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 16 Jun 82 p 4

[Article by Feng Ding [3301 1353]: "Contribute To Grasping Spiritual Weapons for the People"]

[Text] Editor's note: The Hebei People's Publishing House in 1959 published a book "Talking on Outlaws of the Marsh and on Philosophy." It was revised and republished recently in order to meet the readers' demands. We now publish the foreword of this book which was written by famous philosopher Comrade Feng Ding. We hope that there will be more works on philosophy of better quality to offer to the readers in the future. [end of editor's note]

Marx said 140 years ago: "Philosophy takes the proletariat as its own material weapon and, similarly, the proletariat also takes philosophy as its own ideological weapon." From then onwards, the pioneer force of the proletariat -- the communists -- have always spontaneously taken Marxist Philosophy as the theoretical basis of their own ideology and deeds. However, it is still only an ideal to make the people really master dialectical materialism and turn it into a ideological and work approach that they can spontaneously abide by and make use of.

Particularly in a country like ours, where there are 1 billion people, 80 percent of whom are peasants, and where the average cultural standard is very low, the people's limited cultural standard hinders their progress in philosophical studies. In addition, our people are also bound by various old customs and traditions inherited from our ancestors several thousand years ago and by various stupid and backward ideological shackles. Popularizing and improving the people's philosophical cultivation and enabling everybody to be really emancipated ideologically is a tougher task than building material civilization. It is a great goal, which can only be achieved by means of the hard efforts of a few generations. However, scientific philosophy is fundamentally different from metaphysics, which is divorced from reality and is unfathomable. It is, in nature, a correct summation of the practices of a human society, and the broad masses of workers, peasants and people are the main body of production struggle, class struggle and other social practices.

Therefore, our people, being different from all exploiting classes, have the "ability" to readily accept the philosophy which is completely based on the fruits of their efforts in actual practice. In addition to this, under the socialist system, the various principles and policies of the party and the state are guided by Marxist philosophy and all of them accord with the fundamental interests of the people. Thus, this creates another advantageous condition for the masses to accept Marxist philosophy.

Therefore, one very important task of philosophical workers is to do a good job in popularizing and disseminating philosophy and help the peasants and workers who account for the overwhelming majority of the masses grasp the spiritual weapon for emancipating themselves. We should be good at proceeding from the actual cultural level of most of the masses (especially the peasants) at present and publicizing the basic principles of Marxist philosophy in simple forms welcomed by the masses. We should explain the profound in simple terms and integrate theory with reality so that the masses will understand what they read and hear, be interested in it, be inspired by it, believe it to be true and learn to use it to analyze various things they come across, to correctly guide their thinking and work and to avoid and resist various mistakes caused by subjective and one-sided methods of thinking and work.

As we all know, popularizing philosophy is something which Comrade Mao Zedong energetically advocated. He stressed: "Let philosophy be emancipated from the classrooms and books of philosophers and become a powerful weapon in the hands of the masses." This is entirely correct and is the inevitable law of the development of philosophy. In this sense, the work of the "Talking on Outlaws of the Marsh and on Philosophy" writing group deserves recommendation. There are many other themes similar to this. In addition to historical stories of ancient times, all victories scored by the Chinese people in modern times in the people's revolutionary war and in socialist construction under the leadership of the party are typical examples of conscientious application of Marxist philosophy and radiate with the brilliance of dialectic materialism. Viewed from the process of understanding, various setbacks and failures in our advance resulted from violating dialectic materialism. Therefore, if we select some typical positive and negative examples and talk about the philosophical principles involved in them, we can certainly arouse the interest of the broad masses of readers and achieve positive results more easily.

Therefore, I sincerely hope that the publication of "Talking on Outlaws of the Marsh and on Philosophy" and other similar books will encourage more philosophical workers to participate in the work of popularizing philosophy and to write more popular philosophical books of better quality for the broad masses of workers and peasants and youths. This is also a way to contribute to the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

VIGILANCE AGAINST 'SUGAR-COATED BULLETS' URGED

[Text] The present struggle against serious crimes in the economic field is one waged by the proletariat against corruption by capitalist ideology. This struggle exists objectively, independent of man's will. There is nothing strange about this. What deserves our attention is the question of how some Communist Party members and state cadres can go through the rigorous trials of this struggle and resist corruption without being affected by evil, whereas others are defeated under the attack of the capitalist sugar-coated bullets.

There are two reports in our paper today. One is about how the members of the party committee of Yangjien coal mine of Shuo County resisted corruption. The other is about how the members of the party committee of Erpu coal mine of Pinglu County were corrupted. With both positive and negative examples in sharp contrast, the reports have answered our above-mentioned question and given us insight into the following three aspects:

First, we must keep up the communist purity of a Communist Party member forever and never give up justice to pursue personal interests. Why were the members of the party committee of Yangjien coal mine able to resist corruption without being affected by evil under the attack of the sugar-coated bullets? The basic reason is they always remembered to say to themselves: "I am a cadre of the Communist Party." They never forgot the glorious cause of the party, whereas the members of the party committee of Erpu coal mine, anxious to make their fortune, gave up justice to pursue personal interests. They degenerated and fell into the abyss. Harsh reality has again and again taught us that those power holders who give up justice to pursue personal interests are the main targets of the attack of sugar-coated bullets.

There was such a story in "Zuo Zhuan." A person from the county of Song presented a piece of beautiful jade as a gift to Zi Han, a senior official of the country of Qi. Zi Han refused to accept it. The person from the country of Song said: "This is a precious piece of jade. It is especially for you." Zi Han answered: "What I consider most precious is not to pursue fortune and not to give up justice in the face of personal interests. If I accept your precious gift, I will lose my precious one." In order to maintain his noble integrity, Zi Han did not give up justice to pursue personal interests.

We are Communists. Our great "justice" is to fight for the Communist cause forever. With this great "justice" in our hearts, we will be loyal to the party and maintain our Communist purity under any circumstances. Therefore, every party member must strengthen the tempering of his party spirit and do his utmost to make his words and behavior conform with the party constitution. He must fight resolutely against all kinds of unhealthy trends and evil practices and be a genuine Communist Party member.

Second, we must be highly vigilant against evil intentions behind great kindness and never be the captive of bourgeois human feelings. The degeneration of the members of the party committee of Erpu coal mine began with the acceptance of 30 jin of rice in the name of "tasting something fresh" at the "kind invitation" of the person in charge of the contract project. Thirty jin of rice is indeed a small thing. However, it is with this small thing that the person in charge of the contract project made a breach in the party committee of Erpu coal mine in order to achieve his goal of getting power in exchange for bribery.

It is the Marxist viewpoint that, in a society where class exists, "human feelings" always bear the hallmark of class nature. Today, though the exploiting classes have been eliminated in our country, their ideology, including bourgeois human feelings, are still poisoning the souls of the people like vermin. Plenty of cases exposed recently have shown that in order to drag people into the mire, some economic criminals have, through bribery, engaged in corruption and drawn people over to their side under the pretense of "human feelings." Some intended to build up the connection of "being from the same hometown," others intended to build up the connection of "being from the same clan." If they failed to establish the above-mentioned connections, they would try to build up the relationship of "brother and sister." Sometimes they even take advantage of having the same surname, saying: "Your surname is Chen, so is mine. We were from the same family long ago." Here, "human feelings" have become a smoke bomb used by the criminals to attack us. It is precisely on this issue that some comrades cannot stand firm and end up being disarmed ideologically, thus becoming the supporters and accomplices of the criminals.

Third, we must control ourselves when we are alone and never be self-indulgent. This means we must not pursue fortune and do evil even if nodoby is watching. This is a test under special circumstances. Some Communist Party members can behave properly and maintain their noble integrity in their high positions openly. Nevertheless, when there is no supervision, they become self-indulgent and accept the "fragrant bait." At first, the party committee members of Erpu coal mine were scared and did not know how to deal with the bribe offered. But when the person in charge of the contract project presented "gifts" under the circumstance of "nobody is watching," saying "Only Heaven, earth, you and I know it and there will be no problem if you accept it," they accepted all the gifts with a smile.

"With one prick of the needle, all the air inside the balloon is let out." What bribe cannot be exposed! Comrade Liu Shaoqi said: "Even if one works independently without any supervision and with the possibility of doing evil, he has to control himself and never commit any evil." This is the motto which every Communist Party member should bear in mind as the guidance for his behavior to maintain his integrity.

Both the experiences of the party committee of Yangjien coal mine and the party committee of Erpu coal mine have taught us good lessons. We hope that everyone will read these two reports so as to draw on experiences and enhance his immunity, thus becoming powerful in the present struggle against corruption.

TIANJIN MEETING URGES WATER CONSERVATION

[Summary] "On the afternoon of 22 June, the Tianjin Municipal People's Government sponsored a mobilization meeting on water conservation and flood prevention. At the meeting, Liu Jinfeng, deputy mayor of the city, delivered a speech in which he urged the people throughout the city to immediately spring to action to wage a struggle against water shortages and prepare for flood control to ensure that the city copes with the upcoming flood season."

"The meeting was presided over by Yu Fujing, deputy mayor of the city, and over 2,000 persons, including cadres from units at all levels in the city and its suburbs, were on hand."

The meeting noted: The volume of water diverted from the Huanghe River remains at over 38 million cubic meters, which may be used until 10 August. Since this spring, the dry spell in most areas across the city has been relieved by sporadic rainfall. However, the water volume of the rivers through the city cannot meet the needs of the municipal water supply, because of the long-time drought prevailing in the upper reaches. Therefore, people throughout the city are urged to make efforts to conserve water.

Units at all levels should strengthen their leadership over water conservation, build more small reservoirs to dam the water flow as much as possible and adopt strict measures to prevent water pollution. All-out efforts should be made to make the best use of the available water volume in a planned manner by 10 August.

According to weather forecasts, the flood season will come earlier this year. While getting a hold on water conservation, urban and rural areas throughout the city should prepare to cope with serious floods. Leaders at all levels should maintain sharp vigilance and resolutely overcome the idea of leaving things to chance.

"The meeting stressed: In conducting flood-prevention work, localities -- both in the lower urban reaches and in the upper rural reaches -- and departments and units at all levels should take the interests of the whole into account, cooperate with each other and abide by operation arrangements under the unified leadership of the municipal CCP committee and the municipal people's government to both wrest an all-round victory in the struggle of conserving water to combat the drought and conduct flood-prevention work."

OFFICIAL DENIES CHANGE IN POLICY TOWARD USSR

[Text] The Republic of China has said that a visit by local Chinese doctors to the Soviet Union did not signal a change in Taiwan's foreign policy. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said that free Chinese sportsmen and geologists had attended international conferences in the Soviet Union in the past, although Taiwan had no diplomatic relations with Moscow. He said an 18-member delegation from Taiwan was now attending an international cardiologist congress in Moscow on a purely private and professional basis. The spokesman was commenting on a Hong Kong newspaper report suggesting that the doctors' visit might imply a present policy tilt towards the Soviet Union if the United States stopped selling arms to Taiwan. He said such a report was untrue. It just happened that the annual meeting was in Moscow, he added.

Reports from Moscow said that doctors from Israel and South Africa, two other countries which do not have diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, were also among 5,000 delegates at the conference of heart specialists.

An ROC Foreign Ministry spokesman said that the country's basic policy towards the Soviet Union and other communist countries has not changed. He said it will never seek negotiations or compromise with any members of the communist bloc.

BUYING OF FOREIGN MILITARY HELICOPTERS EXAMINED

[Text] According to personnel of units concerned, many European and American aircraft companies are interested in selling antitank and antiship helicopters to our country and the government is considering buying from three of these companies. This represents a strong response to the announcement by units concerned of the diversification of arms purchase sources.

A sales agent for a foreign arms firm pointed out that selling antitank helicopters is not as "sensitive" an issue as selling FX-type fighter planes and is unlikely to be affected by domestic politics since armed helicopters are not capable of offensive operations across the sea and are thus purely defensive weapons. He said that since U.S. arms sales to the Republic of China has been thwarted by the Chinese Communists, the Republic of China has been regarded as a target for arms sales by arms dealers in many countries.

The three aircraft companies and the types of helicopters currently being considered by the government are as follows: the American Bell Aircraft Company and its Bell 212 helicopter; the American Hughes Company and its Hughes 500MD/TOW helicopter; and the West German MBB Company and its BO-105 helicopter. Among them, the Bell Company used to cooperate with our country in producing the UH-H transport helicopter, and the Hughes Company sold our country its Hughes 500MD antisubmarine helicopters used in our destroyers.

The three types of armed helicopters were recently demonstrated at a certain base in southern Taiwan. We are informed that the performance of all three types met the requirements of the military authorities. It has been learned that among the three types, the West German BO-105 is the most expensive and the Bell 212 helicopter has not yet been combat tested. Thus, the government will very possibly choose the Hughes 500MD/TOW helicopter, which performed brilliantly in the Vietnam war.

A military expert pointed out that, strategically, Taiwan's defense is of the island type and therefore must possess an air striking power of high mobility. The new antitank and antiship helicopters loaded with missiles — as soon as they have received combat orders — can rush to the scene of an enemy landing to destroy enemy naval vessels or tanks which have already landed. After their weapons have been fired, these helicopters can refuel and rearm at designated supply pads or bases to fly further combat sorties.

[Text] Jidda, 14 June (CNA) -- Chinese Premier Sun Yun-hsuan has urged the heads of the Chinese missions in the Middle East region to maintain close consultation and coordination so as to achieve common views and unified approaches in a faithful implementation of the government's policy. In a message read at the second annual coordinating meeting of the mission heads Monday, the premier points out that it is of great significance to serve in the Middle East, which has become the focus of international political and economic conflicts as tension heightens in the international situation.

Sun says Saudi Arabia adopting a positive and firm policy has played a leading role in the Arab and Islamic world, thus becoming a stabilizing force in the region. As a result, he continues, the ever-closer friendship between the Republic of China and Saudi Arabia has not only cemented their friendly and close ties but can also contribute to the country's effort to further forge closer ties with those countries in the region it has no diplomatic ties.

He says the Republic of China's work in the region is wide in scope, including commercial promotion, economic and technical cooperation, medical services, cultural exchange, and communication with the Overseas Chinese. WEN WEI PO URGES SOLVING ARMS SALES PROBLEM NOW

[Text] Recently there has been news from a certain source in Washington and from U.S. correspondents in Beijing that China and the United States are jointly drafting a communique for handling Sino-U.S. relations and that they have called this communique the "Shanghai Communique No 2." Up to now, this news has remained a rumor.

Last month, U.S. Vice President Bush and U.S. Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr. visited Beijing in succession to discuss Sino-U.S. relations. Recently Arthur W. Hummel, Jr., U.S. ambassador to China, and James Lilley, director of the American Institute of Taiwan, were summoned back to the United States for consultations which are certainly related to Sino-U.S. and U.S.-Taiwan relations. It seems that the United States is now speeding up the handling of Sino-U.S. relations. The development of Sino-U.S. relations depends on the U.S. attitude toward the Taiwan issue, that is, it depends on how the United States handles the issue of arms sales to Taiwan.

When Vice President Bush visited China, he transmitted to China's leaders three letters from President Reagan, in which President Reagan stated that the United States recognizes [cheng ren] only one China and that he welcomes Beijing's nine-point proposal for peaceful reunification of China. Although a promise to recognize "only one China" is but a reiteration of the principle of the "Shanghai Communique," compared with Reagan's previous stand on Sino-U.S. relations, this is remarkable improvement. However, regarding the issue of arms sales to Taiwan, which has already become the major obstacle to Sino-U.S. relations, no clear and definite way has as yet been found to solve it, though it has been rumored that the United States will pledge that it will not sell arms to Taiwan indefinitely.

It is said that the remaining difference between China and the United States is that the United States insists that China pledge that it will never use military means to reunify with Taiwan.

The Chinese authorities have time and again expressed their hope to hold talks with Taiwan authorities on reunification by peaceful means and they have already taken the initiative. NPC Chairman Ye Jianying's nine-point proposal has shown their spirit of peaceful solution. However, the selection of the means to achieve reunification is China's internal affair and no foreign government has the right to interfere. This is an issue that concerns China's sovereignty. The Chinese authorities have repeatedly and clearly announced this stand on China's sovereignty. If the U.S. Government thinks that according to the U.S. "Taiwan Relations Act" it is empowered to sell arms to Taiwan and that this is an action conforming to its internal law and China is not entitled to interfere, this will constitute an infringement of China's sovereignty. Selling arms to a province of China is interfering in China's internal affairs and infringing on China's sovereignty. The Chinese authorities have time and again clearly declared that they will never give way on this issue of principle.

A clear distinction should be made between the peaceful reunification with Taiwan and U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, which constitutes an infringement of China's sovereignty. China hopes to peacefully reunify with Taiwan through talks and thus avoid using military means. This is what China has consistently upheld. It is because of this attitude of the Chinese authorities that, over the past few years, tension in the Taiwan Strait has remarkably diminished. If the United States disregards this situation and continues to sell arms to Taiwan, it will be creating obstacles to China's peaceful reunification.

Next June the joint venture contract between a U.S. corporation and Taiwan on cooperation in manufacturing F-5E jet planes will expire. The American Congress is examining and discussing whether this contract should be renewed. The Congress is going to adjourn in July and therefore it has to make a decision on this problem before the adjournment. If the Congress approves the renewal of the contract, this will mean covert continuous supplies of arms to Taiwan.

The pro-Taiwan conservative forces in the United States are still working busily and bringing pressure to bear on the U.S. Government in order to enable the United States to continue its arms sales to Taiwan and thus undermine Sino-U.S. relations. That was why, in the past, obstacles were frequently raised in Sino-U.S. relations. The Reagan administration has repeatedly declared that it attaches importance to strategic relations between China and the United States, but in regard to the Taiwan issue, its words and actions are in conflict. The problem now is whether the Reagan administration will be able to pluck up great courage and will be forced to weigh the pros and cons, reject the interference of the conservative forces and make a decision on the issue of arms sales to Taiwan so as to remove the obstacles to the development of Sino-U.S. relations. In this there should be no delay.

WEN WEI PO DISCUSSES SPECIAL ZONE THEORY

[Special feature by correspondent Kuang Yu [1684 1342]: "A Discussion on Special Zone Theory"]

[Text] Shenzhen, which is separated from Hong Kong by a bridge, is now carrying out work that is unprecedentedly arduous since the founding of the PRC some 30 years ago -- trial running a "Chinese-style economic special zone." This newly emerged thing is like a newborn baby, and it is only a little more than 2 years old this year. The growth of this baby has drawn the attention, suspicion and discussion of both Chinese and foreigners. Recently, proceeding from the special zone's nature, significance, role, legislative principles, planned economy and market relations, scholars and experts from Beijing, Shanghai and Fujian and the people concerned from Hong Kong carried out a "physicial examination" of this 2-year-old "baby." Although the report of this "physical examination" is not yet finalized, the reporter will now quote the opinions of some experts on the special zone. I hope this can serve as reference for people in Hong Kong, Macao and foreign countries who are concerned about the construction of the special zone.

It Is Necessary for China To Build Special Zones

In the dicussion "On the Nature of the Economic Special Zones," some experts and scholars held that the establishment of special zones for the export processing industry is a development trend of international economic cooperation. Due to various reasons, the capital of the developed countries and transnational corporations needs some outlets, and since the developing countries have a large labor force and large quantity of natural resources, it is the mutual demand of the developed and developing countries that economic cooperation be carried out. The developing countries can directly accept foreign investment and thus their strong points can be brought into full play and they can import the essential capital, technology and management experiences which they themselves lack. Moreover, accepting direct foreign investment is a good method of international economic cooperation. This has been proven by experiences of all countries. Furthermore, adopting the form of economic special zones is advantageous to importing foreign capital. This, too, has been proven by many countries, in particular, the economies of the developing countries. Therefore, in order to speed up socialist economic construction, it is necessary for China to adopt the form of economic special zone.

The Phenomenon of Corruption Is Not Created by Special Zones

On "How To Understand the Significance and Role of Trial Running an Economic Special Zone," many experts and scholars held that it is inevitable that there will be some shortcomings in the course of trial running a special zone.

We must seriously sum up the experiences and must not exaggerate the shortcomings, nor should we put the blame for some problems emerging in China's economic life on the special zones. The representatives held that ample evidence has illustrated that the phenomena of smuggling, selling of contraband, and giving and taking of bribes are not created by trial special zones. It is similarly wrong to interpret special zones as colonies and concessions, and it is impractical to import too much advanced technology at the initial stage of the special zones.

What Is the Nature of the Economy in the Special Zones?

Regarding "On the Nature of China's Economic Special Zones," two different views can be found in the submitted theses. One holds that since China is a socialist country, the establishment of special zones is to serve the "four modernizations" of our country. Therefore, the nature of special zones should be socialist. The other holds that viewed from the economic base, superstructure and economic laws, special zones have a twofold nature. They are socialist and capitalist in nature. The capitalist component, however, is under the supervision and control of the socialist state. Therefore, the nature of the special zone is state capitalist under socialist conditions. There is another viewpoint among those who hold such a view in their thesis. They hold that although the special zone has a socialist and capitalist nature, which is a form of state capitalism, the aim is to develop socialism. Thus, the socialist aspect is the basic one.

On the question of "what are the legislative principles of the economic special zones," one view holds that the major legislative principles of the economic special zone are: 1) We must adhere to the principle of safeguarding the sovereignty of our state. 2) We must implement the principles of equality and mutual benefit, voluntary participation and consultation, equal value and compensation. 3) In order to demonstrate the special policies of the special zones, we must further open our country and provide more favorable and convenient terms, and all these must be manifested in legislation so as to eliminate the worries of the merchants and attract more investors. 4) We must pay attention to the principle of integrating hard and fast rules with flexible ones. That is to say, we can adopt hard and fast rules with regard to explicit matters such as safeguarding state sovereignty, and the fact that land is for rent, not for sale; with regard to secondary questions, we can adopt flexible rules.

"On the question of the relationship between planned economy and market relations," most participants held that the economy of the special zone should be guided by planned economy with priority given to regulation through market mechanism. Since the economic structure of the economic special zones gives priority to state capitalism and since various economic components exist side by side, most enterprises in special zones are run by foreign merchants or are joint ventures with China. The structure of the system of ownership of the means of production of the special zones determines that the production and circulation of money in special zones will be different from other places in China. We must not mechanically apply the management system of non-special zones to special zones. The enterprises of the special zones are geared to the needs of the international market. Therefore, enterprises should, in a timely way, readjust their production and management system according to the changes in the international market; we must not implement mandatory plans. However, the economy of the special zones should be systematically guided; otherwise, the construction and development of the special zones will lose its bearings and will proceed blindly. This will be unfavorable to the development of the special zones; more important, this will result in failure to achieve the aim in running special zones.

U.S. VETOES SECURITY COUNCIL LEBANON RESOLUTION

[Text] United Nations, Jun 26 (XINHUA) -- The United States today vetoed a resolution demanding the immediate and simultaneous withdrawal of the Israeli and the Palestinian Armed Forces from Beirut and the areas around it. The resolution was put to vote after a full-day intensive consultations among the council's members yesterday.

The United States has all along been supporting the Israeli armed aggression against Lebanon and is reported to be trying to press the PLO to disarm. It is the only member of the Security Council who opposed the draft resolution.

The draft resolution, sponsored by France, demanded that "all the parties observe an immediate cessation of hostilities throughout Lebanon." It demanded "the immediate withdrawal of the Israeli forces engaged round Beirut, to a distance of 10 kilometres from the periphery of that city, as a first step towards the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, and the simultaneous withdrawal of the Palestinian Armed Forces from Beirut, which shall retire to the existing camps."

It "supports all efforts by the Government of Lebanon to ensure Lebanese sovereignty throughout the territory and the integrity and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized frontiers."

It "supports the Government of Lebanon in its will to regain exclusive control of its capital and, to that end, to install in Beirut its armed forces which shall take up positions within Beirut and interpose themselves on its periphery."

It "requests the secretary-general, as an immediate measure, to station United Nations military observers, by agreement with the Government of Lebanon, with instructions to supervise the ceasefire and disengagement in and round Beirut."

Speaking to the council earlier yesterday, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar reassured the council that the United Nations organizations in the Middle East, the United Nations truce supervision organization with its military observers, as well as UNIFIL (United Nations Interim Forces in Lebanon) in southern Lebanon, stood ready to perform any task which the Security Council might wish them to undertake.

RENMIN RIBAO LOOKS AT BURGEONING MISSILE USE

[Report: "A Look at the Role of Sophisticated Missiles From Experience in the Malvinas War"]

[Text] According to reports, U.S. military planners who are currently studying the lessons of the Falklands war have expressed concern that more and more small nations possess sophisticated guided missiles, because countries with powerful navies are less able to withstand attacks by such missiles.

U.S. Atlantic Fleet Commander Adm Harry Train said: "Every country with the money to buy a certain sophisticated weapon constitutes a very great danger. We know these missiles have very great capability for destroying warships."

During the Falklands war, Argentina used French Exocet missiles to attack the British warships. This gave a vivid demonstration of the power of these new weapons.

The military powers will no longer have the monopoly of possession of new weapons. A number of publications studying missile sales have said Iran has more than 12 types of missiles, including some of the most advanced U.S. missiles. Libya has 12 different types of missiles and South Africa 11. The United States has sold many missiles to other NATO countries, who have then proceeded to sell missiles made by themselves to Third World countries.

The French (aerospace) company has sold a total of 1,600 Exocets to 24 countries. These missiles cost $200,000 each before the Falklands war. However, it is said that Argentina offered $1 million each in its search for such missiles during the war.

Certain U.S. missiles have a range of over 100 miles (160 kilometers), but the maximum range of most of those the United States has sold is 40 miles (64 kilometers). The Exocet has a range of 30 miles (48 kilometers). The key parts are certain advanced guidance systems. These systems range from heat-seeking installations to automatic ship-finding radar and to small cameras in the warhead by which a missile-launching pilot in his cockpit can aim the missile by television. British and Israeli jet aircraft have demonstrated the deadly capability of this type of missile.

HAIG RESIGNS; SHULTZ NAMED AS SUCCESSOR

[Text] Washington, June 25 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has resigned and George Shultz, former treasury secretary, has accepted the nomination by President Reagan as his successor.

This was announced by President Reagan at the White House in a very brief announcement this afternoon. Reagan said he made this announcement "with great regret" and that he had respected and admired Haig's "wisdom and counsel."

Later at a press conference at the State Department Haig received a prolonged applause from his staff. He read to the press his letter of resignation to President Reagan in which he said:

"Your accession to office on Jaunary 20, 1981, brought an opportunity for a new and forward looking foreign policy resting on the cornerstones of strength and compassion." "We agreed that consistency, clarity and steadiness of purpose were essential to success. It was in this spirit that I undertook to serve you as secretary of state."

"In recent months, it has become clear to me that the foreign policy on which we embarked together was shifting from that careful course which we had laid out. Under these circumstances, I feel it necessary to request that you accept my resignation."

George Shultz, 61, is executive vice president of Bechtel Corp., a huge international construction company based in San Francisco. A veteran of previous Republican administrations, Shultz served as budget director and secretary of labor under President Nixon. He is now in Europe on business and is expected to arrive in Washington Saturday.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON GOLDWATER'S 'AMNESIA'

[Article by Zhang Dezhen [1728 1795 4176]: "Who Has Amnesia?"]

[Text] U.S. Senator Goldwater, who has come out with a lot of rubbish about Sino-U.S. relations, recently submitted a statement to Congress. In this statement, apart from harping on the old tune of the "strategic value" of Taiwan for the United States, he complained with some emotion that Americans had "let the importance of Taiwan" and its "strategic value" "fade from their memory," and so he held that it was necessary to "remind" Americans to frequently remember this point.

It seems that Goldwater is rather irritated by American "amnesia." However, it has not occurred to him that the one suffering from amnesia is none other than himself. This is because he seems to have clean forgotten about the history of the development of Sino-U.S. relations over the past 30 years.

Let us just look at the more than 20 years from the establishment of the PRC in 1949 to the publication of the Shanghai Communique in 1972; during that time U.S. China policy precisely followed the guiding idea of "never forgetting" the major "strategic value" of Taiwan for the United States. From the occupation of Taiwan by force in 1950 to the signing of the U.S.-Chiang "common defense treaty" in 1954, from the creation of tension in the Taiwan Strait area in 1958 to the attempt to concoct "two Chinas" and "one China and one Taiwan" and so on and so forth, the U.S. aim was none other than to control Taiwan, China's territory, and make it a base for opposing China and expanding in Asia. And what was the result? The facts have shown that the more tightly the United States held onto Taiwan, the more passive its China policy became, and the more it got into a dead end. In the face of these inescapable facts, beginning in the 1970's the U.S. Government was compelled to revise its China policy, and this led to the Shanghai Communique and later the normalization of Sino-U.S. relations. The history of the development of Sino-U.S. relations over the past 30 years tells people that the U.S. Government policy of encroaching on China's sovereignty and interfering in China's internal affairs could get nowhere, and that anyone who pursues unspeakable designs on the Taiwan issue will certainly be rebuffed. This is the dialectics of history.

Very clearly, the United States changed its China policy not because of a sudden whim of a certain power holder but out of its own global strategy. In an article published a few months ago marking the 10th anniversary of the Shanghai Communique, former President Nixon wrote: "We opened our eyes, and established this new relationship for the appropriate reason of national interest." It was precisely because the United States considered its own interests that it recognized [chengren] that there is only one China, that Taiwan is part of China, and that the PRC is the sole legal government of China.

Can it be that Mr Goldwater does not know or is unable to remember the facts cited above? If he does not know them, then this senator is really too ignorant; and if he has forgotten about them, then it is precisely he who is suffering amnesia. Truly it is necessary to "remind," "remind" this amnesia patient.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 'JOY' OF KOREAN UNIFICATION

[Article by Xu Baokang [1776 1405 1660]: "All the People Are Looking Forward to Reunification With One Mind"]

[Text] The "38th Parallel" military demarcation line on the Korean Peninsula lies cruelly in front of all the Korean people. The beautiful 3,000-li-long country has been artificially divided in two, bringing boundless grief upon the compatriots in the North and South. Today the common desire for reunification of the motherland is making itself felt more and more among the Korean people, both in the North and the South, among both the young and the old.

From 3 to 6 November last year, representatives from North Korea, overseas Koreans and Christians held talks in Vienna, Austria, in order to speed up the reunification of the motherland. This is the first such dialogue to be held since the liberation of Korea. The representatives were all moved to tears, shook hands and embraced each other and shouted for joy. At the banquet, they sat eating simple Korean food and ardently toasted each other. They also sang folksongs together and joined hands to dance. In order to cherish this meeting of compatriots, they unanimously agreed that they should not live apart. They moved in together so that they would eat and live in the same place. Within just a few days, under the banner of reunification, they went beyond the boundaries of ideology, beliefs, political views and religion, conducted sincere talks on reunification questions such as an end to the U.S. interference in Korean internal affairs, the withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Korea, the realization of social democracy in South Korea and the establishment of a federal system and deepened mutual understanding. The sense of alienation that had been brought about by the prolonged separation and the misunderstandings and lack of trust that had piled up for so long soon disappeared.

On a clear day, we can just about see the rear mountains of Seoul from the top of (Chanamsan) [1311 0589 1472] Mountain in Kaesong. However, due to the separation of the military demarcation line, the North and the South seem so far away. Over 70 percent of the families in Kaesong City have relatives in South Korea. For the last 30 years or more, these people, together with all their Korean compatriots, have suffered their full share of the anguish of the separation of blood brothers. We visited (Pyonghwayi) [1627 0735 6849] in Panmunjom. This village neighbors (Taesongtong) [1129 5110 3159], which lies south of the demarcation line. From time immemorial, the children of these two villages often played together and adults often dropped in on each other.

Yearning for the day of reunification, the villagers of (Pyonghwayi) have erected two-story residences in the village. Each household has tidied up its best room in preparation for their relatives. One worker in a Kaesong cement factory has worked extremely hard and has produced an extra 1,000-odd tons of cement. He emotionally said that, when the motherland is reunified, this cement will be used for erecting a bridge across the (Sachonogang) [3097 1557 3068] River, so as to facilitate North-South intercourse among compatriots and so that they may all share in the joy of reunion.

For the last 30 years, the Korean people, in order to rid themselves of foreign interference and to oppose the "two Koreas" national splittist policy advanced by South Korea, have waged a protracted and unremitting struggle. The principle of the Korean Workers Party and government of persisting in an independent and peaceful reunification of the motherland and their consistent policy of stressing realization of reunification through talks, as well as the correct plan put forth by President Kim Il-song for the establishment of a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo, have won the broad support and praise of all the Korean people and peace-loving people throughout the world. Korea's desire for reunification represents the general trend of things and is part of the historical tide.

However, the Chon Tu-hwan clique, under the protection of the United States and in the footsteps of Pak Chong-hui, has cried out in an aggravating manner that "there can only be resistance toward the North for peaceful reunification is inconceivable." They have wantonly stirred up mutual distrust and antagonistic feelings between the North and the South. They have also stated that "all those using or spreading words or proposals of agreement with the North will automatically be severely punished." As for this stupid course of action taken by Chon Tu-hwan, the people of South Korea were right in saying: Pak Chong-hui was shot for pursuing a policy that was opposed to dialogue and reunification and Chon Tu-hwan from Kyongsang Province will in the end follow Pak Chong-hui to his grave.

MASS ANTI-U.S. RALLY HELD IN PYONGYANG

[Text] Pyongyang, June 25 (XINHUA) — Over 100,000 Pyongyang inhabitants held a mass rally at the Kim Il-song Square today to mark "June 25, day of struggle against U.S. imperialism."

Addressing the mass rally, Chong Chun-ki, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Worker's Party of Korea and vice-premier of the Administration Council, said: The Korean war provoked by U.S. imperialism on June 25, 1950, was a most brigandish and shameful war of aggression aiming to occupy the whole of Korea, make the entire Korean people colonial slaves and, furthermore, realise its wild ambition for Asian and world supremacy and, was a most brutal and criminal war of genocide without precedent in the world history of war.

He pointed out that today U.S. war-hawks are zealously instigating the South Korean puppets to war preparations, continuously supplying them with up-to-date weapons and equipment while beefing up their own armed forces in South Korea. He bitterly denounced the U.S. imperialists for illegally occupying the southern half of Korea for 37 years and imposing immeasurable misfortunes and sufferings upon the South Korean people, and condemned the Chon Tu-hwan clique, the executor of their colonial rule, for seeking fascism and war, treachery and division. He declared: If national sovereignty is to be achieved throughout the country, it is imperative, first of all, to force the U.S. imperialist aggressor troops to withdraw from South Korea. He called on the people in South Korea under the banner of independence and sovereignty, to oppose the U.S. imperialists' occupation and resolutely fight to overthrow their colonial rule. In order to accomplish the cause of national reunification, the proposal for founding the Democratic Conferderal Republic of Koryo advanced by the great leader Comrade Kin Il-song should be realised, he stressed.

An appeal to the South Korean people was adopted at the rally. A mammoth demonstration was launched following the rally. All papers here today dedicated editorials to "June 25, day of struggle against U.S. imperialism", demanding the withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Korea.

FOREIGN MINISTRY PROTESTS SRV'S SEIZURE OF BOATS

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Foreign Ministry today sent a note to the Vietnamese Embassy to China, strongly protesting the Vietnamese piracy of assaulting and seizing a Chinese fishing vessel in the Gulf of Tonkin recently.

The note says: "On 16 June 1982, while fishing vessels of the Beicun production brigade, Longmen commune, Qinzhou County, Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, China, were engaged in normal fishing operations in Chinese territorial waters to the south of Baisuyan in the Gulf of Tonkin, fishing vessel No. 1353 was suddenly attacked and seized by armed Vietnamese vessels at 21 degrees 20 minutes 15 seconds north and 108 degrees 11 minutes and 45 seconds east at 1610 hours. Abroad this vessel were Lin Ruifeng and two other fishermen."

It points out that "in open defiance of international law, the Vietnamese authorities have recently made repeated attacks on Chinese fishing vessels, disrupting the normal fishing operations of Chinese fishermen and brazenly seized Chinese fishing vessels and fishermen. Such barbarous deeds are not to be tolerated."

"The Chinese Government hereby lodges a strong protest with the Vietnamese authorities and sternly warns them that they must immediately stop all assaults and harassment on Chinese fishing vessels, send back all the seized Chinese fishermen and fishing vessels and compensate for all the losses incurred therefrom," it stresses.

VODK SAYS KAMPUCHEANS HAIL COALITION GOVERNMENT

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (XINHUA) -- The Kampuchean people, the National Army and guerrillas heartily welcome the declaration on the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and will unite with all nationalities throughout the country to drive the Vietnamese aggressors out of Kampuchea, in the spirit of the declaration, says a commentary broadcast by radio Democratic Kampuchea today.

In the past three years, the commentary says, "the Patriotic and Democratic Front of the Great National Union of Kampuchea, the government, the people and the army and guerrillas of Democratic Kampuchea have all along cherished the hope that all nationalities across the country would unite and strengthen the resistance forces against Vietnamese aggressors militarily, politically and diplomatically, so as to liberate our nation and people from the shackles of the Vietnamese aggressors, restore peace in Kampuchea and enable the Kampuchean people to live in peace and happiness, and build an independent, neutral, non-aligned and prosperous Kampuchea."

The formation of the coalition government, the commentary points out, "meant a grievous failure for the Vietnamese aggressors both in political and diplomatic fields." It says, "in order to undermine the great national unity of Kampuchea, the Vietnamese authorities have resorted to all kinds of sabotages. But the Kampuchean people, who have a glorious tradition of opposing foreign aggression, treasure the interest of the nation above anything else and cherish the strong will to liberate the motherland from the hands of the Vietnamese aggressors. Therefore, the three resistance forces, through full consultations, finally reached agreement on the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea so as to offer more powerful resistance against the Vietnamese aggression."

The Kampuchean army and people will continue to hold aloft the banner of resistance, make all efforts to accomplish their tasks in different posts and make contributions to the liberation of their motherland, the commentary concludes.

U.S.-WESTERN EUROPE PIPELINE DISPUTE DISCUSSED

RENMIN RIBAO Article

[Report: "New Dispute Breaks Out Between United States and Western European Allies"]

[Text] After U.S. President Reagan announced on 18 June the expansion of the ban on the export of oil and natural gas equipment to the Soviet Union, West Germany and other Western European countries expressed their unhappiness, saying that this would have an unfavorable effect on European-U.S. relations. However, the U.S. State Department insists that the expansion of U.S. sanctions against the Soviet Union is essential, and hopes that its allies will take a united stand. According to reports, this U.S. Government decision means that overseas affiliates and licensees of American companies may not use U.S. patents to manufacture turbines required for the natural gas pipeline between the Soviet Union and Western Europe. This will directly affect the execution of the plan by West Germany and other Western European countries to lay the natural gas pipeline. U.S. Deputy Commerce Secretary Olmer [title as received] estimates that this will automatically halt the natural gas pipeline project and delay it for 2 years. Schmidt has on the one hand persisted in the steelpipe natural gas deal with the Soviet Union, while on the other hand expressing the worries and regrets of the West German and other Western European governments on being informed of the U.S. Government's decision. The EEC foreign ministers meeting adopted a statement on 22 June criticizing the U.S. move as a deviation from the principles of international law and declaring that the EEC could not accept it. France even said on 23 June that it would not be bound by the U.S. decision.

U.S. State Department spokesman Fischer said on 22 June when speaking on the West German Government's criticism that President Reagan's decision to expand sanctions against the Soviet plan to lay the natural gas pipeline was essential for making emphatically clear the "deep unhappiness" of the United States over the Polish affair. Fischer said although West German officials have complained that economic sanctions are ineffective, the Soviet project to build the pipeline to bring natural gas to Western Europe is "behind schedule," and it will be further hampered by this U.S. move. He held: "Failure to acquire U.S. equipment and technology will at least increase the expenditures on this project and compel the Soviet Union to spend an extra amount of its scarce wealth." Fischer said: "We recognize that this (U.S.) decision will cause some losses to our allies. However, American companies are also suffering heavy losses." He expressed his "hope that we will be able to take a common stand with our allies on this issue."

According to reports, although Japan has not participated in the Siberia-Western Europe natural gas pipeline project, it reached an agreement some time ago with the Soviet Union on working together to exploit the oil and gas of the Sakhalin continental shelf. The U.S. decision is certain to affect the implementation of this agreement. Hence, Japan's International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe summoned the U.S. ambassador to Japan on the same day that Reagan announced the expansion of sanctions and warned him that unless the United States rescinded this measure, relations between Japan and the United States would become tense.

This new row between the United States and its allies has broken out less than a fortnight after the seven-nation Western summit at Versailles, which made some effort to bridge mutual differences of opinion. Western public opinion has expressed deep concern and unease over this.

XINHUA Report

["Roundup: U.S.-Europe Quarrel Over Gas Pipeline Surfaces Again -- by Correspondent Yu Enguang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Only two weeks after the "Versailles summit" of the seven industrialised nations, the old quarrels between Washington and its major allies over the natural gas pipeline project with the Soviet Union have resumed.

Fresh regulations announced by the U.S. on June 18 to ban the sale of equipment produced by foreign subsidiaries of U.S. companies or built under U.S. licenses, with a view to blocking the construction of the Siberian pipeline, have been condemned by many of its European allies as well as Japan.

Attacking the U.S. move, foreign ministers of the European Economic Community countries said in a June 22 statement that it "implies an extra-territorial extension of United States jurisdiction which in the circumstances is contrary to the principles of international law." West German Finance Minister Manfred Lahnstein said on June 23 that the U.S. measures undermined "the basis of trust and belief in international relations" in disregard of "sovereignty of other countries". France said on the same day that it would not comply with the new U.S. move. British Prime Minister Mrs. Thatcher, during her talks with President Reagan,complained that the U.S. decision would harm the interests of British companies. The U.S., however, said it had its own principles concerning the pipeline problem. Japanese Minister of International Trade and Industry Shintaro Abe on June 18 summoned the U.S. ambassador in Tokyo, telling him bluntly that his country's ties with the U.S. might encounter difficulties if the new measures were not cancelled.

Turning a deaf ear to the strong opposition of its allies, the U.S. Department of Commerce made clear on June 23 that foreign companies would be refused "merchandise or data" from the U.S. if they violate the June 18 regulations.

The Americans have insisted that the pipeline project could serve as a blood infusion to the troubled Soviet economy and could even facilitate Moscow's military expansion. They have also argued that over-dependence on the Russian natural gas could have serious consequences on the Western alliance politically.

Obviously, both parties to the pipeline dispute have their own considerations. Western European nations are of the view that to develop economic relations with the Soviet Union will be in their own interests and will help restrain the Soviet Union and promote detente. They pointed out that the United States should not carp on the economic activities of West European countries and that the sovereignty of the latter should be respected. They argued that the U.S. sanctions against the Soviet Union would be to no avail and would even backfire internationally, creating more troubles for the West. The West European nations and Japan termed it as "very unfair" for the United States to impose sanctions on the natural gas pipeline, while the United States itself has removed grain sanctions against the Soviet Union.

The quarrel shows that the compromise reached at the "Versailles summit" on East-West economic relations is very brittle, unable to paper over their essential contradictions. It is revealed that the United States did not bring up at the summit the issue of U.S.-made equipment for use in the natural gas pipeline project in order to gain concessions from Western Europe and Japan on the issue of credits for the Soviet Union, thus leaving a vagueness in the final accord which allows various interpretations and approaches. Hence the present accusations by each side against the other of violating the Versailles understanding.

How the present quarrel would evolve has drawn the attention in the political circles and press of the West. The CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR had this to say: If the two sides did not exercise restraint and give rein to the quarrel, "the entire Western alliance could be hurt."

Schmidt Criticism Noted

[Text] Bonn, June 24 (XINHUA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today criticized the United States for extending its embargo against the Soviet Union. Speaking at the Bundestag (lower house) on the government's foreign policy, he said the U.S. decision would exert a disadvantageous influence upon European-U.S. relations.

The U.S. Government decided on June 18 to impose further economic sanctions on the Soviet Union, banning products manufactured abroad by U.S. owned or controlled subsidiaries and foreign firms using U.S. technical data under licensing arrangements. The U.S. embargo was mainly directed at turbines destined for the Siberian pipeline carrying natural gas to Western Europe.

Schmidt said West Germany, together with other West European countries, learned with concern and regret of the American Government's decision. The EEC statement Tuesday noted the U.S. move, which contradicts norms of international law, cannot be accepted by the EEC. The chancellor said West Germany, faithful to the contract, will stick to the natural gas pipeline deal.

Italian Officials' Remarks

[Text] Rome, June 26 (XINHUA) -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini said he was disturbed at the U.S. move which had been expressed by President Reagan to extend the embargo on the Soviet Union, CORRIERE DELLA SERA reported today. He said the U.S. move "will have a negative impact not only in bilateral relations, but also in the complicated relations between the European Economic Community and the United States." His remarks were contained in a communique issued after his meeting with Vice President Xavier Ortoli of the EEC Commission here yesterday. Premier Spadolini said the U.S. decision "contradicts with the unanimity reached in Versailles. Its danger lies in that it will cause a split in the unity of the democratic industrial countries. At present, what the complicated world economic situation demands is utmost unanimity and collective responsibility."

Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo wrote to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig yesterday, expressing serious concern and reservation over the U.S. decision. He said in the letter that the U.S. measures would probably damage the trade relations which had been improved before the Polish incident broke out. This would thus cause great losses to the Italian enterprises and produce negative influence on employment in these enterprises. He added that the measures announced by Washington would bring serious consequences to the economy of the West European countries.

12TH LCY CONGRESS, PENG ZHEN ACTIVITIES REPORTED

CCP Greeting to Congress

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Communist Party of China today sent a message of warmest greetings to the 12th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia. The message reads: On behalf of all the members of the Communist Party of China and the people of the various nationalities of China, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China most warmly congratulates the League of Communists of Yugoslavia on the successful convocation of its twelfth congress and, through the congress, expresses its greatest admiration to the glorious communists and heroic people of Yugoslavia.

The League of Communists of Yugoslavia has been marching on a brilliant and militant road for over 60 years. With the great Marxist Comrade Josip Broz Tito as its outstanding leader and arming its ranks with the sharp weapon of Marxism, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia has won through hard struggle great victories in the cause of revolution and socialism in Yugoslavia.

During the Second World War, the Communist Party of Yugoslavia led the people of the various nationalities of the country in defeating the insufferably arrogant German and Italian fascist invaders under extremely difficult conditions. Because of this, the people of Yugoslavia have become known to the world as a heroic people. As a result of the struggle, Yugoslavia won its liberation and began to embark on the road of socialist development. Being responsible to the working class and the people of Yugoslavia and proceeding from the reality of the country, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia has founded the socialist system of self-management by applying Marxism in a creative way, and gained brilliant achievements in socialist construction. Today, Yugoslavia is standing majestically on the coast of the Adriatic Sea as a totally new, independent and prosperous socialist country, where the people of the various nationalities live in harmony and fraternal love.

The League of Communists of Yugoslavia has always held high the banner of national independence, opposing imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism, and safeguarding world peace. Internally, it has established the powerful system of total national defence and social self-protection, defeated sabotage and subversion by internal and external hostile forces, and effectively safeguarded national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. On the international scene, it unswervingly carries out the policy of non-alignment, devoting itself to the defence of the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement and the consolidation of the unity of the movement; it actively supports the liberation struggles of the oppressed nations and peoples, and consistently stands on the side of the people of the various countries in their struggle to gain or defend national independence and oppose foreign aggression. In the international communist movement, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, defying the might and fearing no strong pressure, carries out irreconcilable struggles in its heroic defence of the fundamental norms on independence and total equality which govern the relations between the communist and workers' parties, and it has thereby made an outstanding contribution to the sound development of the international communist and workers' movement, and set a good example.

During the last two years, the people of the various nationalities of Yugoslavia, under the correct leadership of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, have been firmly carrying on the cause of Comrade Tito and confidently marching forward along the road charted by him. We firmly believe that after the closing of the congress, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia will become further strengthened in its ideology, organization and practice, and that Yugoslavia will definitely be able to overcome any difficulties and obstructions on its way forward and win still greater victories in its struggle to perfect and develop the socialist system of self-management, to safeguard and strengthen the unity of the various nationalities, to persist in the non-alignment policy and to achieve international political and economic equality.

Our two parties have the same aim and the same historical suffering and have both grown strong amidst the fire of revolution. Since the victory of the revolution, they have both persisted in the principle of independence, in carrying out revolution and construction. In the course of developing the relations of the two parties, both of them have adhered to the fundamental norms of independence, total equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. We are very happy to note that during the recent years the mutual understanding between our two parties, two countries and two peoples has continuously been deepened, their friendship enhanced and relations of co-operation widened. Such friendship and co-operation between us not only accords with the wishes and interests of our two peoples, but also benefits the progress of mankind and the cause of world peace. We are deeply convinced that the beautiful blossoms of revolutionary friendship cultivated by our two parties, two countries and two peoples will bear more heart-gladdening fruit in our common struggles in the future.

We wish the Twelfth Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia a success! May the people of the various nationalities of Yugoslavia win new victories in their socialist construction! May the friendship between our two parties, two countries and two peoples be ever green!

U.S. ADMINISTRATION'S MIDDLE EAST POLICY VIEWED

XINHUA on Reagan 'Gamble'

["Commentary: A Dangerous Political Gamble -- by XINHUA Correspondent Wu Jin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, June 24 (XINHUA) -- It has been three weeks since Israel invaded Lebanon and now that Beirut is under intensified military attacks and encirclement, many signs point to the possibility of more adventurist aggression by Menahem Begin's authorities despite strong opposition from the world. This unbridled attitude of the Israeli authorities is a direct result of the open support it gets from the U.S. Government. As recently pointed out, "doubts do not exist that the United States gave Israel a 'wink and nod' to invade Lebanon." In his speech delivered after meeting Begin on June 21, U.S. President Ronald Reagan did not mention Israel's military invasion of Lebanon and the serious consequence it caused. On the contrary, Reagan sang the same tune as Begin and urged "all foreign forces" to withdraw from Lebanon so that Israel would not suffer from any harmful results of the violence.

Reagan's speech is considered to be an important revision of U.S. policy toward the Middle East. Before Israel invaded Lebanon, the Reagan administration had tried to reach an agreement on Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip through negotiations within the framework of the Camp David accord. The United States also tried to find a solution to the Palestinian problem and the dispute between Israel and the Arab nations. However, the only thing heard now is Reagan talking about his open support for the aggressive policy of the Begin administration and his acquiesence to Israel's occupation of Arab cities and its bombing with U.S. weapons.

U.S. presidential special envoy Philip Habib is wantonly operating as an agent of Israel in the Middle East, scheming with pro-Israeli forces in Lebanon to help them get to power or trying to persuade the Palestine Liberation Organization to surrender in cooperation with Israel's military pressure.

What Reagan is up to is nothing but a political gamble. There is an indication that both Reagan and Begin are convinced that Israel's military offensives had dealt a deadly blow to the PLO's resistance forces. With this in mind, Israel is indulged in the wishful thinking of thoroughly destroying the PLO's resistance forces by shaking the Palestinians' confidence for national self-determination. It is also trying to force the Arab countries to accept Israel's occupation and control of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip under the name of "autonomy."

The Reagan administration believes this is an "excellent chance" to break the Middle East deadlock and has proceeded with supporting Israel. Some U.S. officials believe it is disadvantageous for the United States to openly back Israel's invasion of Lebanon because of the effect it will have on U.S.-Arab relations and because it will cause U.S. efforts to fail in seeking a strategic identity in the struggle against the Soviet Union. However, others believe that since there has been no breakthrough in the Middle East deadlock for a long time and a "comprehensive solution" remains unrealizable within the foreseeable future, Israel's "military victory" may "open up" a new prospect. They, therefore, believe there is no harm trying. Evidently, Reagan has accepted the latter opinion.

An article in the latest issue of U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT pointed out: "The (U.S.) administration is operating on faulty premises." TIME magazine said: "A large number of experts attacked the notion that invasions might offer any long-term solutions to the Middle East crisis." The magazine also quoted a former under secretary of state as saying that the current military situation "certainly does not mean an end to PLO activity." The former official said the idea that the intrusion will increase opportunities for solving the PLO question is "self-deception." The intrusion will only "make real negotiations impossible," he said. Newspapers here have pointed out that people have every reason to worry about the grave consequences that may result from the Reagan administration's current political gamble. The United States cannot evade situations such as responses from the Arab countries and world public opinion; further development of various contradictions in the Middle East; new splits and realignment of various forces; and another superpower's expansion in the region.

RENMIN RIBAO on Begin Visit

["International Jottings: by Te An [3676 1344]: "Washington Mouths High-Sounding Words"]

[Text] Washington mouths high-sounding words as Beirut burns. On 21 June U.S. President Reagan welcomed Begin, the arsonist who lit the flames of war in Lebanon, to the White House as an honored guest. They echoed each other, prattling about such stuff as the United States and Israel both hoped to "find a way to end the violence" in Lebanon and putting on a show of being "extremely concerned" "for peace in the Middle East." A splendid "end to the violence!" At the very moment they were mouthing these high-sounding words, the Israeli aggressor army was carrying out a ceaseless and sustained indiscriminate bombardment of Beirut, the Lebanese people's blood was flowing in streams, and smoke billowed into the sky over the city. At present the Israeli aggressor army's iron heels are trampling on the Lebanese people's land, powerful Israeli forces surround Beirut, and other Lebanese cities such as Sidon and Tyre are being ravaged. Countless Lebanese villages have been pulverized. Against the background of these scenes, who does Washington want to "end the violence?"

Reagan and Begin are not seeking and will not seek a way to end Israeli "violence." Instead, they are doing everything possible to "end" the existence of the PLO's revolutionary armed forces. Israel has consistently tried to redraw the political map of the Middle East by violence, and right now it is trying to wipe out the Palestinian armed forces. Both in the four-point so-called "conditions for troop withdrawal" put forward by Israel and in the four-point so-called "peace proposal" put forward by U.S. special envoy Habib, the vital point lies in "the existence of no PLO armed forces" and in forcing the Palestinian people to hand over their arms. Obviously, Washington is very clear about who to love and who to hate on the question of violence. Israel alone is allowed to light fires, and the Palestinian and Lebanese people are not allowed to extinguish them -- this is the principle the United States has consistently followed. However, has Washington thought of the price it will have to pay for acting in this fashion?

MUBARAK REQUESTS U.S. INTERVENTION IN LEBANON

[Text] Cairo, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak in an urgent cable to U.S. President Ronald Reagan today urged Washington to intervene and stop Israel's military operations in Beirut.

According to MENA, Mubarak pointed to the grave consequences the area would face if no urgent action was taken to stop the fighting immediately. MENA also reported that the Egyptian Government has sent instructions to 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid, its permanent delegate to the United Nations, to take part in the Security Council session and to support a French draft resolution on enforcing a ceasefire and bringing about disengagement of all forces in Beirut. Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali called on American Ambassador Alfred Atherton today and asked for United State support of the French initiative on Lebanon at the U.N. Security Council. Ghali told reporters that Egypt was also in contact with members of the European Economic Community and non-aligned countries on Lebanon. He added that Cairo had also proposed the convening of a meeting of foreign ministers of the non-aligned states to discuss the Lebanese situation.

PRC UN ENVOY CONDEMNS ISRAELI 'AGGRESSION'

[Text] United Nations, June 26 (XINHUA) -- "Israel must immediately halt its aggression against Lebanon and unconditionally withdraw all its troops from Lebanon," stated Ling Qing, Chinese permanent representative to the U.N., at the seventh emergency special session of the U.N. General Assembly here this morning.

He said: "This massive armed aggression against Lebanon has been premeditated by the Israeli authorities. Taking advantage of the present international situation, they attempt to write off the Palestinian people's struggle for their right to national self-determination and perpetuate Israel's armed occupation of the West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip by smashing the Palestine Liberation Organization bases in Lebanon and annihilating the armed forces of the PLO. It is also their intention to put Lebanon in the Israeli sphere of influence and undermine the unity of the Arab people." He pointed out that the United States vetoed two draft resolutions in the Security Council condemning Israel and calling for Israeli withdrawal. "The United States has actively supported Israel to attain its strategic objective in Lebanon and, therefore, bears the unshirkable responsibility for the serious situation in the Middle East resulting from the Israeli aggression against Lebanon," he said. Ling Qing reiterated that "the Chinese Government has consistently held that Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, and the national rights of the Palestinian people, including the rights to return to their homeland, to national self-determination and to set up their own state, must be restored."

The Chinese ambassador expressed the hope that the Arab people will strengthen their unity and persist in their struggle to achieve a just and reasonable settlement of the Middle East question.

FORUM ON RECTIFYING PRIMARY PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (XINHUA) -- A recent forum on the rectification of primary party organizations, sponsored by the Organization Department of the CCP Central Committee, stressed that as the all-round rectification of industrial enterprises is being carried out by stages and in groups, an important task now facing us is to successfully rectify primary party organizations, especially the ones with many serious problems in rural areas and on other fronts.

Attending the forum were responsible comrades of the organization departments of 11 provincial and municipal party committees in Beijing, Liaoning, Jilin, Heilongjiang, Shanghai, Shandong, Hunan, Guangdong, Sichuan, Yunnan and Qinghai as well as responsible comrades of some prefectural, municipal and county party committees and primary party organizations. They studied the party Central Committee's instructions on the rectification of primary party organizations and the strengthening of political and ideological work. They exchanged experiences gained in some localities in doing this work and discussed the future task of rectifying primary party organizations.

After analyzing the basic conditions in primary party organizations, the forum pointed out: Primary party organizations on the industrial, agricultural, financial and trade, cultural and educational fronts are good or relatively good and are strong. They unite and lead large numbers of party members and nonparty people in conscientiously implementing the lines, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, thus ensuring the smooth development of socialist modernization.

Thr forum also pointed out: A small number of primary party organizations on each front have many problems. Some primary party organizations are impure to a serious extent; some are weak and lax and do not have a strong fighting capability; some are even in a paralyzed or semiparalyzed state; and still others, unable to withstand the test of class struggle under new historical conditions, have become corrupt and rotten under the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas. These situations should arouse our serious vigilance.

The forum pointed out: It is necessary to rectify primary party organizations under the unified leadership of party committees and in coordination with the party's central task. The departments concerned should jointly be responsible for specific work and coordinate with one another in organizing personnel to perform this work. Various localities' experiences show that primary party organizations, the rectification of which higher-level party committees have examined closely and for the rectification of which they have made proper arrangements, have carried forward the three important styles of integrating theory with practice, forging close ties with the masses and practicing criticism and self-criticism; have become pure politically, ideologically and organizationally; and have generally strengthened their fighting capabilities.

The forum emphasized: In rectifying primary party organizations, it is essential to persistently stress rectifying them ideologically. Ideological education should be grasped as the central link in the rectification, and the process of rectifying primary party organizations should be one of widespread education for party members in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. It is necessary to educate party members in communist ideals, the party's lines, principles and policies, the basic knowledge of the party and particularly in the knowledge of how to combat the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas according to actual conditions in order to enable them to raise their political consciousness and strengthen their party spirit. All party members should keep firmly in mind that the ultimate aim of our party is the realization of communism, that the basic purpose of our party is to serve the people wholeheartedly, and that members must faithfully fulfill the pledge they gave when joining the party, uphold the four fundamental principles and struggle for the cause of communism all their lives.

The key to rectifying primary party organizations lies in successfully rectifying and building the leading bodies of basic-level party committees, general party branches and party branches.

Only when the leading bodies of primary party organizations have been rectified will there be a reliable guarantee for the success of the rectification in other aspects. In the course of rectification, a prudent attitude should be taken in adopting organizational measures. It is necessary to evalute erring comrades in an all-round way and deal with them in different ways according to the nature of their mistakes, the seriousness of their cases as well as their attitudes and consistent performance. A distinction should be made between those who committed mistakes during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the "three kinds of people," between those with the problem of following unhealthy tendencies and those engaged in criminal economic activities and between those who have made general mistakes in the way of life and those who are degenerate and corrupt. In handling their cases, it is necessary to respect their rights as party members, hear their own opinions and allow them to present their cases and defend themselves. The handling of the case of each party member should be based on clear facts and conclusive evidence. Each case must be properly handled and its nature must be accurately determined so that our handling of the case will be able to withstand the test of history. Methods and steps for rectifying primary party organizations should be adopted according to the actual conditions in various localities. The rectification of primary party organizations should be carried out by stages and in groups in light of production and other work.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator

[RENMIN RIBAO 27 June commentator's article: "Pay Attention to the Rectification of the Party's Primary Organizations"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (XINHUA) -- Our party is the ruling party with more than 39 million members and more than 2 million primary organizations. Each primary organization of the party lives among the masses and maintains close ties with the masses. The party's line, principles and policies are implemented among the masses through the primary organizations; the opinions, demands and voices of the vast numbers of party members and the masses of the people are made known to the party's leading organs through the primary organizations. The party's primary organizations are cells forming the body of the party. Only when every cell is full of vigor and vitality will the health of the entire body be reliably guaranteed; the work and fighting capacity of the primary organizations have a direct bearing on the work of the party as a whole.

Our party has always attached importance to the rectification and building of its primary organizations. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, we have carried out a series of tasks to bring order out of chaos in party building, and the conditions of the party's primary organizations have taken on great changes. Most of the primary organizations are now able to conscientiously implement the party's line, principles and policies and unite and lead the masses in striving to build a modern and powerful, highly democratic and culturally advanced socialist country. However, we must also soberly see that because of the serious damage done to the party by Lin Biao and the "gang of four," because of the corrosive influence of decadent capitalist ideas and remnant feudalistic ideas on the party ranks and because of certain shortcomings in our work, some of the party's primary organizations are lax and weak and do not have a strong fighting capacity; a small number of primary organizations are in a paralyzed or semiparalyzed state; and a few primary organizations, unable to withstand attacks by sugar-coated bullets of the bourgeoisie, have become corrupted and rotten. Such primary organizations, though only a minority in the whole party, have hurt the party's image and weakened the party's fighting capacity. We are now in a new historical period, and the new situation and new tasks have set higher demands on the party's primary organizations. We must rectify and build up the party's primary organizations, strengthen the lax, weak, paralyzed and semiparalyzed ones, further strengthen the body of our party and increase its fighting capacity.

In the past few years, the party's leading departments in quite a few localities have rectified some primary organizations in conjunction with production and work and have achieved some results. However, leading party organs in some places still do not quite understand the necessity and urgency of rectifying the party's primary organizations. Some worry that rectifying the primary organizations will adversely affect production and work and therefore are not enthusiastic about it. Experience from experiments conducted in various places have proved: In rural areas, where the party's primary organizations with more and serious problems were rectified in good time in conjunction with the work of summing up and perfecting the production responsibility system, the backwardness there was changed, and work and production development were accelerated. In the all-round rectification of industrial enterprises by stages and in groups, when the party's primary organizations were rectified earnestly, the all-round rectification of enterprises was pushed forward, and the results of enterprise rectification were consolidated.

We stress that the party must take care of itself. Strengthening the rectification and building of the party's primary organizations is an important aspect of the party's taking care of itself. We must not allow some of the party's primary organizations to become paralyzed and even rotten, and we must not look on passively while viruses spread in the party's body and seriously harm the party. We must actively carry out this task with a highly responsible spirit and a serious attitude.

In rectifying the party's primary organizations, we should insist on putting the stress on ideological rectification and concentrate on education and raising the standards of party members. Of course, we should also carry out necessary organizational rectification. We should focus our attention on rectifying the leading bodies of primary party committees, general party branches and party branches. As long as party committees at various levels pay attention to this task, put it on their agenda, strengthen leadership and adopt proper methods, we will certainly be able to do a good job in rectifying and building up the party's primary organizations.

[Speech by Zhou Yang delivered on 12 May to the "symposium on Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art" jointly sponsored by the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles and the Institute of Literature: "It Is Necessary To Persist and Develop Mao Zedong's Thinking on Literature and Art"]

[Text] Summary: Regarding Mao Zedong literary and art thought, we should first adhere to it and second develop it. We should not separate Mao Zedong Thought from Marxism-Leninism, nor separate Mao Zedong literary and art thought from the whole system of Mao Zedong Thought, nor separate Mao Zedong literary and art thought from the thousands of years of our country's cultural tradition or from the revolutionary tradition of literature of the May Fourth Movement.

Adherence to Mao Zedong literary and art thought is certainly a must. However the adherence does not mean stagnation and we should develop it while adhering to it. There have already been unprecedentedly great changes both at home and abroad since the "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art." Some comrades rigidly adhere to old slogans and in this way fall out of step with the progress of the times.

The fact that we have refrained from mentioning that literature and art are subordinate to politics does not mean that literature and art are not related to politics or that we can separate literature and art from politics. The so-called going deep into life does not mean being an onlooker but means taking an active part in life. The problem concerning alienation is important and we should make special research into it.

How Marxism-Leninism will develop in China depends on how it is integrated with China's history and present situation. [end summary]

In order to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the publication of the "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art" the comrades of the literary and art circles in Beijin held a "symposium on Mao Zedong literary and art thought." This symposium was well held.

The emergence of many different opinions on literary and art problems is a good thing and not a bad thing, for this proves that we are actively thinking things over. We should not demand identity in our opinions on all problems because this is impossible, but on problems of principle we should strive to seek identity in building ideology. As for the CCP Central Committee's literary and art policies, Comrade Deng Xiaoping already expounded on them in his congratulatory speech at the fourth national congress of literary and art workers. Comrade Hu Yaobang has also made quite a few speeches. Recently Comrade Hu Qiaomu again published his speech at the forum on problems on the ideological front, in which he also said something about literature and art. All the above-mentioned speeches are important.

At this forum, people have the identical view that we should first adhere to and second develop Mao Zedong literary and art thought.

In order to adhere to Mao Zedong literary and art thought, we should correctly propagate and explain it. I may be counted among those who are engaged in this work. When I was in Zhangjiakou in 1946 I published a pamphlet entitled "Describing the New Times of the Masses," in the preface of which I declared that I was willing to be the "propagator, explainer and applicator" of Mao Zedong Thought. More than 30 years have passed, but I have not fulfilled this task satisfactorily. Though I have always been loyal to Mao Zedong Thought, loyalty does not mean correctness. This proves that the work of propagating and explaining, that is the work of popularizing Marxism, is not an easy task. On the one hand, we should not mechanically give word for word explanations but should develop it and achieve something new. Comrade Mao Zedong repeatedly upheld that we should not do the work of giving word for word explanations of other people's words, but quite a large number of our speeches and articles did precisely this.

It is really not easy to accurately and comprehensively explain Mao Zedong Thought in the manner of linking it with practice.

In order to correctly understand and evaluate Mao Zedong literary and art thought, I think we should pay attention to the following things:

First, we should not separate Mao Zedong Thought from Marxism-Leninism. Mao Zedong Thought is the development of Marxism-Leninism in China and is the product of integrating Marxism-Leninism with the practice of the Chinese revolution. I remember that Comrade Mao Zedong once vividly said: "Marxism-Leninism is a big tree and we are but a few branches and leaves." Of course, this showed Comrade Mao Zedong's modesty, but this is a truth as well as modesty. For, it is indeed the luxuriant branches and leaves that grow on the big tree of Marxism-Leninism. Marxism is a great revolution of social science. Lenin developed it and then Comrade Mao Zedong used it in the Chinese revolution and further developed it. What they achieved in developing it differed in aspect, depth and width, but they both creatively developed it. The big tree of Marxism-Leninism has been growing full of vigor on China's fertile soil. Why should the big tree of Marxism-Leninism not strike deep roots and grow luxuriantly forever on the soil of a big country with 5,000 years of cultural tradition, 1 billion people and extensively rich historical experiences of revolution?

Second, we should not separate Mao Zedong literary and art thought from the whole system of Mao Zedong Thought. Mao Zedong literary and art thought is an integral part of the whole of Mao Zedong Thought. Only when we have a comprehensive and correct understanding of Mao Zedong Thought can we satisfactorily understand Mao Zedong literary and art thought. The most basic part and the most universally significant part of the whole system of Mao Zedong Thought is Mao Zedong's philosophic thinking. The representative works of his philosophical thinking are certainly "On Practice" and "On Contradiction" that are familiar to us all, but nearly all his important works shine with the illumination of his philosophical thinking. Comrade Mao Zedong was most outstanding, most resourceful and overflowing with characteristics in using materialist dialecticsin his works on the art of war. The "Talks" itself is full of materialist dialectics.

Third, we should not separate Mao Zedong literary and art thought from the thousands of years of our country's cultural tradition or from the revolutionary tradition of literature of the May Fourth Movement. Some comrades have just said that it seems to them that Comrade Mao Zedong said comparatively little about the new literature of the May Fourth Movement in his "Talks." This is true. However, in order to understand Mao Zedong literary and art thought, we should not restrict ourselves to reading the "Talks" only. Other articles, such as "On New Democracy," "Oppose Stereotyped Party Writing," "On the Correct Handling of Contradictions Among the People' and "talks With Music Workers," are all very important. Comrade Mao Zedong's talks on literary and art problems, including his private talks with some literary and art workers, were all very kindly given in the manner of explaining complicated things in simple words and were all convincing and unforgettable. Moreover, we should not ignore Comrade Mao Zedong's own literary works. He did not have a prejudice because he was good at old-style poems and advocated all the same developing new-style poems as the chief form. He highly evaluated the May Fourth New Culture Movement with Lu Xun as its commander in chief. When he talked with me, he once asked my opinion on Lu Xun's style. Before I could answer him, he said that Lu Xun's style was the combination of resoluteness and modesty. This is precisely the revolutionary spirit and the spirit of seeking truth from facts that Comrade Mao Zedong always personally advocated. While highly evaluating the achievements of the May Fourth Movement, he also seriously pointed out its formalist errors. One of the sonorous slogans of the May Fourth New Literature Movement was overthrowing "those who upheld the evil style of the Tongcheng school, the demonic style of 'Selected Works Edited by Prince Zhaoming.'" At that time this was a very revolutionary slogan. However, asserting that every aspect of a good thing was good and that every aspect of a bad thing was bad was precisely an error of formalism. Comrade Mao Zedong himself had been influenced to a considerable degree by the classic essay of the Tongcheng school and of the "Selected Works Edited by Prince Zhaoming."

The rule of the Tongcheng school was very long and it lasted more than a century. When Zeng Guofan came to power, the Tongcheng school restored its rule and ruled over the Chinese arena of letters again. The total length of its rule was about 200 years. One strong point of the style of the Tongcheng school was terseness, which we cannot regard as an evil. The "Selected Works Edited by Prince Zhaoming" is a collection of the best of our ancient verses that Comrade Mao Zedong read time and again when he was young. These verses certainly cannot be called demonic. Therefore, I wonder whether Comrade Mao Zedong's style of writing can be said to be the combination of the terseness of the classic essays of the Tongcheng school and the florid style of the "Selected Works." This is an immature opinion that I put forth here for discussion. The May Fourth Movement was thoroughly revolutionary. At its beginning it could not help but adopt the attitude of overthrowing all the traditions of the old culture that had ruled over China for thousands of years. During the 1930's, some of our comrades once belittled the writings in the vernacular of the May Fourth period and regarded them as neither vernacular nor classical and as being worse than being classical. Judging from the view that takes the whole course of revolution into account, revolution is always accompanied with some simple and rough phenomena. It seemed to us that it would not have been possible to eliminate the force of the old cultural traditions that were hundreds of thousands of times stronger than ours, if we had not adopted this attitude during the May Fourth Movement. We should view this from a historical viewpoint. Generally speaking, we should both make a study of Mao Zedong literary and art thought and study the "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art" from a historical viewpoint and we should not ignore the historical background in doing this.

The "Talks" is an important historical document and has undergone the test of time satisfactorily. It is in the past and is now the guideline of our literary and art movement. This means that we must adhere to Mao Zedong literary and art thought. There can be no doubt about this.

The problem is how are we to adhere to it. The adherence to it does not mean that we should mechanically carry out what it says word for word. If we act in this manner, we will be treating it as being an article in which "every sentence is truth." What we mean by adhering to it is developing it while adhering to it. Marxism itself is a kind of theory that is always developing. If we entirely refuse to adhere to it, no development can be spoken of. On the other hand, if we entirely refuse to develop it, it will be impossible to adhere to it. What Lenin did was precisely to develop Marxism while adhering to it. If Lenin had copied Marxism word for word, it would have been impossible for him to put forth the idea that victory of the socialist revolution could first be achieved in a single country, and there would have been no Leninism or October Revolution, and therefore it would have been impossible to adhere to Marxism.

We should realize that since the publication of the "Talks," there have been unprecedently tremendous changes both at home and abroad. First, there has been in the change in the historical times and the change in class relationships. At the time of the publication of the "Talks," our country had not entered socialism and was not engaged in a socialist modernization program, but was chiefly carrying out the national and democratic liberation struggle in order to drive the Japanese aggressors out of our country and to overthrow the old system. We must realize this change. When we say that we should combine with the new times of the masses, we should have a clear view of what masses these are and what times we are talking about. The "Talks" mention serving the people. The concept of the people at that time meant chiefly the following four kinds of people, including, besides workers, peasants and soldiers, the petit bourgeois laboring masses and intellectuals in the urban areas -- at that time, most of the intellectuals were regarded as being a part of the petite bourgeoisie and generally, when "serving workers, peasants and soldiers" was mentioned at that time, it seems that the intellectuals were not included. Later, chiefly after 1957, most of the intellectuals were treated as bourgeois intellectuals. Thus, most of the intellectuals became the objects of reform instead of those to be served. Now, the intellectuals have become a part of the laboring people and a part of the working class and therefore, it is wrong to treat them in the old manner.

When we commemorated the 20th anniversary of the publication of the "Talks" in 1962, RENMIN RIBAO published an editorial entitled "Serve the Broadest Masses of the People." It said: "The whole people within the people's democratic united front with the workers, peasants and soldiers as its main components, should be the people whom our literature and art serves and works for." This editorial was criticized during the "Great Cultural Revolution," but viewed from the present, what this editorial said is correct. As for socialism, it was not mentioned 40 years ago, because at that time socialism was only regarded as a guiding ideology and there was no practice of socialism. Some of our comrades rigidly adhere to old slogans and do not allow any change in these slogans. Thus they will not be able to keep pace with the progress of the times and will fall behind the times.

What we have been spending more time in discussing is the relationships between literature and art and politics. Regarding this problem, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that in the future we should no longer say that "literature and art are subordinate to politics" because this conforms neither to the history of literature and art nor to the history of social life and because moreover, this can easily give rise to abuses. According to the Marxist viewpoint, the factor that plays a final decisive role is the economy. The material living conditions, that is the social mode of production is the condition that restricts spiritual life, political life and social life. This is the most fundamental formula of historical materialism. Both literature and art and politics belong to the category of the superstructure. The influence of various factors of the superstructure differs in scope, degree and duration, but after all, that which plays a decisive role is the economic basis. The allegation that literature and art are subordinate to politics means not only denying the final decisive role of the economic basis but also denying the interaction of the various factors of the superstructure and denying the relative independence of literature and art that has taken shape in the prolonged course of the development of history. In the past, he criticized the view that treated this independence as an absolute one. This was correct. However, it is wrong to deny the relative independence of literature and art because of this criticism. Researching into the historical relations and development of this relative independence is precisely a problem that we should inquire into in writing the history of literature.

It is not always correct that politics is one of the superstructures and there have been periods of time when this was not correct. Even when it is correct, we should not force ideology to be subordinate to it. Refusing to say that literature and art are subordinate to politics does not mean that literature and art are not related to politics and can be divorced from politics. We have to observe the four basic principles of the party. As CCP members, we should, moreover, observe the party spirit and party discipline. The party spirit principle on literature and art is a principle to be consciously observed. Today, our literature and art should serve the people. This means that they should serve socialism because socialism is where the basic interests of the people lie. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the main stream of our literature and art has been good. This we should confirm. However, there have been some mistakes and minor aspects. One of the minor aspects that we should not neglect is the trend of bourgeois liberalization that has occurred on our ideological front along with the tremendous change in our policies in opening up to the outside world and in enlivening the domestic economy. Emphasizing that literature and art should serve the people is precisely aimed at fighting against this trend.

We have talked much about going deep into life. It is an unalterable principle that writers should go deep into life. But in my opinion, the most important thing in going deep into life is to take an active part in life and refrain from being onlookers. If you take an active part in life you will find that the life you write and reflect on is a life that you are intimately related to and that you have a personal share of interests in. Comrade Mao Zedong said that the most important thing is a change in feelings. A change in feelings is the sign of a change in stand, viewpoints and methods. If feelings are changed, what one gets in investigating and understanding life will also change. Therefore, going deep into life is not a purely academic problem. It is a problem of practice in life and in art.

The work of literary criticism is very important. During the past few years, we have successfully developed this work and achieved some good results, but compared with literary and art creation, the development and results are small. Our literary critics have discussed many problems. What they have discussed most is the problem of the theory of human nature and humanitarianism. I think that it is a misunderstanding to think that communists and revolutionaries cannot talk about human sympathy or attach importance to human beings. In fact, Comrade Mao Zedong said long ago that man is the most precious of all things. The value and the dignity of man should not be despised or belittled. On the contrary they should be treated as important and respected. The value and dignity of man are not abstract things and cannot be treated as being able to be divorced from the historical analysis of classes.

There is another problem, the problem of "alienation" that we have discussed relatively frequently. I talked about this problem at the scientific council of the department of social sciences of the Chinese Academy of Sciences. I thought that this problem was very important. I said at that time: "If we explain alienation according to the viewpoints of materialism and if we understand alienation according to the dialectic law that everything divides into two and will develop towards its opposite...we should admit that alienation is a universal phenomenon in nature and human society and the forms of alienation are diversified." I still maintain this view. Because the concept of "alienation" is difficult to understand, there is often some misunderstanding of the concept. I once wondered whether we could use the saying "a silkworm binds itself up with a cocoon of its own making" to vividly explain "alienation." (Of course, viewed biologically, a silkworm makes a cocoon to protect itself. However, what we here apply is the meaning of the Chinese saying "a silkworm binds itself up with a cocoon of its own making" meaning the binding of oneself by one's own products.) Marx himself also used such a comparison. Social alienation, whether it is economic, ideological or political, is a complicated phenomenon and should be specially studied. Will there be no phenomena of alienation in a communist society when class is eliminated? At any rate, there are still classes now. At least, there still exist classes or the remnants of classes and the phenomena of alienation will not disappear. Religion is an instance of alienation. People imagine a god in their minds and then, conversely, the god rules over people. Is this not done in the same manner as "a silkworm binding itself up with a cocoon of its own making?" Not only the products of people's thinking but also those of people's hands can become an alien force to conversely bind people. In a capitalist society, the commodities or wealth produced by workers by their hands have become a kind of mystic and alien force that enslaves people. Marx called this "commodity fetishism" or "currency fetishism." Now some people in our society superstitiously believe that money is omnipotent and see everything in terms of money. Is this not an alienation? Of course, we can make a further study of this problem.

Both social and natural phenomena are very complicated ones that we should make a study of. Young people are especially fond of researching into them and have an enthusiasm for doing this. We should not oppose this. We should only encourage them and make them aware of their duties in researching into these phenomena. We do not have the right to deprive them of the right of research. Here, what is most necessary is to correctly guide them, patiently and tactfully educate them and be strict to oneself and lenient to others. When the young people have committed mistakes in their research, the leading persons should shoulder their share of responsibility and the leading persons should criticize them if they should be criticized. However, the leading persons should adopt the attitude of protecting the young people in criticizing them. Ours is a socialist country that has existed for more than 30 years. Many youths have been fostered and have grown up under the socialist system. When they commit mistakes, we, their elders, should shoulder a part of the responsibility. On the one hand, we should attach importance to their keen sense of discovering new things and learn from them in this respect. On the other hand, we should help them study society, study history and study Marxism-Leninism. This is our unshirkable duty.

In short, we should not understand Mao Zedong Thought in the manner of treating it as being isolated, onesided and static. How Marxism will develop in China depends on how it is integrated with China's history and current situation. If it is integrated well, it will develop quickly and if it is not, it will develop slowly. As Marx said: "The extent to which a theory is realized in a country depends on the extent to which the theory satisfies the demand of the country." If your theory cannot satisfy the demands of the people and society, your theory will not work. The goal we are striving to achieve is to make Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought satisfy the demands of the society and people to the greatest possible extent.

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- The second plenary session of the Fourth National Committee of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles came to a successful close this afternoon after 7 days in session. The closing ceremony of the session, held at the minor auditorium on the third floor of the Great Hall of the People, was presided over by Lin Mohan, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles. Delegates attending the session, amid warm applause, adopted a report on the work of the federation made by Yang Hansheng on behalf of the presidium, a resolution on the election of additional members to the national committee of the federation, a resolution on the establishment of the federation secretariat and a literary and art workers' pact.

In the past few days, those attending the session earnestly studied the relevant important speeches by leading comrades of the party Central Committee and the guidelines set forth in the party Central Committee's relevant documents. They reviewed and summed up the literary and art work since the fourth congress of the federation. As a result, they strengthened their sense of revolutionary responsibility and expressed their determination to contribute more to building a high degree of socialist ethics.

In enthusiastically discussing "Some Views on Literary and Art Work" (draft), those present aired their views freely. They held that it is timely and necessary to formulate a document in accordance with the party Central Committee's instructions on literary and art work and the actual conditions in literature and art. This document is to be used to guide our literary and art work in the future. In order to make this document relatively flawless, the session decided to entrust the presidium with the task of further discussing and revising the document according to suggestions already made by comrades attending the session and more opinions to be solicited from others.

During the session, those present discussed the "Literary and Art Workers Pact." They said: The party and the people have set high requirements regarding the duty and role of literature and art in building socialist ethics, and they have paid great attention to the mental and moral state of literary and art workers. Each of us literary and art workers should be a model in building socialist ethics, set strict demands on himself according to communist ideology, style and morality and be an engineer of the human soul in reality as well as in name.

At the closing ceremony, Fu Zhong, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, placed hopes on the delegates who were to return to their posts soon. Fu Zhong said: Facts have proved and will continue to prove that without studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zeodong Thought one cannot acquire a proletarian world outlook, have a strong party spirit, firmly take the stand of the proletariat and accurately observe, understand and reflect the life of the masses. Writers and artists who are determined to fight for the lofty ideals of communism should conscientiously study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and set an example in study.

Fu Zhong hoped that people in literary and art circles would achieve closer unity and make concerted efforts to undertake the four modernizations. He said: Our contingent of revolutionary writers and artists has the fine tradition of uniting with, helping, supporting, learning from and sharing weal and woe with one another. We should carry forward this fine tradition and hand it down from generation to generation.

Fu Zhong stressed: The urgent task now facing our literary and art circles is to strive for a greater flourishing of literary and art creation. Whether or not this can be done depends on whether or not we delve into real life. In delving into real life today, we should first go to the front where the four modernizations are being undertaken and defended. We should go to basic levels where life is seething with excitement and go among the masses to draw nourishment and source material from them for our literary and art creation. We should portray the images of those undertaking the four modernizations and typical new socialist men in order to create lively examples from which people can learn. Leaders of culture departments at various levels should actively organize writers to go to basic levels and help them solve practical problems. Different arrangements should be made according to the different conditions of those who are going to live at basic levels, and different requirements should also be set for them. This may be done flexibly and in various ways.

After this session, the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles and various associations were to hold working conferences or meetings of permanent members of their boards of directors.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS THEORETICAL STUDY FOR ARTISTS

[Commentator's article: "Literature and Art Workers Must Step Up Theoretical Study"]

[Text] The second meeting of the Fourth National Committee of the China Federation of Literature and Art Circles was successfully closed. With the concern of the CCP Central Committee and the concerted efforts of the participating comrades, this was a united and encouraging meeting which gave us a chance to learn. The participants expressed their determination to uphold the banner of communism, arm themselves with communist ideology, strengthen unity, go all-out and struggle for opening up a new situation in socialist literature and art in which creation, lively theory, and a strong contingent of workers flourish.

In the course of fulfilling the lofty mission and tough tasks entrusted by the party to the literature and art workers in the new period, we encounter an important question, that is, stepping up our study. We are now in a new historical period of getting rid of the old to make way for the new and carrying forward the cause and forging ahead into the future, and we face a brand-new situation. In order to really accept new things, be familiar with the new situation and solve new problems, we must study afresh. Only by persistently studying practically and conscientiously, not verbally or in a slapdash way, can we follow the pace of the times.

What should we study? There are a host of things for us to learn. However, we must primarily stress studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. As with those comrades engaged in other kinds of ideological work, our literature and art workers must have a solid philosophical basis, that is, the philosophical basis of dialectical materialism and historical materialism. The reason why a few literature and art comrades are ideologically confused is because they do not have a Marxist philosophical basis. Therefore, we should advocate, in a big way, conscientious study of the fundamental theory of Marxism and mastering of the Marxist stand, views and methods. Only by so doing, can our literature and art communicate in the same language and progress in the same direction.

After the smashing of the "gang of four," it was totally correct and necessary, in accordance with the spirit of the third plenary session, to turn chaos into order and carry out thorough reform on the question of theory, criticize the extreme "leftist" and fallacious expositions of Lin, and Jiang and company which distorted Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, and correct the concept of the "two whatevers." However, we should pay attention to the current tendency of neglecting study. Some comrades think that studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought is not important at all, and that they can still create works without them. This is a wrong view. A question of stand and method exists when the writers observe, analyze and reflect life. How can they correctly and profoundly reflect life by deviating from the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought? A very small number of people who have not read a few works of Marx and Lenin go so far as to begin to doubt and waver in their confidence in Marxism and Leninism and wildly claim to break the "conventions" of Marxism-Leninism. We must now stress that revolutionary cadres and the party's literature and art workers must attach importance to study and establish the practice of enthusiastically studying Marxism.

In addition to studying the Marxist classics, it is particularly important at present to conscientiously study "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC," study again Comrade Mao Zedong's philosophical works and his "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," and simultaneously study the important documents of the CCP Central Committee and the speeches of leading central comrades on the question of ideology and literature and art. This point is equally important for comrades engaged in literary and art theory and creations, and for leading comrades of various literature and art units.

We must integrate theory with practice, and theory must develop incessantly. Our objective in studying Marxism is to arm ourselves with Marxism, establish a proletarian world outlook and outlook on literature and art, resist corruption by various erroneous ideas and maintain political unanimity with the CCP Central Committee. We must apply the correct stand, views and methods in analyzing and answering questions that crop up in actual life, and reflect them in our creations, commentaries and actual work. Thus, we should not just repeat what the books say, but must proceed from reality, emancipate our minds, develop new ideas and forge ahead. We believe that after this meeting, with stress on ideology and strengthened leadership, the literature and art circles will be more and more enthusiastic in studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

MINISTRY SAYS ALL EX-KMT PERSONNEL RELEASED

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- All former Kuomintang party, government, military personnel and special agents below the county or regimental level have now been released, according to China's Ministry of Public Security.

The last two groups were released yesterday and this morning in Shandong Province and Tianjin Municipality respectively.

The action was in accordance with the March decision of the 22nd Session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. Former Kuomintang party, government and military personnel and special agents at and above the county or regimental level were released in 1975.

For more than two months, meetings marking the final releases were held in provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, at which judgements and certificates of release were given to all the freed individuals by local people's courts and departments in charge of criminals' reform through labor. Over 1,700 others, who have already been released on bail for medical treatment also received their judgements and certificates at their homes.

All of those freed have been given clothes, bedding and 100 yuan pocket money. In many provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, the released personnel were subsequently taken for visits to factories and tours of the city and to places of historical interest.

The released personnel in Beijing also visited the Great Hall of the People and paid respects to Chairman Mao Zedong at the Chairman Mao Memorial Hall.

Work to help the released find jobs is now going on, according to the ministry. Those who are now homeless and aged and those who have lost the ability to work will be supported by the country, the ministry said.

CENSUS SET FOR 1 JUL EXCEPT IN XINJIANG

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- With only four days to go, the whole nation is making final preparations for the third national census July 1. The training of the 5 million enumerators and staff workers has reached the final but most important stage.

Recruited for their education level (secondary education at minimum), meticulous attitude toward work and health, the census takers are from factories, enterprises, schools, army units and government offices. They are trained in the regulations of census taking and drilled in the asking of tactful questions to avoid causing embarrassment with such questions as: "Did anybody die in your family this year?"

The first pilot census was conducted in Wuxi, Jiangsu Province, two years ago to acquaint the census workers with their tremendous task -- conducting the world's largest census. In 1981, pilot censuses were also taken in other localities. Trial censuses now have been conducted in 26 provinces and autonomous regions and three municipalities -- Beijing, Shanghai and Tianjin.

Each enumerator, assigned 100 or more families, are now visiting the families to become acquainted with the members and the location of their houses.

In Guangning County of Guangdong Province, enumerators at first thought the work uncomplicated. A trial census of 4,700 persons by more than 170 enumerators showed that only one scored 100 percent in the work, while the average was 82 percent. In a second trial, the average improved to 98.9 percent.

The success of the census depends on the people's cooperation. Publicity is now in full swing. Posters, banners, radio, TV, films, pamphlets, picture books, as well as artists, theater troupes and professional ensembles urge cooperation and provide instructions.

Census takers face the problem of obtaining information from people who will not tell the truth. Some parents wish to hide adoptions and some spouses their ages. Others may lie about their children's ages or sex. Some misunderstand the census and think it might reveal illegal matters, such as marriage of persons under the legal age. The census takers will explain that the census registers the status quo, and that the government is not seeking data on such illegal family matters.

Twenty-eight computer centers are ready for census tabulation. The centers are located in 25 provinces and autonomous regions (except Tibet where the census has been postponed) and the three municipalities. The code numbers of 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and more than 2,500 counties, cities and banners (counties) under their jurisdiction have been finalized and published in a book.

The census stations have been chosen and decorated, chairs pooled from the neighborhoods and preparations made to serve hot tea to those who come to register Thursday.

COLLEGE GRADUATES WORKING IN XIZANG MAY TRANSFER

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- The State Planning Commission, the Minister of Education and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel, with the approval of the State Council, recently adopted a new policy regulation concerning college and graduate school graduates working in Xizang.

The new regulation stipulates: Beginning in 1982, college and graduate school graduates working in Xizang may apply for transfer to more centrally located areas after working in Xizang for over 8 consecutive years. To arrange the transfer, the personnel department of Xizang Autonomous Region should contact the authorities at the applicants' native places or the localities where their spouses are. The provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions concerned should accept them and arrange jobs for them.

The new regulation adds: This regulation also applies to college graduates who were assigned to Xizang after 1980. Their length of service in Xizang is counted beginning from the day they reported for duty. College graduates who were assigned to Xizang before 1980 may be transferred according to the relevant documents issued by the central authorities in 1980.

STATE COUNCIL APPROVES REPORT ON GRADUATES' JOBS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently approved the "Report on Job Assignments for Graduates From Graduate Schools and Colleges in China in 1982" submitted by the State Planning Commission, the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel, circulated it to various localities and demanded that it be implemented accordingly.

In their "report" the State Planning Commission, the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel urged the various departments in all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions to make job assignments for this year's college graduates in close connection with the actual situation or their districts and departments while making overall arrangements and taking all factors into consideration.

The "report" pointed out: In the past, emphasis was placed on assigning college graduates to the fields of pedagogy and scientific research. Thus, a fairly good foundation has been laid in these fields. This year we must emphasize quality and assign more graduates to work in fields where they are badly needed. In the past, few college graduates were given jobs in the field of production, particularly in agriculture and the light and textile industries. Technicians and professionals are badly needed in this field. We must assign more graduates to work in this field in 1982.

The "report" pointed out: Attention must be paid to assigning more graduates to work as technicians, scientists and professionals in support of rural production and construction. Graduates who major in agronomy, forestry, medicine and teaching must be mainly assigned to work in counties or in basic level units below the country level for the development of science and technology in agriculture and forestry and for the promotion of rural education, cultural and public health. Graduates from teachers' colleges must be assigned to work as teachers in rural middle schools and various schools of agricultural technology (vocational). Medical school graduates must be assigned to work in county level medical and public health units or health centers in various key people's communes.

Graduates from colleges in the country's interior should be aroused and encouraged to go the the border region and areas where minority nationalities live. Plans to assign graduates to those areas must be persistently carried out. Those who volunteer to go to Xizang, Qinghai, Xinjiang, Ningxia and other border regions and are accepted by these areas may not be restricted by such plans.

The "report" stressed: Various departments in all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions must pay full attention to various units in large cities under their jurisdiction in assigning jobs to college graduates. In giving job assignments, we must strictly abide by law and discipline and combat unhealthy tendencies such as "entering by the back door." Those who are involved in serious cases should be dealt with sternly.

["Make China Prosperous and Strong, Cherish the Ambition of Going Out To Work" -- by XINHUA commentator]

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- This year China has more than 317,000 graduates from colleges and graduate schools, adding a new force for the program of the four modernizations. Many of them cherished the aspiration of studying hard for the sake of making China prosperous and strong when they were in school. Now, before taking up their jobs, many have once again said with pride that in order to make China prosperous and strong, they have the ambition of going out to work and are determined to set out for the places where they are most needed by the motherland. Their lofty ideals and ambition are praiseworthy.

At present the distribution of personnel of various specialties with college educations or above is quite uneven in our country. A relatively large number of them are concentrated in big cities and coastal areas, and most work in central organs or scientific research departments. Very few are in the countryside, medium-sized and small cities and towns, remote provinces and regions, working in grassroots production units. It should be pointed out, however, that the latter places have a vast expanse and abundant natural resources with practically unlimited prospects for development. There ambitious young people are urgently needed so as to exploit the natural resources, do constructive work and pioneer new undertakings. As arranged by the motherland, young people should go where they are needed and dedicate their youth and wisdom to the cause of transforming the motherland! This is a call of the times to the youth of China. It is a glorious duty and mission of the young people of our era.

To consciously obey the state job assignment or not to do so is a test for every graduate from a college or graduate school. Should he attach importance to the interests of the party, state and people or to his own interests? This question is a post-graduation examination, more important than any examination in the school. Many graduates have given a good answer to this question. They have said: "We will go wherever the motherland needs us." "No matter how far we go, we are in the embrace of the motherland." "We college graduates of the 1980's will respond, in a new way, to the selection made by the motherland." What a bold and profound pledge and what a valuable character these words represent! Our motherland should take pride in having these fine young people.

However, a small number of graduates still have mistaken and unhealthy ideas of one kind or another. They want to remain in big cities and are unwilling to go to the countryside. They like to work in universities and scientific research units and are reluctant to accept jobs in factories and mines on the first line of production and in border areas inhabited by minority people. Some have made unreasonable requests for special consideration in various aspects. In sum, they care only for their own interests but ignore the needs of the people and the country. We should warn these graduates with the following words: Young friends, your thinking is not correct. Now our country is still not rich, and our people are still not well to do. Under these circumstances, our efforts to surmount difficulty and establish and develop higher educational institutions are aimed at training ambitious and useful personnel for changing the backwardness of our motherland. The more difficult and backward the condition of a place, the better chance exists for today's young people to display their talent.

The parents of a small number of graduates are busy "seeking favor, visiting someone or sending notes to persons concerned" for the sake of their children's jobs. In so doing, they are interfering with the state job assignments for the graduates. These parents, particularly those who are themselves responsible cadres, are especially requested to think what they should do to educate their children to adopt a proper attitude toward job assignments.

In view of the needs of the four modernizations, a program now in the ascendant, the number of personnel with higher education is too small instead of too many. Units which will employ the graduates should warmly welcome them as a newborn force for the four modernizations. These units should make good arrangements for the graduates' work and well-being, give full play to their wisdom and ability, and enthusiastically pass onto them the fine traditions and work styles of our party, our nation and the units themselves so that these young people will mature quickly and in a healthy way while doing their work.

Our cause is developing, and the people are advancing. Our socialist motherland has a very bright future. Young friends, take up your knapsacks and set out in a cheerful mood.

EXPERTS URGE MORE INDUSTRIAL CROPS IN NORTH

[Text] Jinan, Jun 26 (XINHUA) -- More cotton, soybeans and peanuts should be grown on the North China Plain, in order to better utilize the croplands there, according to agricultural experts attending a North China Plain agricultural development symposium.

The gathering opened on June 18 here in Jinan, capital of Shandong Province, and its recommendation will be submitted to the State Council for consideration.

Areas devoted to cotton, soybeans and peanuts today make up less than half the acreage they did in 1957, said Bao Guanluo, vice-president of the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Science. He suggested that these areas be expanded to three million hectares for cotton, 3.8 million hectares for soybeans and 1.3 million hectares for peanuts.

The academy vice-president led a team of 17 experts which carried out an overall survey of the North China Plain in September of last year, as well as directing another survey team that carried out investigations in specific fields of study in the spring of this year.

Results of these studies show that 80 percent of the 18 million hectares of croplands are devoted to grain crops, and that two-thirds of them produce average or low yields, due to the lack of irrigation facilities and soil in fertility. Yet the sandy field or alkaline soil is suitable to various industrial crops.

Yang Tingxiu, agricultural engineer on the academy's agricultural modernization research committee, said that since the state was unable to invest large amounts of money and resources in transforming the poor soil, different crops should be selected to suit local conditions. He suggested that sunflower, false indigo and alfalfa be grown in salty marsh lands and more orchards be set up and such fast growing trees as poplar and apulownia be planted on the course of the Yellow River where the tributary has shifted.

He suggested that a man-made pastureland should be built on the 260,000 hectares of salt marsh near the Yellow River mouth, where the breeding of rabbits and goat is fast growing.

He added that the industrial crop fields should be expanded step by step, once the grain supply of the 200 million people on the plain is assured.

SPOKESMAN ON W. EUROPE TIES, HAIG RESIGNATION

[Text] Taipei, June 26 (CNA) -- The Republic of China's relations with Western European countries have been growing closer although two-way trade is reportedly declining at present, said a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Liu Ta-jen said Saturday at a joint press conference of the Foreign Ministry and the National Defense Ministry that there are Chinese cultural, economic and trade offices in 12 Western European countries, and that the representative bodies of European countries in the ROC are also continuously increasing. He pointed out the relations between the ROC and the European Economic Community are also gradually improving. Many of this nation's government officials and businessmen are visiting European countries, and their European counterparts, along with legislators and news reporters, are visiting the ROC. This is beneficial to relations between the ROC and Western European countries, Liu declared. The ranking official also noted that the Foreign Ministry has mapped out concrete plans to beef up relations between the ROC and the United States and other democratic nations. This is in line with recent directives from President Chiang Ching-kuo and Premier Sun Yun-hsuan on foreign affairs.

When asked about his reaction to the U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's resignation, Liu said this is an internal matter of the Reagan administration. He declined further comment.

AFP Report

OW261019 Hong Kong AFP in English 0958 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, June 26 (AFP) -- Chinese Nationalists appeared today cautiously optimistic in welcoming the appointment of Charles Shultz as the new U.S. secretary of state. Government officials, including Premier Sun Yun-hsuan and Foreign Ministry spokesman Liu Ta-jen, refrained from commenting on the resignation of Alexander Haig and the nomination of Mr Shultz to replace him. Mr Liu told newsmen at a regular press conference that the government was watching closely further developments.

But sources close to the government pointed out that, if confirmed in the post by the U.S. Senate, Mr Shultz would be the only one among the five (?last) U.S. secretaries of state to visit Taiwan, most recently early this year.

Mr Shultz is considered here to be more aware of the situation in Taiwan and its policy toward the two communist giants, Moscow and Beijing. One observer said that Mr Shultz was not as staunchly anti-Soviet as Mr Haig, and therefore would be less tied to [word indistinct]. "Nevertheless, since the U.S. foreign policy is not mapped out by one person [words indistinct] the observer said. Another observer blamed Mr Haig's "Europe first, Asia second" foreign policy for the current "appeasement" attitude of the State Department in its approach to China. The observer said that this was responsible for the decline in relations between Washington and Taipei.

News about the resignation of Mr Haig caught Taipei by surprise. Only two Chinese-language morning newspapers, the CHINA TIMES and the UNITED DAILY, each with a circulation of over one million, carried brief dispatches from Washington and gave prominence to the story on the front page.

Taipei Radio Report

[Text] The resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Jr., on Friday has produced mixed reactions from leaders throughout the world. In his letter of resignation, Haig told President Reagan that it has become clear to me that the foreign policy which we embarked on together was shifting.

To many allies of the United States, there is a fear that the Reagan administration will now take a further hard turn to the right, and especially in Western European countries, where the secretary of state was one-time leader of commanders. His presence will be missed there.

U.S. Secretary of State-designate George Shultz, 51, is a California businessman, former treasury secretary in the Nixon administration, and a friend of the present defense secretary, Caspar Weinberger. Mr Shultz was President Reagan's original choice for the secretary of state when the President took office in January 1981, but he turned down the job, choosing instead to stay on as the president of the California-based multinational construction firm, Bechtel Corporation, with which Defense Secretary Weinberger was associated. Most recently, President Reagan put Mr Shultz in charge of preparations for his trip to Europe earlier this month.

The Government of the Republic of China today declined to comment on Haig's resignation, but said it would watch closely further developments in U.S. politics and foreign policy. Most diplomatic observers in Taipei, however, said Haig's resignation was the result of a serious disagreement between Haig and President Reagan. They also said that new Secretary of State Shultz knows the Republic of China well and has visited the Republic of China a number of times. The last visit was held at the turn of the year. All observers expressed a reserved optimism toward Sino-U.S. relations in the post-Haig period.

[Station commentary]

[Text] Alexander Haig has given way to George Shultz as the American secretary of state. Mr Haig's resignation was supposed to have been a big surprise. It should not have been. He and President Reagan have been embarked on separate foreign policy courses for a long time. Under the American Constitution, the President is in charge of foreign policy. If he wishes to be his own secretary of state, he can be. Possibly, Israel's continuing invasion of Lebanon was a precipitating factor in Haig's resignation. Differences over U.S. policy towards the Soviet Union may have been another. Haig and President Reagan have had very different concepts about China policy for a long time. When Jimmy Carter broke the relations with the Republic of China and recognized the Chinese Communists, Mr Reagan objected strenuously. He said that the Republic of China has been grievously wronged. During the 1980 presidential campaign and immediately after his election, Mr Reagan called for a change in U.S. policy toward free China. At one time, he spoke of upgrading relations. On several recent occasions, President Reagan had said that he would uphold the Taiwan Relations Act and protect the people of Taiwan against aggression. He had spoken out against communism many times. Yet his secretary of state traveled to Peking [as heard] to sell weapons to the Chinese Communists. The Reagan letters to Peking originated in Haig's State Department. Mr Haig, who once defended the White House citadel while Richard Nixon was falling down, has been an ardent player of the Red China card. Under his State Department administration, negotiations have been conducted with the Chinese Communists on the reduction of arms sale to the Republic of China and the recognition of Peking's claim to Taiwan. Quite possibly, President Reagan has not approved of Mr Haig's administration of China policy. But, because of other high priority foreign policy decisions, the President did not watch China policy as closely as he might have. In the last few weeks, the President has had to contend with Israeli invasion of Lebanon, war in the Falklands, the European summit and almost day-to-day developments in relations with the Soviet Union.

Maybe Mr Reagan does not wish to be his own foreign minister, but he obviously wants a secretary who is in sympathy with his ideas and is prepared to carry out general directives.

George Shultz, who was immediately named by President Reagan to take Secretary Haig's place, represents an appointment of considerable promise. Mr Shultz has a great deal of experience in the government. He was secretary of treasury and labor as well as budget director under President Nixon. Recently, he has headed the Bechtel Corporation, which is engaged in construction all over the world. Bechtel has undertaken many projects in the Republic of China and has had an office in Taipei for many years. The new secretary of state was in the Republic of China only recently and is well aware of all the aspects of the China problem.

Free China does not expect the United States to make any sudden and dramatic changes in China policy. It does hope for a more even-handed approach for the China policy of the United States. During the Haig administration, the Republic of China has been neglected in several ways. Except for some parts for old weapons, its defense requirements have been ignored. Approval has never been given for the number of U.S. offices stipulated under the Taiwan Relations Act. There have been difficulties for free China's officials to meet with their American counterparts. President Reagan has voiced a strong anticommunism on many occasions. Even as he was speaking, the United States was leaning toward the Chinese Communists in order to combat the Soviet Union. Maybe the United States is now examining this policy and asking itself whether it can be anticommunist with regard to the Soviet Union while being pro-Chinese Communist.

Mr Shultz may be closer to President Reagan and his concepts of anticommunist U.S. policy than Mr Haig has been. If so, this should be in both the American interests and those of the free people of the world, including those of the Republic of China.

Shultz's Taiwan Ties Noted

OW262322 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] According to people in financial and economic circles, George Shultz, newly appointed U.S. secretary of state, has deep connections with the financial, economic, industrial and commercial circles of our country. He also understands our country quite well. While he was secretary of the treasury, Shultz had wide contacts with our country's financial and economic officials. Then Minister of Economic Affairs Sun Yun-hsuan and Minister of Finance K.T. Li of our country were on very good terms with Shultz. Shultz has visited our country many times.

Shultz is now president of the U.S. (Fei-Pai) Engineering Consultant Company. The company is a member of the U.S.-China Economic Association, which is the counterpart of the China-U.S. Economic Cooperation Promotion Association, and has always been very supportive of our country. The (Fei-Pai) Company and our country's (Chung-Hsin) Engineering Consultant Company have jointly formed a (Pai-Hsin) Engineering Consultant Company which specializes in designing nuclear power stations. The designs for the Taiwan Power Company's No 2, 3 and 4 nuclear power stations are being undertaken by the (Pai-Hsin) Company. It is learned that the designing cost accounts for about 10 percent of a nuclear power station's total investment.

Shultz's latest visit to China was last month. He inspected the (Fei-Pai) Company's operations here in his capacity as the company's president. While here, he paid a visit to Chen Lan-kao, board chairman of the Taiwan Power Company, and exchanged views on a wide range of questions with him.

HSIN WAN PAO COMMENTS ON HAIG'S RESIGNATION

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig resigned yesterday, and President Reagan has nominated Shultz to succeed him. This is the second consecutive time that a secretary of state has resigned during an administration. Last time it was Vance, who quit after the failure of the commando mission launched by the Carter administration to rescue the hostages in Iran. The fact that the U.S. Government repeatedly changes personnel in mid-course and it is so difficult to serve as secretary of state -- the incumbent always has to quietly step down -- show that U.S. foreign policy, beset with domestic and external contradictions, is becoming ever more difficult to operate. This country, known as the strongest country in the West cannot pursue a steady and integral foreign policy, is continually wavering from side to side and cannot do things with assurance.

Explaining the reason for his resignation, Haig said that Reagan had departed from the prudent foreign policy line they had decided on together at the beginning of Reagan's administration; this line was based on the aim of continuity, clarity and firmness. He hinted that Reagan's current foreign policy had changed and no longer possessed these three "qualities."

The reason for the frequent changes in U.S. policies and their inability to maintain continuity, clarity and firmness stems from the clash of all kinds of domestic and external interests. During his tenure as secretary of state, Haig was always engaging in arguments with Vice President Bush, Defense Secretary Weinberger, National Security Adviser Clark and his assistant Allen, and UN Ambassador Kirkpatrick. These arguments were not just problems of individual personality and style but represented clashes of powerful forces and also the influence of financial groups, which led to differences of view on policy and strategy. This resignation was sparked off by two disputes: One was over whether or not to ban the supply of technology and equipment to Western Europe for the construction of a natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union; and the other was the question of whether to support or condemn the large-scale Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Reagan's ban on the supply of technology and equipment to block and delay Western Europe's purchase of natural gas from the Soviet Union has caused a strong reaction in Western Europe, where people say that the United States is harming others to benefit itself and wants its allies to cast aside their interests while it resumes grain sales to the Soviet Union. As for U.S. support of the Israeli aggression against Lebanon, this has angered all Middle Eastern countries, who now have even less confidence in U.S. designs for peace. Haig, who represented the interests of the traditional eastern American financial groups, held that it was necessary to show prudent concern for the feelings of its Western European allies and also side with the pro-Israeli leanings of the Jewish financial groups. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, who comes from the Western United States, believes that the United States should not shrink from putting strong pressure on Western Europe for a hardline policy toward the Soviet Union, and also believes that the United States should vigorously condemn the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Weinberger and Shultz, who will succeed to the secretary of state post, have both worked for the Bechtel Corporation of California. This consortium has many building contracts with Arab countries.

The resignation of Haig means that the posts of secretary of state, secretary of defense and national security adviser are all held by California colleagues of Reagan. However, this certainly does not mean that differences of view and arguments over foreign policy will now be eliminated.

[Editorial: "Haig's Resignation Affects the World Situation"]

[Text] The sudden resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig makes the whole world wonder whether or not there will be readjustments in future U.S. foreign policy.

The early responses to this are that the West European countries are shocked and worried, while Israel "expressed its deep regret and declared that Haig is a loyal friend of Israel." On the other hand, the Arab countries are very pleased about this because the United States has appointed as Haig's replacement Shultz, who belongs to the western financial group and has a great deal of business dealings with the Arab countries.

There have been both open strife and veiled struggles between the eastern and western financial groups of the United States for the post of secretary of state since Reagan formulated his Cabinet. At first, there were rumors that Shultz, a representative of the western financial group, would take up the office. But it finally turned out that Haig, a representative of the eastern financial group, was offered the appointment. Since then, foreign dispatches have continually reported personnel problems in the White House and acute rivalry. The resignation of National Security Adviser Richard Allen last year showed that Haig had won the first round. However, Reagan immediately appointed Clark, a member of the western financial group, to replace Allen. Then, Clark gradually gained more power and saw the President each day, giving counsel and suggestions and attempting to cripple Haig's power.

Haig, who belonged to the eastern financial group, soon found himself isolated, and Reagan was also surrounded by advisers of the western financial group. Counselor to the President Edwin Meese, White House Chief of Staff James Baker (note: not Howard Baker, Senate Republican leader), White House Deputy Chief of Staff Deaver and Defense Secretary Weinberger all belong to the western group. Thus, it was difficult for Haig to achieve anything with support.

The divergence between Haig and the western political figures mainly involved three aspects, the policies on three hot points -- Europe, the Middle East and Latin America. Although both Haig and the westerners favored a tough attitude toward Soviet expansion, hoped to maintain closer ties with the Arab countries and advocated halting the expansion of Soviet and Cuban power in Latin America, they had different ideas as far as strategy was concerned: 1) The westerners advocated that the United States put pressure on its West European allies, forcing them to share military expenses and stop their dealings with the Soviet Union on the question of the natural gas pipeline, while Haig advocated that the United States look after the wishes of Western Europe and strengthen unity between the United States and Western Europe. He did not want to blackmail Western Europe over the question of the natural gas pipeline. 2) As far as the Middle East question was concerned, the westerners held that the United States should strengthen its relations with the Arab countries and supply Jordan and Saudi Arabia with advanced U.S. arms and ammunition. They pointed out that the U.S. bias toward Israel would hinder U.S. interests in the Middle East. Haig held that there should not be "readjustments" in current U.S.-Israeli relations and objected to selling advanced arms and ammunition to the Arabs. 3) As far as the Latin America question was concerned, Haig advocated halting Cuban penetration with U.S. military force, but the westerners opposed getting involved in armed confrontation in Latin America and opposed, in particular, a blockade against Nicaragua.

The friction between Haig and his colleagues was not caused merely by personal problems, but was a result of controversies and confrontations between the U.S. ruling financial groups on the question of strategy regarding U.S.-Soviet rivalry. If such controversies are allowed to drag on for a long time, U.S. policies will become very shaky. There was speculation in U.S. political circles at the beginning of this year that there would be a big change in Reagan's Cabinet sooner or later. Haig's resignation has turned Reagan's Cabinet into a group of purely westerners.

The immediate cause of Haig's resignation is very clear. Reagan has reversed his attitude and has only made a one-sided explanation of the spirit of the Western summit meeting held on 18 June. He has forced the Western European countries to stop transactions on the natural gas pipeline, arousing discontent in Western Europe. In the Middle East, Israel has conquered southern Lebanon and wants to attack Jordan as its next step. As Jordan has not obtained a supply of advanced U.S. air defense weapons, its king was driven by anger to consult on "cooperation" with the Soviet Union. Conflicts between the interests of the different financial groups have led to personnel changes in the White House. Will the eastern financial group respond to this by imposing pressure on the White House? What will the changes in U.S. foreign policy be? Will these affect the situation regarding global strategy? All these things merit our close attention.

[Text] Taking advantage of the opportunity of calling on people to restudy Mao Zedong's "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," Huang Gang, daring vanguard of the leftist groups in mainland China's literary and art circles, published an article, "Explanations by This Publication," in the No 2, 1982 issue of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO [REPORT OF THE TIMES] edited by himself. In this article he asserted that in recent years, the "Talks" have been "distorted and tampered with by the right," which "cannot but result in some people falling into the quagmire of bourgeois liberalism." WENYI BAO held that this allegation runs counter to the "Resolution" of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and wrote an article to refute it.

The "Explanations by This Publication" said: "In the 16 years since the 'Great Cultural Revolution,' the 'Talks' have been distorted and tempered with by both the 'left' and the right. Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and other counterrevolutionaries, by using ultraleftist methods, turned the people's literature and art which served the workers, peasants and soldiers into a literature and art of conspiracy by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary cliques aimed at usurping the leadership of the party and power. After the smashing of the gang of four, some people again discarded the "Talks" by regarding them as regulations and restrictions, which could not but result in their falling into the quagmire of bourgeois liberalism...."

In its No 6, 1982 issue, WENYI BAO published an article by Xin Xu to refute this allegation. The article was entitled "Are There No Differences Over the '16 Years'"? The article pointed out that the appraisal made by the "Explanation by This Publication" on literary and art work in the past few years is entirely different from the appraisal of the CCP Central Committee and runs counter to the "Resolution" approved by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee.

The "Explanations by This Publication" said: "In the 16 years since the 'Great Cultural Revolution'...." WENYI BAO pointed out in its article that if we explain this sentence from the angle of linguistics, the "16 years" refers to an historical period symbolized by the Cultural Revolution. People know, however, that the nightmare of the Cultural Revolution ended long ago. It is not known why the author of the 'Explanations by This Publication' seemingly fails to wake up to reality and advances such a formulation that is completely different from the "Resolution."

The article pointed out that the author of the "Explanations by This Publication" has subjectively regarded people's attitude toward Mao Zedong's "Talks" in the "16 years" as "vilification or tampering" either by the "left" or by the right. This assertion indiscriminately lumping everything together is not an accident by the editor of SHIDAI DE BAOGAO.

The WENYI BAO article said: As early as in the first issue of that periodical, an article which had been energetically praised by the editors explicitly said that the "society during the period when the gang of four was engaged in rebellion and the society in this period (after the downfall of the gang of four) do not have any essential differences," and therefore there is no demarcation line between "this period" and "that period." Such being the case, they naturally regarded the history of the "16 years" as one and the same thing, as equally bad and as either "left" or right.

The "Resolution" of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee pointed out that since the downfall of the gang of four, "the country has entered a new period of historical development." The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee held in 1978 was "a great turning point of far-reaching historical significance" since the founding of the PRC.

The article pointed out: The decade of civil disturbance and the new period of historical development are two different periods. However, the author of the "Explanations by This Publication" has lumped the two different periods together and has seen no demarcation lines or differences between them. The result of referring to the "16 years" can only be to prettify, like the article in the first issue of the periodical, Lin Biao and the gang of four and equate them with socialism or, like the author of the "Explanations by This Publication," vilify and deny the glorious history of the past 6 years.

How should we look at the situation in the literary and art circles since the downfall of the gang of four, particularly since the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee? This is the focal point of the problem raised in the "Explanations by This Publication."

The article pointed out that in the past 6 years, the principles and policies formulated by the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee have greatly emancipated people's minds, smashed the bonds of the leftist mistakes of many years' standing, liberated the productive forces of literature and art and promoted the development of literary and artistic undertakings. Many people hold that the past 6 years have seen a prosperous situation, the like of which has rarely been seen since the founding of the PRC. No one can deny this achievement. However, as viewed by "Explanations by This Publication," it is as if the third plenary session and the far-reaching influence it has had on our social life (including literary and art work) had never occurred and that thousands of excellent works and a large number of new people skilled in literature and art had not emerged. There is only the terrible "vilification and tampering by the right."

The article said: "We have made no attempt to deny the problems that have existed on the literary and art front in the past 6 years. On the one hand, some people are defending the leadership of the party and defending the leftist errors that are being criticized and discarded. On the other hand, from society to literary and art circles, there are also different degrees of erroneous trends of thought that negate the leadership of the CCP and negate Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Feudal and bourgeois ideas, philistine and decadent elements and the tendencies of turning literary and art works into commodities have also occurred. These two kinds of phenomena merit our full attention. However, we should not look upon everything as bright all over; still less should we paint everything in dark colors and even mix up questions of different natures that occurred under completely different historical conditions. The theory that "there are no differences over the 16 years" preached by the "Explanations by This Publication" is nothing but an attempt to substitute the principal aspect with a secondary aspect of the past 6 years and, by exaggerating some of the shortcomings and errors in literary and art work, to negate the vitality and achievements which the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee has brought to the literary and art front.

The WENYI BAO article pointed out in conclusion: The social life of our country is experiencing increasingly profound changes. If someone fails to see the advance of the wheel of history and endlessly complains that the changes in social life do not conform to his intentions, and so censures everything in every possible way and negates and writes off everything at will, it will be very hard for him to escape being ridiculed by history.

["New Talk" column: "We Should No Longer Exaggerate the Role of Literature and Art"]

[Text] The Second Session of the Fourth National Committee of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles will open tomorrow in Beijing and more than 400 literary and art workers from various parts of the country will attend the session.

The session is expected to last 1 week. It will study the problem of readjusting literary and art organizations and discuss a theoretical document called the "Ten New Regulations on Literature and Art." This document is drafted by a group headed by Zhou Yang.

The fourth national congress of writers and artists and the First Session of the Fourth National Committee of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles were held in November 1979. They defined the orientation of the emancipation of minds in literature and art. Over the past 2 and 1/2 years, literature and art in China have undergone a new development and a number of works have been produced. This has evoked new criticism and controversy. The Second Session of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles will sum up the new experiences and opinions.

Zhou Yang, chairman of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, visited Guangzhou and Shenzhen last February. It was reported that after he returned to Beijing, he began the preparations for convening the session. It is obvious that thorough discussions have been made in order to prepare for the session.

Last month, the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles and the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences jointly sponsored a discussion on Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. After that, Chairman Mao Zedong's 15 letters to the people of literary and art circles and Chen Yun's talks to the literary and art workers in the Yanan period were published. All these were the ideological preparations for the session.

A conclusion has been drawn from last month's discussion: We should uphold and develop Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. It is believed that such an idea will be included in the "Ten New Regulations on Literature and Art" and will be presented to the session for discussion. The idea of upholding and developing Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art is in accord with the spirit of the last session of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles. In his closing speech delivered at the fourth national congress of writers and artists, Xia Yan, vice chairman of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, emphasized: We should not "assume the same old approach and overlook the changed situation." On the contrary, we should pay attention to the rapidly changing situation to test the previous theories on literature and art.

One of the new experiences summed up over the past 2 years is that we should exercise restraint over literary and art criticism and gradually overcome the previous over-simplified and crude methods. The freedom of criticism and counter-criticism has been further acknowledged. What is more important, an increasing number of people have realized that we should not equate the problem of literature and art with that of politics and that we should not subordinate all literature and art to politics or to a certain political line.

There is no doubt that literature and art are very important in the people's spiritual life. However, due to the pernicious influence of the "Great Cultural Revolution," we overestimated the political significance of literature and art in China. Actually, it is unrealistic to exaggerate the political role of literature and art. This will also hamper literary and artistic creativity. Since the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee, we have adopted the slogan that literature and art should serve the people and abrogated the previous slogan that literature and art should serve politics. More and more literary and art cadres and workers have realized the differences between these two slogans.

DALAI LAMA TO PROMOTE BUDDHISM ON MAJOR TOURS

[By Peter Humphrey]

[Excerpts] The Dalai Lama, the exiled Tibetan god-king, is soon to undertake two long tours of European and Asian countries ranging half way round the globe.

The first tour, scheduled for next month, is an historic tour of Australia and three Southeast Asian countries.

This was disclosed recently by the east Asia representative of the Tibetan government-in-exile, Mr Pema Gyalpo, who passed through Hong Kong while making arrangements for the forthcoming tour. Reliable sources have also said that the Dalai Lama will be undertaking a second tour in September-October to Mongolia and several European countries -- passing through the Soviet Union and visiting Germany, France, Italy and Spain.

Further details of the European tour have yet to be learned. The Southeast Asian tour, however, is known to include Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia, followed by five major Australian cities -- Melbourne, Sydney, Canberra, Brisbane and Perth.

My Gyalpo disclosed that the Dalai Lama will travel from his Indian refuge of Dharamsala, arriving in Malaysia on July 28, and the following day he will travel to Singapore, where he will stay until August 1. He will then travel to Indonesia, at first spending approximately two days in Jakarta, from where he will go to Jogjakarta to visit the renowned Borobodur Buddhist temples, sacred site of the largest Buddhist stupa in the world. From Indonesia the Dalai Lama will travel on August 8 to Australia, where he will remain until August 28.

The main purpose of the Dalai's visit, Mr Gyalpo said, is to encourage and bless the Buddhists, and to attempt to exchange views with the leaders of other religious faiths.

Observers noted that the forthcoming tours come hard on the heels of a visit to Beijing by a delegation from the Dalai Lama's government-in-exile, which has reportedly been negotiating with the Chinese authorities on the question of Tibet's future and on the possibility of the Dalai Lama visiting Beijing or even Tibet. The talks were shrouded in secrecy and it is not known what agreement, if any, was achieved between the two sides.

In Australia, Mr Gyalpo observed, Buddhism is quite new, "so the Dalai Lama wants to get into direct contact with Australian people, and through these dialogues and contacts, he wants to tell the people what Buddhism is all about." The governments of the countries to be visited during next months' tour have all been told the basic purpose is non-political, but religious and cultural. Informal confirmation has been made by those countries that the Dalai Lama may visit them, and formal confirmation is expected very soon.

It is understood that the Dalai Lama will also make courtesy calls on certain officials in the countries to be visited, but Mr Gyalpo declined to reveal what contacts will be arranged in Southeast Asia. In Australia, however, he revealed that there will be an official reception in Melbourne given by the speaker of the House and attended by the premier of Victoria, Lindsay Thompson. Another official reception will be held by the New South Wales government in Sydney, and meetings will take place between the Dalai Lama and senators and foreign affairs department representatives in Canberra. The Dalai Lama will also make several public addresses during visits to some of Australia's leading universities.

PACIFIC DEMOCRATIC UNION FORMED IN TOKYO

[Text] Beijing, June 27 (XINHUA) -- A four-nation Pacific Democratic Union (PDU) was inaugurated in Tokyo yesterday by representatives of political parties from Japan, Australia, New Zealand and the United States as "a counterpart of the year-old European Democratic Union", according to reports received here from Tokyo.

In a statement, the group said that the Pacific Democratic Union "will for the first time establish a regular network of relationships between center and moderate center-right parties throughout the Pacific Basin area".

Among those attending the inaugural meeting were Susumu Nikaido, secretary-general of Japan's Liberal Democratic Party; Philip Lynch, Australian minister of commerce and industry; George Chapman, president of the New Zealand National Party; Frederick Biebel, acting chairman of the U.S. Republican Party; and Richard Allen, former U.S. presidential adviser on national security affairs. The former president of the Australian Liberal Party John Atwill was elected as the first PDU chairman.

The meeting also approved PDU's action plan for holding a forum and organizing committee meeting in New Zealand in November and December plus an annual meeting in Hawaii next June.

FOREIGN SPECIALISTS TEST 'BAREFOOT' DOCTORS

[Text] Jinan, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The much talked about "barefoot" doctors in China's countryside seem to have passed the "tests" given by world health officials and health ministers of 15 countries. The international health specialists attending the inter-regional seminar on primary health care held in Yexian County, Shandong Province, went around to a number of villages where they questioned the barefoot doctors freely.

At the Cailiang production brigade, questions were fired one after another at barefoot doctor Niu Shumin. She told the experts she is in charge of the brigade's obstetrics and pediatric care, which include pre-natal care, child delivery, post-natal home calls and women's health protection in four periods. "What are the four periods and what are the protections?" came the question. The answer, returned promptly: During the menstruation period, women should not do waterlogged farmwork; during pregnancy, they should be given light work; during the nursing period, they should work near their home; and during post-natal period, they should be given a two-month maternity leave. Niu Shumin's swift and confident reply provoked a nodding of heads and several smiles among her examiners. Yexian is currently in its busy summer harvesting season. Wherever there are people at work, there are barefoot doctors alongside with first-aid kits slung on their shoulders. Dr H. Nakajima, the World Health Organization (WHO)'s Western Pacific regional director, looked into the kit and found it complete with stethoscope, and commonly used medicine. He suggested adding a notebook to enter the patient's case history, advice that was readily accepted by the Chinese health workers.

While visiting a rural clinic at Xujia commune, Dr Sem Pringpaunggeo, Thai health minister asked a barefoot doctor whether he has passed the exam for a country doctor. When he got an affirmative answer, he asked whether he want to improve his skill and be promoted. The country doctor said he would like to improve his skill but would like to remain to work in the countryside. This attitude apparently mirrored the 72-year-old Thai minister's feelings, as he himself had returned to his native village upon graduation from medical school.

Even after becoming health minister, Sem Pringpaungged has worked on primary health care in rural areas. He said that Thailand and China have many things in common and have a lot to learn from each other.

Executive director of UNICEF Mr J. Grant showed interest in a women and children health care center. They wanted toknow the number of barefoot women doctors and percentage of one-child family. They both expressed satisfaction when told that there are over 1,000 women barefoot doctors and in 1981 90.5 percent couples of child-bearing age in Yexian Country are now one-child families or have pledged not to have more than one child. The natural population growth has dropped to 8.07 per thousand in the county. Dr Tejada-de-Rivero, assistant director general of "WHO" headquarters listed China as one of the few countries in the world that have achieved the social target of health care for all by year 2000. But, "there is always room for improvement", he said, such as in raising professional competency and in strengthening health information.

YE JIANYING, CHEN MUHUA MEET UNICEF EXECUTIVE

Chairman Ye and Grant first met in Beijing in 1946, and they were very glad for opportunity to renew their acquaintance again today. Chairman Ye praised Grant for his efforts in safeguarding world peace and promoting children's welfare. Grant said in his current visit he had seen China's achievements in public health and other fields in past 30 years.

Both recalled the days when they had been together in the past. Grant presented the chairman with a photo they had taken more than 35 years ago with Huang Hua, Dr. Ma Haide (George Hatem) and others.

Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, was also present.

UN FORUM IN SUZHOU DISCUSSES AGRICULTURAL WASTE

[Text] Nanjing, June 26 (XINHUA) — The use of rice husks, chaff and other waste materials discharged in the course of agricultural production as well as utilization of solar energy to promote agricultural growth were topics of discussion at a U.N.-sponsored international technical forum, the first session of which ended today in Suzhou, Jiangsu Province.

Experts and officials from two international organizations and ten countries appeared impressed by China's success in using gas generating units fueled by rice husks, according to a spokesman for the Suzhou session, which began on June 23. The cost per kilowatt-hour of electricity produced this way is only 20 to 20 percent of that produced by diesel power generating units.

The forum is sponsored by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, the Food for the Hungry International, the Ministry of Commerce of the People's Republic of China and the National Food Authority of the Philippines. The second session will be held in Cabanatuan, the Philippines, from June 28 to 30. Attending the Suzhou session were representatives of the two international organizations, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Japan, Malaysia, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand, the United States, and China. Eight papers were delivered at the forum. A F.A.O. official has proposed a pilot project on the use of the rice husks, based on the experience of China and the Philippines.

PREMIER ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS AMERICAN PHYSICIST

Professors Wu and Yuan are in China for lecture tours. During their more than one-month stay in China, they gave nearly 20 academic reports in Beijing and other parts of the country. Premier Zhao expressed his appreciation for their efforts and asked the two professors to give more suggestions in the future for the development of China's education and scientific research.

On the implementation of the policy on intellectuals, Premier Zhao said that China now puts stress on improving the working and living conditions of middle-aged intellectuals. "The middle-aged intellectuals are now working at important posts in various departments, but in general they have not been provided with adequate facilities. Therefore, the government is determined to solve their problems within a few years. This is of great importance to the development of China's education and science," Premier Zhao said.

Minister of Education He Dongchang was present at the meeting.

[Special commentary by Fang Min [2455 2404]: "U.S. Dual Tactics Toward Soviet Union"]

[Text] Summary: The United States will soon begin several rounds of talks with the Soviet Union. This indicates an important change in the U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union. The reason for this change is, first, because of the pressure of events, and second, because of its own need. The fierce contention between the United States and the Soviet Union will still exist in the future. The dual tactics employed by the United States against the Soviet Union are not likely to produce the desired result. [end of summary]

The representatives of the United States and the Soviet Union will begin strategic nuclear arms negotiations on 29 June. At the same time, negotiations will also be carried out by the United States and the Soviet Union on medium-range nuclear arms in Europe and by the East and West on disarmament in central Europe. The fact that several rounds of talks open at the same time shows that the United States has already opened the door for a dialogue with the Soviet Union. Compared with the situation of 1 and 1/2 years ago, this can only be described as a major change in U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union.

The recent readjustment made by the United States in its policy toward the Soviet Union is mainly reflected in a speech made by President Reagan on 9 May. In this speech, Reagan for the first time formally proposed a five-point program as a guide to East-West relations. This program has two distinguishing features: 1) In the light of the Soviet military buildup and external expansion, it proposes the need to implement "military parity," "economic security" and "regional stability" measures. 2) It emphatically stresses the need to hold disarmament negotiations and summit meetings with the Soviet Union in the future. This speech shows that the United States is prepared to use the dual tactics of actual strength and negotiations to deal with the dual tactics habitually employed by the Soviet Union. Compared with the policy of the Reagan administration when it first took office, there is indeed a very great difference in this policy, and this is clearly manifested in the following issues:

First, the change of attitude on disarmament talks. More than a year ago, the Reagan administration pursued a policy of "first a position of strength and then negotiation." It was busy drawing up plans for rebuilding its military strength and increasing military spending, and was not enthusiastic about disarmament talks. Since the first disarmament statement made by Reagan last year, the United States has hoisted as signs of U.S. sincerity a banner of disarmament followed by a proposal for a "zero option plan," a plan for the reduction in stages of strategic arms and a suggestion for reducing land forces stationed by the Warsaw Pact and NATO in Europe to 700,000 men for each side.

Second, the change of attitude toward holding a U.S.-Soviet summit meeting. When Reagan first came to office, he thought that since there was a conflict of interests between the United States and the Soviet Union, there was no reason to hold a summit meeting between the heads of the two countries. Now he has changed his view and asserted: "As long as the two sides hold discussions rather than find fault with one another, the problem can be solved." He took the initiative and expressed his hope that he would hold talks with Leonid I. Brezhnev when the UN arms-reduction special meeting was held in New York City. Later the United States repeatedly put forward the proposal for holding a summit meeting. Compared with his previous attitude, this is a conspicuous change.

Third, Reagan has altered his "principle of relativeness." What the United States means by the "principle of relativeness" is directly relating improved U.S.-Soviet relations to Soviet actions in the world and treating the adoption of an attitude of restraining by the Soviet Union as the prerequisite for the holding of a summit meeting and nuclear talks. Although the Reagan administration has not now completely abandoned this view of "relativeness," it has altered its meaning and has excluded the summit meeting and the nuclear talks from it. This view is that the overall improvement of the U.S.-Soviet relations, especially the normalization of their economic and commercial relations, depends on whether the Soviet Union adopts a responsible and restrained attitude.

It is first because of the pressure of the situation, and second, because of the United States' own need that it has so conspicuously altered its Soviet policy. The New York TIMES once said that Reagan's philosophical viewpoint of the world was based on his advocation that the world is divided into "two opposing extremes," but his foreign policies have to be restricted by various practical domestic and foreign factors. There are good reasons in these words. The present readjustment of the policies of the United States has resulted from the impact of domestic and foreign factors. At home, Reagan's supply-side economic policy has failed to bring about an upturn in the American economy; on the contrary, it has deepened the economic depression and acutely increased financial deficits. This is not only detrimental to the realization of the arms expansion plans of the Reagan administration, but has also given rise to a large-scale anti-nuclear campaign and a growing feeling of insecurity among the people. Demand for arms reduction and negotiation and demonstrations against nuclear arms expansion have come from the upper strata as well as the lower strata and a hue and cry has been raised. This is what the Reagan administration cannot ignore.

Another important reason attributing to such changes is the present condition of the U.S.-European relations. Today U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union is increasingly restricted by its West European allies. In a speech delivered 9 May, Reagan admitted that only by uniting as one could the West be powerful enough to cope with the Soviet Union. He also stressed that the Western countries should not consume their energy because of an internal quarrel. Over the past year or so, U.S.-European relations have occasionally become strained. Faced with economic difficulties and a large-scale peace movement at home, West European countries have blamed the United States for its acts of giving prominence to armament and being very keen on sanctions. They pay more attention to the East-West dialogue.

In order to rely on the strength of the West European allies to resist the Soviet Union, the United States cannot but give consideration to the demands of Western Europe. In particular, on the eve of the convention of the two Western summit conferences, the United States should put forth some ideas which are welcomed by Western Europe to seek unity of action by the West.

Naturally, although in the U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union recently announced by the Reagan administration we have found out some major changes were made, most of them are tactical changes. The basic U.S. tactics of strengthening its contention with the Soviet Union and resisting Soviet expansionism remain unchanged. In his recent talks on the strategic problems, William Clark, national security adviser, declared that the Soviet Union is still the main threat to the United States and that U.S. tactics toward the Soviet Union should be based on military strength, including diplomacy, politics, economics and intelligence. Therefore, with regard to U.S.-Soviet relations, despite the talks on disarmament that are under way and the meetings of the heads of the two governments which has been put on the agenda, the sharp competition and contention between them will continue. This has been clearly reflected in the quarrel between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet foreign minister in their talks held in New York and the antagonistic nuclear disarmament plans formulated by the United States and the Soviet Union.

Recently, people in authority in the United States have made a more optimistic estimate. They believe that since the Soviet Union is facing severe economic difficulties and a "change" of leadership, the United States is provided with a better opportunity to adopt dual tactics toward the Soviet Union so that it will be compelled to exercise restraint. However, Soviet acts over the past 20 years have shown that while carrying out its arms expansions and war preparations, the Soviet Union is also a crafty old hand at "peace offensive." Recently, the Soviet Union has successively dished out the proposal of "freezing strategic nuclear weapons" and the guarantee of "not being the first to use nuclear weapons." Its purpose in doing so is to win over public opinion and challenge the United States. This is the "biggest diversionary ball thrown to the Reagan administration" (a comment by the Tokyo SHIMBUN of Japan.) Therefore, the dual tactics adopted by the United States toward the Soviet Union will not easily achieve the desired result as was expected.

PRC CONSUL VISITS CALIFORNIA HYDROPOWER PLANT

[Text] San Francisco, June 28 (XINHUA) -- A small hydro-electric plant equipped with a Chinese turbine-generator set has been operating smoothly in a remote creek gorge, east of Redding, north California since its birth two weeks. Called the Baily Creek Project, the one-turbine-generator plant is the "first non-utility developed, all new small hydro project" in the United States since the recent enactment of Federal laws that encouraged non-utility development of small hydro projects.

The turbine-generator set for the Bailey Creek facility was manufactured by China's Hangzhou electric factory. It is the first small hydro-electric plant in the U.S. that uses such facility from China.

The plant with a capacity of 670 kilowatts generates enough power to serve approximately 1,000 homes. It can generate 4.2 million KWH of electricity in an average rainfall year.

The Bailey Creek was developed from scratch by the Consolidated Hydro-Electric, Inc., which will sell electricity to the Pacific Gas and Electric Company under the terms of a 30-year contract. The plant will help the latter save 6,000 barrels of expensive low-sulfur oil each year.

The opening of the Bailey Creek Project is "part of a new age in hydro-electric development in the United States," say the Consolidated Hydroelectric, Inc. and the Pacific Gas and Electric Company.

Dedication ceremonies for the project was held on June 13 and was presided over by Georgiana H. Sheldon, vice chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. China's consul general in San Francisco, Hu Dingyi, and a Chinese delegation attended the ceremonies.

China's Dongfan electrical machinery works has also maufactured three sets of hydro-electric generating units (turbines and generators) with a total capacity of 10,000 kilowatts for the Camanche power plant under construction in northern California.

U.S. AIR FORCE DECIDES TO FORM SPACE COMMAND

[Text] Washington, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Air Force announced today a decision to form a space command, a new command intended to consolidate Air Force space activities. "We are making a decision that we are now heavily committed to operations in space which deliver capabilities that are very important to our defenses," said the Air Force chief of staff, Gen. Lew Allen, at a Pentagon news conference at which the decision was announced.

The new command, to begin on September 1, will have its headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo. Its commander will be Gen. James Hartinger, who now heads the North American Air Defense Command.

Allen said that creation of the space command will "provide a link between the space-related research and development process and operational users, and retain North American aerospace defense command authority and responsibilities as currently organized." It is the Air Force's hope and belief, he said, that space command will develop quickly into a unified command in which other services would participate, and it would mean that when the Navy or other branch of the armed forces requires the use of space, it would need to go through the Air Force.

The Air Force also announced a decision to create within Air Force Systems Command a space technology center at Kirtland Air Force Base, New Mexico, during the first half of fiscal year 1983.

The new center will focus on the major scientific disciplines for launch vehicle and spacecraft technology. It will emphasize space technology to develop qualitatively superior space systems as the Air Force moves into the twenty-first century, the announcement said.

The new decision is made at a time when the U.S. is contending vigorously with the Soviet Union for military advantage in space technology.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES PASSES 1983 BUDGET

[Text] Washington, June 22 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. House of Representatives today gave its final approval of a 1983 budget plan, marking the end of the tug-of-war that went on in Congress over the budget in the past few months.

The new budget plan provided for a total spending of 769.8 billion dollars with a deficit of 103.9 billion dollars as against Reagan's proposed 757.6 billion dollar spending and 91.5 billion dollar deficit. It projects 21 billion dollars in higher taxes, a 7.6 billion dollar reduction in the defense build-up and a 6.6 billion dollar cut in domestic spending in fiscal 1983. Many social programs, such as Medicare, Medicaid, food stamps and education, will be more deeply affected.

The new budget was drafted by congressional Republicans and endorsed by a bi-partisan group of House-Senate negotiators last Friday. The Democratic-controlled House will send their approved budget to the Senate, where the Republicans command a majority and a final passage is virturally assured. It voted today 51-45 in favor of the plan on a test vote, although the final passage was put off until Wednesday.

The heated debate over the 1983 budget started four months ago shortly after Reagan presented his proposal to Congress. Reagan's original plan was rejected by Congress overwhelmingly. Then White House aides and congressional leaders met in private more than a month in a futile attempt to draft a bi-partisan compromise. Following Reagan and House Speaker Thomas O'Neill's failure of a face-to-face meeting to agree on a compromise, Congress tried to work out its own version of the budget. The new budget is a compromise by all sides.

The arm-twisting on the budget was focused on how to reduce the huge deficit which was estimated in April at 180 billion dollars, twice what Reagan originally suggested. However, in its final effort, Congress still cannot put the deficit below 100 billion dollars. This will undoubtedly become one of the major obsticles for economic recovery.

KYODO: OFFICIAL CALLS FOR USSR CULTURAL TIES

OW290056 Tokyo KYODO in English 0043 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 29, KYODO — A Chinese official has expressed the hope for expansion of exchanges with the Soviet Union in the fields of culture, science and sports although bilateral relations are low-ebbed at present.

Statements to this effect were made by Zhou Peiyuan, vice chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, at a meeting with Japanese Dietman Tako Fujinami here Monday.

The consultative conference was set up in 1949 as a Chinese united front when the Peoples' Republic of China was born and is now led by party Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping.

Zhou told the conservative Japanese politician that relations with the Soviet Union are not good but the Soviet people want friendship with the Chinese.

"Actually there are not much exchanges between the two peoples. Even if the Chinese want such exchanges, the Soviet leadership hampers them," Zhou was quoted as saying.

China in March sent three leading economists to the Soviet Union to study the Soviet economy and invited Soviet athletes to an international sports meet here in June.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES USSR'S NEW AFGHAN 'PLOT'

[Text] In light of the tripartite talks on the Afghan issue held in Geneva on 13 June, the Afghan alliance of Islamic fighters issued a declaration to expose the Soviet Union's new plot on the Afghan issue.

The declaration pointed out that the purpose of the talks proposed by the Kabul regime and instigated by the Soviet Union is not to solve the Afghan issue but to "deceive the world and bully the people of our country." Whenever the Soviet Union states that it is ready for negotiations, it sends another soldier to Afghanistan.

The declaration said that the Soviet Union has never mentioned the Islamic fighters at international meetings. However, it attempted to get international legal recognition for the Karmal regime that is propped up by the Soviet Union, so as to cover up the fact that the Soviet Union is intervening in Afghanistan. At present, "the Russians do not want to arrive at any agreement on the talks -- what they want is to relax restrictions so as to occupy Afghanistan forever."

The declaration stressed that although the superpowers do not acknowledge that the Islamic fighters are the only representatives of the Afghan people, the Afghan resistance organizations will not admit defeat nor will they be eliminated. "If the opinions of the Islamic fighters are not considered, if they are not consulted, if their indispensable rights are not respected, if pragmatic views are not adopted, all resolutions will be void and will bring about negative consequences in the future."

DPRK REUNIFICATION PROPOSAL SUPPORTED IN PARIS

[Text] Paris, June 27 (XINHUA) — An international organization today voiced support to Korean President Kim Il-song's proposal for the reunification of Korea.

The Executive Committee on the International Liaison Committee for the Independent and Peaceful Reunification of Korea held a meeting here on June 26-27 and issued a declaration stating that the proposition for the founding of a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo is a rational, just and equitable one which will help open a way to a rapid solution of the problem of the reunification of Korea. Such a proposition was formulated by President Kim Il-song at the Sixth Congress of the Workers' Party of Korea in October, 1980.

In the declaration, the Executive Committee reaffirmed its "will to act to accelerate the process of the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea and to put an end to the tension in Asia and contribute to maintaining peace and security in the world."

The declaration pointed out, "The Korean people should be able to solve the problem of the reunification of their country in a totally independent way." It added, "the outside forces have neither right nor reason to interfere in the problem."

The declaration demanded "withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Korea," "democratization of the South Korean society" and "a stop of the policy of confrontation" pursued by the South Korean regime.

A programme of action adopted by the meeting of the Executive Committee called for organizing different forms of action to support President Kim Il-song's proposition.

The liaison committee was founded in 1977. The present meeting of its executive committee was attended by more than 30 noted personages from various countries. Kim Yong-sun, vice-president of the Korean Committee of Solidarity With the People of the World, was present at the meeting.

Lucio Luzzatto, president of the liaison committee and former deputy of the Italian National Assembly, delivered a report to the meeting.

U.S., SOUTH KOREA ACCUSED OF VIOLATING ARMISTICE

[Text] Panmunjom, June 26 (XINHUA) — Major General Han Chu-kyong, senior member of the Korean-Chinese side, today strongly accused the United States and the South Korean regime of wantonly violating the armistice agreement.

At the 414th meeting of the Military Armistice Commission here, he lodged a strong protest against the continued aerial espionage and military provocations committed by the United States and the South Korean regime against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK). He demanded that the other side take responsible steps to discontinue such criminal acts. The meeting was called at a proposal of the Korean-Chinese side.

According to Major General Han Chu-kyong, the U.S. imperialist aggressors infiltrated an "SR-71" high-speed, high-altitude reconnaissance plane into the sky above the Kangryong Peninsula in the southwestern part of South Hwanghae Province and above the territorial waters east of Kosong, Kangwon Province on June 9, above the territorial waters east of Kosong on June 25 and above the territorial waters east of Kosong and the coastal waters off Sosura, North Hamgyong Province on June 19.

The United States and the South Korean regime also repeatedly committed grave armed provocations in the demilitarized zone. On June 3, 7, and 9, the South Korean puppet army committed the armed provocation of firing large-caliber machine guns and automatic weapons at the posts of the Korean-Chinese side in the demilitarized zone in the eastern and central sectors of the front. On June 10 it committed the criminal act of bringing in recoilless guns.

The aerial espionage and military provocations committed by them numbered over 1,800 in the period from May 25 to June 22 alone.

All the facts clearly show that the other side is extremely insincere in the implementation of the armistice agreement and persistently maneuvering to heighten tension in the country, said Major General Han Chu-kyong. He said that the basic question of U.S. occupation of South Korea should be settled in order to relax tension in the Korean Peninsula, reduce the danger of war and achieve Korea's reunification by peaceful means. He pointed out that the United States should look the reality of the Korean Peninsula in the face, cease from creating "two Koreas", withdraw all its troops and military facilities from South Korea in accordance with a resolution of the U.N. General Assembly and turn the armistice agreement into a peace agreement. Han Chu-kyong held a press conference after the meeting.

COMMENTARY ANSWERS TASS ON KAMPUCHEA COALITION

OW282214 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1130 GMT 28 Jun 82

[Text] Two days after the leaders of the three anti-Vietnamese Kampuchean patriotic forces officially signed a declaration establishing the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, the Soviet news agency TASS carried a commentary with abusive terms. Not only does the commentary fiercely assail China, but it also threatens, attacks and tries to divide the ASEAN countries, absurdly asserting that in reality a number of ASEAN states have become conspirators in the current adventure which can lead to a dangerous conflict. Why has a good event widely acclaimed by the world community angered Moscow? The answer is not strange. In the last analysis, Kampuchea is an important link in the Soviet Union's southward march strategy. The achievement of a coalition among the patriotic forces there will further frustrate the Soviet strategic plan.

Over the past few years, the Soviet Union has exerted efforts in implementing its southward march strategy. First of all, it supported Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea. Next, it sent its own troops to occupy Afghanistan. Its strategic design is very obvious. East of the Strait of Malacca, it controls Indochina through Vietnam and thus can send its navy and air force from Vladivostok to the South China Sea and the Gulf of Thailand and cast a covetous eye on the Strait of Malacca. West of the Strait of Malacca, it uses its invasion of Afghanistan to create a position from which it can at any moment make a strategic advance into Iran to the west and Pakistan to the east, creating conditions for a blockade of the Strait of Hormuz in the future.

This is a very sinister trick. If this strategic design is achieved, the Strait of Malacca will be blockaded and the oil transportation route of the West will be cut. All of the Indian Ocean, from the eastern coast of Africa to Australia, will be an area for the Soviet Navy to ride roughshod. At such a time, the Asian-Pacific region and even the whole world will not see tranquillity.

Fortunately, enjoying the powerful support of the world community, the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples have staunchly resisted Soviet and Vietnamese aggression, thus checking the Soviet southward advance. Over the past few years, the Soviet Union has exerted all efforts to eliminate these two obstacles to its southward advance. However, not only has it not achieved what it wants, but on the contrary, the patriotic forces in these two countries have become more valiant and powerful in struggle. They have checked the Soviet Union's advance, throwing it into an impasse.

This is enough to give the Soviet Union a headache. Now, with the emergence of the alliance among the three Kampuchean forces, it has become increasingly difficult for the Soviet Union to extricate itself from the quagmire in Kampuchea. How can it refrain from blowing off its anger? TASS's quick resort to abuse has clearly shown this anger.

Naturally, despite obstacles to its southward advance strategy, as long as the Soviet Union harbors its design of ruling the world it will still plot to march southward. In the future, in addition to continuing to strive to annihilate the Afghan and Kampuchean patriotic forces on the battlefield, the Soviet Union will continue to launch political campaigns as in the past, first to cover up its strategic design and distract world attention from the aggressors in these two areas, and second to devise a political solution to incite as many countries as possible to make contact with its two puppet administrations — one of which was set up through Vietnam — so as to disrupt world support for these two countries. Everyone is vigilantly watching Soviet activities in this matter.

HANOI SAID FEARFUL OF NEW COALITION IN KAMPUCHEA

[Commentary by XINHUA correspondent Li Yonghing: "Fierce Looking But Fainthearted"]

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach told an AFP reporter in Hanoi on 23 June that the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government "does not worry Vietnam a bit" and that it "cannot change the situation in the least" and "cannot fool anyone."

However, 3 days before the declaration of the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government was signed, Vietnam's NHAN DAN on 19 June carried an article accusing the ASEAN countries of "rigging up" a coalition government and charging that it was "unwise" to do so. On 22 June, the day the declaration of the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government was signed, NHAN DAN published a commentary cursing the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government as "a freak," "a white-washed and dressed-up corpse," and accusing the ASEAN countries of "being used by China to oppose the Indochinese countries and create tensions in this region" and so on and so forth. On 23 June, the QUAN DOI NHAN DAN also carried an article attacking and cursing the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government. It is strange; since Hanoi is not in the least worried by the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government, it should have taken it calmly. Why should it set its propaganda machine in motion endlessly hurling foul abuses?

It shows that Hanoi is not only worried but frightened by the establishment of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government. In the 3 years and more since Vietnam occupied Kampuchea, it has played all kinds of schemes and intrigues, attempting to wipe out Democratic Kampuchea and other anti-Vietnam forces and achieve its scheme to permanently occupy Kampuchea by force. However, facts have shown that after contests of strength in four dry seasons and three monsoon seasons, the raging flames of the Kampuchean People's struggle against Vietnamese aggression have not been stamped out but have grown in intensity, landing the Vietnamese aggressors in an extremely difficult position. The three sides of Kampuchea's anti-Vietnamese forces, putting the overall interests above everything else, have now achieved unity and will wage a common struggle. Undoubtedly this will deal an even heavier blow at the Vietnamese aggressors and put the Vietnamese authorities in a more difficult position. The ugly and ferocious accusations and abuses of Hanoi's propaganda machine only show the fear in its heart.

RENMIN RIBAO ON VIETNAMESE MORALE IN KAMPUCHEA

[Article by Tan Shi [6223 1395]: "The Heartfelt Wishes of the Vietnamese Aggressor Troops in Kampuchea"]

[Text] I had the chance to look at a number of captured documents and letters during my visit to the Democratic Kampuchea-controlled area. These items had been captured by the Democratic Kampuchea Army and guerrillas from enemy bases or from prisoners of war or picked up on the battlefield. From them one could see both the ugly features of the aggressors and also their fear and spiritual emptiness.

One could clearly understand what kind of army this was by reading the detailed list of instructions issued by the 88th Regiment of the 302d Vietnamese Army Division on 10 October 1981 concerning "consolidating and strengthening the discipline of the units and enhancing their combat effectiveness." The document said there had been 56 violations of discipline in this regiment in the 9 months from January to September 1981, and the noteworthy feature of them was: There were 41 cases of desertion, in 1 of which an assault rifle was taken; there were 2 suicides, involving 2 persons; there were 2 cases of being killed in enemy ambush while drunk, and 6 persons were killed in these incidents. There were also cases of refusal to obey orders, refusal to carry out special missions, taking liberties with women, injuring people when drunk, stealing money and so on. From these obviously incomplete materials, it is easy to see what kind of force is this aggressor army that is dying for the Le Duan clique.

One letter home that could not be delivered in time was written on 9 January this year by Tao Van Tieu, a soldier of the 302d Division of the Vietnamese aggressor army, to his wife and children. Before the letter could be mailed, the man had been killed in a "sweep" in northern Kampuchea. He had not expected that this would be his last letter home, but it seemed that he was already aware of his fate. He wrote: "I don't know why, but I could not sleep at all during the midday rest today...it will soon be the spring festival, and every time I think of it, I always feel very melancholy, and I am always thinking of you and the children even more at this time...it is really heartrendering to think of you! I often think of the time when I was still at home, with the two of us and the children, how happy we were then; it was all like a beautiful dream, don't you think? We had peace and we shed tears of happiness. But now, what can I do under the press of events? Sometimes I feel very envious; why cannot we be the same as others of our generation, united with our dear ones at home, instead of living far apart? How sad I am every time I think of this!"

I also saw a notebook passed to me by (Ying Te), commander of a DK army division. This was captured during an outstanding anti-sweep ambush in a village in Siem Reap Province on 18 February.

This notebook contained quite a lot of material. There were farewell letters from relatives and friends before the man joined the army, quotations from a girlfriend's letters, poems, notes on events, notes of mourning for dead comrades-in-arms and so on. The notebook was found in the knapsack of Phan Van Cuong, a security guard in the aggressor army.

He noted in the book on 4 October 1978: "I often think of my virtuous mother when the army is resting in the jungle." On 5 October 1978, he wrote for his girlfriend: "Little girl! I hope you will wait patiently; the moment the mission is completed I will immediately fly to your side."

In the spring of 1979, the unit to which Phan Van Cuong belonged was sent to Kampuchea to carry out the Le Duan clique's policy of genocide against the Kampuchean people. Cruel reality enlightens people's thinking. Phan Van Cuong too gradually fell from the ideal of "laying down one's life for one's country" into hesitance and depression. The sight in Kampuchea struck a chord in his heart and he felt that in the world around him everything was depressing, even the rivers and mountains. He wrote in the notebook on 16 April 1980: "I want to write down my precarious military life here; is this really my fate, from which there is no escape? I would really like to end all this by dying, but when I think of many things in life I have not yet enjoyed, it is better to go on living...surely one day the swords will be beaten into plowshares, and when that comes, I will go home to my loved ones...."

Although Phan Van Cuong was marching, training and fighting with his colleagues year after year, he felt lonely and had to "submit to humiliation"; if he was careless for a moment, then "great calamity would descend on him," because "the organization is unfair" and often "acts according to its feelings." Therefore, during his leisure times, he had to keep his feelings hidden or confide them in letters. He painstakingly copied into this notebook almost all the letters he received from his relatives and friends.

Phan Van Cuong wrote his final note on 1 February 1982, under the heading "I have to set out on a mission tomorrow." We have no means of knowing if he had any premonition, but it was evident that he was in a gloomy frame of mind. He wrote: "Black night covers the earth, the lights by the road are blown to and fro by the wind, as I walk along this lonely little road. Tomorrow I have to set out for the battlefield, yet what do I leave behind? Behind me there is just the quiet jungle, and also the girl I love, who awaits me! My little girl, my darling...."

Could his home village and his relatives and friends know at that moment that the one they awaited or had loved dearly had now become a scapegoat for the hegemonist policy pushed by the Le Duan clique? and what was left in this notebook was the record of a Vietnamese youth's lifelong regrets, and also a record of the defeat of the Vietnamese aggressor army.

In the course of the conversations, which proceeded in sincere and friendly atmosphere, Chinese premier and the Maltese prime minister had wide-ranging and in-depth exchange of views on major international issues of common concern, especially on the situation in Mediterranean area, and on the further development of bilateral relations.

In a briefing on the situation in the Mediterranean area, the Maltese Government's foreign policy as well as its views on some international issues, Prime Minister Mintoff said Malta will contribute to safeguarding peace in the Mediterranean area.

Zhao Ziyang pointed out that the Chinese and the Maltese Governments are of the same view on many major international issues. The premier said that from the long-term point of view, it is mainly the strength of the Third World countries that will decide the future of the world, despite the two superpowers which are attempting to dominate the world. Therefore, he added, the strengthening of unity among the Third World countries is the most reliable guarantee in maintaining world peace.

Premier Zhao Ziyang also reiterated China's fundamental policy in strengthening unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace.

Zhao Ziyang Gives Banquet

Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, was present at the banquet.

In his speech, Premier Zhao said, "The Chinese Government has always supported the policy of neutrality and non-alignment pursued by the Maltese Government and its just position of safeguarding peace and security in the Mediterranean."

On relations between China and Malta, the premier said, both China and Malta are Third World countries. In face of the increasingly complex and tense international situation of today, we Third World countries should unite and cooperate."

"We are convinced that world peace can be preserved so long as we Third World countries close our ranks, unite with all the forces that can be united and persist in opposing imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism."

Talking about the situation in the Middle East, he strongly condemned Israel for continuing to escalate its military invasion and beseiging and bombarding Beirut, capital of Lebanon, and its reckless slaughtering.

"The Chinese Government and people resolutely support the Lebanese, Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just struggle to resist Israeli aggression. We are willing to join all the other peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and peoples in the endeavour to stop Israeli invasion, compel Israel to withdraw its troops from Lebanon, support the just cause of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples and safeguard peace in the Middle East," Premier Zhao said.

Prime Minister Mintoff praised China's policy of economic readjustment as a necessary step to revitalise the enormous economic potential of this country. "We feel certain of the ultimate success of your policies," he said.

He said, China's restructuring and streamlining of the State Council and the government departments is also a wise and courageous step that should be extremely beneficial to the whole nation.

He said that the stability and unity that characterize China's present political situation are a reflection and direct result of the wise policies of the present leadership. "We are confident that the collective determination of the Chinese Government and people will expedite China's transformation into a more powerful and modern socialist state" he added.

Prime Minister Mintoff thanked China for its solid political and economic support to the Maltese Government and people. He outlined the great achievements Malta has made in safeguarding national independence and in developing the national economy.

Referring to Maltese foreign policy, the prime minister said, conscious of Malta's potential role as a center of peace in the Mediterranean, the Maltese Government has freely chosen for Malta the status of a neutral state pursuing a policy of non-alignment.

He said Malta's status of non-aligned neutrality promotes Mediterranean peace and security and serves the wider interests of world peace. This is not disputed by any neighboring state. "In fact we are encouraged by the recognition and support to Malta's neutrality expressed by several countries," Mintoff said.

He said: "China, notwithstanding the physical distance and the great divergence in historical development, has been among the first to support our struggle for independence." "We are also confident that the dialogue started 10 years ago between our two countries will continue for many years to come in a spirit of friendship, trust and mutual respect which have always characterized Sino-Maltese relations," he noted.

Present also were Gao Yangwen, minister of coal industry; Zhang Wenjin, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Cheng Zhiping, Chinese ambassador to Malta; and leading members of other departments and the Beijing Municipal People's Government.

State Councillor Chen Muhua and Prime Minister Mintoff held talks and discussed economic and technical cooperation between the two countries this afternoon.

RENMIN RIBAO SAYS ISRAEL SOURCE OF 'TERRORISTS'

["International Jottings" by Yu Cun [0060 2625: "Who Are Terrorists?"]

[Text] After the Israeli aggressor troops openly occupied one-fourth of Lebanon, Israeli Prime Minister Begin hurried to New York and Washington and talked glibly, defending the Israeli act of invading Lebanon. Begin declared that Israel was not carrying out aggression. Instead, Israel wanted to stay in Lebanon until after "the affirmation of safe arrangements." He said that by so-called "safe arrangements," he meant eliminating the PLO as "a source of Middle East terrorists."

Is Israel carrying out aggression? Even a schoolboy knows the answer. As to who is the "source of Middle East terrorists," this is a question worth studying. It is a sheer slander for Begin to describe the PLO struggling for national survival as a "terrorist" organization. The PLO is the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. It has waged a persistent struggle for the resettlement of several million wandering compatriots who are leading a pathetic life. How can this be a crime?

On the other hand, a study of how Begin made his start enables people to clearly see that only he and his kind are notorious terrorists through and through. Under his command and planning, 250 males and females, old and young, were mercilessly massacred in the (Di-Er Ya-Xin) [6611 1422 7161 6580] village near Jerusalem in April 1948. In the 10 years since 1972 alone, Israeli troops have carried out eight relatively large-scale invasions of Lebanon and massacred innocent civilians in the thousands. Is all this not enough to prove that Begin and his ilk are out-and-out terrorists?

UN SESSION SCORES ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON

[Text] United Nations, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese representative Ghassan Tuwayni today urged Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanon immediately and unconditionally.

Addressing the last-day general debate of the U.N. special session on disarmament today, Tuwayni warned that the war in Lebanon was becoming a danger to the entire world. He said the Lebanese were now determined to achieve peace in Lebanon not independently from, but certainly without waiting for, a just and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East question.

Despite reservations about Palestinian military activities in Lebanon, he continued, Lebanon could not accept as a consequence of Israel's war against the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), a settlement of the Palestinian question which would force the 500,000 Palestinians now in Lebanon, armed or unarmed, to relinquish their "right of return." In the past few days, representatives from some other Arab countries also castigated Israel for its current aggression.

Clovis Maksud, observer of the league of Arab states, said that Israel's invasion of Lebanon was a total negation of the purposes and objectives of the special session. It was a demonstration of how "a Nazi-like regime," when it was unrestrained by the sanctions of the international community, became a politico-military monster on the loose, he charged.

Syrian representative Diya'-Allah al-Fattah called on all countries to adopt serious measures to end the Israeli aggression. Israel's aggression against Lebanon and the Palestinian people strengthened the United States-Israeli military presence in the Middle East, he said.

Egyptian representative A. 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid declared that the Egyptian people and government "denounce this flagrant aggression on the sovereignty, security and safety of Lebanon and the victimization of our Palestinian brothers." He urged Israel to cease all military operations and withdraw from Lebanon.

Tunisian representative Taleb Salim noted that the odious sounds of marching boots and bombs were heard in Lebanon as the special session met to discuss disarmament. He stressed that Israel should not be left to continue trampling on the universally accepted norms of international law and conduct.

Omani representative Mahmud Abu an-Nasir stated that the international community was now called on to put an end to the bloodshed in Lebanon by insisting on the implementation of Security Council Resolutions 508 and 509 (1982). He declared that Oman condemned Israel's brutal aggression against Lebanon.

RADIO URGES PRESERVING IDEOLOGICAL PURITY

[Text] The CCP is guided by Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and regards the realization of communism as its ultimate aim and maximum program. Thus, our party must preserve its communist purity at all times and under all circumstances, because purity is the life of our party and a most fundamental characteristic that distinguishes the Communist Party from all other political parties.

Preserving the Communist Party's purity means upholding the lofty communist ideal and principle, persevering in communist ethics and values and persisting in the communist world outlook and methodology. This has always been a most important ideological and organizational issue to a Marxist-Leninist party.

Under today's new historical conditions, preserving the party's communist purity is of particular importance. All our party's undertakings have been guided by communist ideology. All our party members should be vanguard fighters who are imbued with communist ideas. Our party has always attached great importance to educating its members in preserving communist purity.

Because of the 10 years of internal disorder, the communist doctrine and image have been distorted and badly tarnished. Newly recruited young members have not received any systematic education in communist ideology. Some party members lack steadfast faith in the party's objectives of struggle. Some veteran party members have failed to come to grips with the current situation ideologically. Their faith in communism is gradually becoming blunted. A very few party members have fallen victim to the bourgeoisie's sugar-coated bullets, degenerated morally and lost all sense of shame. Under these circumstances, preserving the Communist Party's purity has become an urgent task, and educating the whole party in preserving its communist purity has become imperative.

First of all, it is necessary to conduct among all party members an education in communist ideology to include the party's guiding principle, line, rules and regulations, and discipline. This kind of education must run through practices in routine party lessons and party branch life. Training in the rotation of cadres on active duty must also include education in communist ideology. The objective of this education is to inspire all party members to work hard for the communist cause all their lives, to guide their conduct with the great communist ideal and to overcome their weakness of thinking only of the present and neglecting the future.

At present, our country is still in the historical stage of socialism, and communism, as a social system, cannot soon become a reality. However, a socialist society will eventually develop into a communist society. We cannot afford to abandon our ideal and faith in struggling for communism, the principle of guiding our words and deeds with the communist ideological system, nor the fundamental aim of wholeheartedly working for the interests of the masses. If we abandon them, it means that we are no longer communists because we have lost the basic characteristics of being a communist.

Second, it is necessary to carry out education in arduous struggle among party members in light of the current crackdown on economic crime. Arduous struggle is an inherent quality of our working class as well as a cherished tradition of communists. Without arduous struggle, we are bound to forget our class origin. One of the causes of those very few party members becoming victims of bourgeois ideas, bringing humiliation upon the state and themselves and becoming captives of the bourgeoisie, is that these comrades have forgotten their class origin and unwittingly disarmed themselves.

Third, it is necessary to pay attention to consolidating the party ranks and ensuring the party's organizational purity. The investigations carried out after the downfall of the gang of four, like the current campaign to combat corrosion by bourgeois ideas and the crackdown on serious economic criminals, are all measures aimed at consolidating the party.

We must strictly handle cases of serious economic crime involving party members and party member cadres according to party discipline and state laws. We must overhaul and consolidate those basic-level units whose power is still in the hands of remnants of the gang of four.

In short, each Communist Party member shouldering the great and honorable historical task, must hold high the banner of communism and use the communist ideology, principle and ethical standard to guide his speech and deeds and the buildup of our ranks. Only in this way can we preserve the party's communist purity and ensure continuous victories for the party's cause.

TALK ON DEALING BLOWS AT ECONOMIC CRIME

[Radio talk by (Liu Ruxian): "Conscientiously Implement the Party's Policy To Ensure the Healthy Development of Struggle" -- seventh in a series of talks on dealing blows at serious economic crimes]

[Text] At present, the struggle against serious economic crimes is being deepened throughout the country. To guarantee the healthy development of this struggle and win a complete victory, we must conscientiously study and correctly grasp the principle and policy laid down by the party Central Committee and the State Council. This talk will deal with three topics:

1. Putting stress on dealing blows at key points.

The party Central Committee and the State Council's decision have specifically stipulated the key points of this struggle. It points out: In dealing with general and major cases, stress should be placed on handling the major cases; in dealing with long, pending cases and those that have just occurred, stress should be placed on handling the latter; in dealing with general cases in society, cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions or cases of crimes committed by them in collusion with lawbreakers in society, stress should be placed on handling the cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions.

This tells us that it is necessary to concentrate our efforts on grasping big and major cases and dealing relentless blows at criminals who seriously sabotage the economy. The decision has shown us the main targets and orientation of this struggle. We must put stress on dealing blows at key points and keep firmly to the general trend of the struggle.

Why is it necessary to place stress on handling the major cases, the cases that have just occurred and cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions? The major cases generally refer to crimes involving a large amount of money or committed by criminals in collusion with one another. These cases not only seriously damage the interests of the state and the people, but also sometimes result in bad political consequences. Undoubtedly, we should stress dealing blows at these criminal activities.

Cases that have just occurred refer to those law-breaking and criminal activities continuously carried out by a tiny minority of people who risk danger in desperation and defy the law to seek wanton profits despite numerous laws and stipulations promulgated by the party and the state. It is essential to deal resolute blows at these economic criminal activities which have just occurred so as to rapidly and effectively curb this unhealthy tendency.

Cases involving government offices, enterprises and institutions refer to criminal activities carried out by cadres, staffs and workers in some government offices, enterprises and institutions who abuse their power over manpower, financial and material resources, supply, production and marketing, to damage the interests of the state and the people by colluding with outlaws in society and with one another at the higher and lower levels. If we fail to deal relentless blows at them, we cannot save more people, and the socialist characteristic of some government offices, enterprises and institutions may even degenerate.

It should also be noted that while we are investigating and handling some big and major cases at present, we are confronted with various obstructions and interference. Some cases are being investigated when suddenly clues disappear. Some cases have to be closed because no clues are available. Even at the beginning of the investigation of some cases some suspects have asked cadres at the higher and lower levels to plead for mercy for them. As a result, these cases cannot be investigated. Some who handle cases stop halfway because they are intimidated and face things which are deliberately made difficult. Some cases, though, clearly investigated, still cannot be completely settled. These obstructions and interferences mainly come from some leading cadres who are directly and indirectly related to these economic criminal cases. If we let this phenomenon go unchecked, we will fail in deepening this struggle and even be forced to give up halfway.

Grasping important cases does not mean taking a laissez-faire attitude toward general cases, long, pending cases or general cases in society. We must be quite clear on all economic criminal activities and other serious law-breaking activities and solemnly handle them. We do our work in order of importance and urgency in accordance with the arrangement of our work. We also do our work in different ways and according to different policies. However, we must be quite clear on our guiding thought: Only when we firmly grasp the important cases well can we guarantee the development of the struggle along the correct orientation.

In dealing with big and major cases, the general guidelines are to deal blows at criminals who severely sabotage the economy. All serious economic criminals, whether they are party members or not, and whether they are ranking cadres or not, must be punished according to the law.

2. Drawing several clearcut lines of demarcation.

Comrade Mao Zedong said: It is necessary to institute our policies in accordance with different situations. The present economic crimes involve numerous people and matters, and the situation is quite complicated. Only when we distinguish between different situations and draw a correct policy demarcation line can we keep the struggle on the right track.

The party Central Committee and the State Council's decision points out: While we are striking at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, a clear differentiation must be made between errors in work and violation of the law and criminal offenses, between unhealthy tendencies in economic affairs and economic offenses, and between smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, embezzlement, accepting bribes, speculation and swindling on the one hand, and problems arising from imperfections in the system and methods for implementation of the economic policies of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy on the other. In judging criminal responsibility, we must draw a clear line between interests of a big group and that of a small group.

This has further stipulated specific policy demarcation lines for our struggle. Why is it necessary to draw the above clear lines in this struggle? This is determined by the present actual situation. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, we have implemented the policies of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy. This is a correct policy decision which we have adopted by proceeding from realities to meet the needs in promoting socialist modernization. However, because of lack of experience, poor management measures and imperfect systems and work methods, we have committed errors in work and confronted various problems. This is essentially different from the economic crimes, including smuggling, trading in smuggled goods, embezzlements, accepting bribes, speculation and swindling, committed by some lawbreakers who take advantage of certain loopholes in our policy and flaunt the banner of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy.

Over the past several years, unhealthy economic tendencies have been quite pervasive and serious. They include using state and collectives' funds to entertain guests and buy them gifts, using public property as if it were private property, going after petty advantages, concocting various pretexts to recklessly issue bonuses, jobbery and using state funds to tour scenic spots.

All these are unhealthy economic tendencies even if they do not cause great losses to the state. These unhealthy economic tendencies are certainly erroneous and must also be resolutely corrected. However, it is necessary to strictly distinguish them from bribery, embezzlement and other economic crimes. If we fail to differentiate the one from the other and draw a clear demarcation line, not only will our policies be thrown into confusion and innocent people who have committed common mistakes be erroneously hurt, but the criminals who have seriously sabotaged the economy may escape the net.

As for cases of committing economic crimes in the name of the collective, injudging criminal responsibility, we should draw a clear line between personal embezzlement and the act of shifting from the interests of a big group to that of a small group. In other words, it is necessary to distinguish those who line their pockets from those who do not. This does not mean that the act of shifting from the interests of a big group to that of a small group is reasonable and not subject to investigation and handling. What must be pointed out is that the so-called law breaking and committing crimes for a collective and personal embezzlement are essentially sabotaging the socialist economy, undermining socialism and the interests of the state and the people, with the latter often doing greater harm than the former. Therefore, we should also sternly investigate and handle these cases, but we must deal with each case on its merits by investigating the case to see whether the personnel involved have lined their pockets and according to the seriousness of the crimes while meting out penalties and handling the cases.

In this struggle, how to correctly handle those who have committed economic crimes of a general nature is a question that has a very important bearing on strictly distinguishing between and correctly handling the two types of contradictions which are different in nature, and preventing enlarging the scope of attack. Those who have committed economic crimes of a general nature constitute a great majority of all the criminal offenders in the economic field. The nature of their problems is that of contradictions among the people. The way to deal with most of them is mainly to educate and criticize them and help them reform and stop doing evil. The decision of the party Central Committee and the State Council clearly points out: Those whose economic offenses are not so serious may be given lighter or no punishment when they decide to repent and return illicit money and goods.

Except for a small number of criminals who have caused serious damage to the economy, we must not arbitrarily enlarge the scope of attack to include ordinary workers, peasants and other working people in urban and rural areas. The unhealthy trends among commune- and brigade-run enterprises in rural areas and industrial and commercial enterprises in rural areas and industrial and commercial enterprises in urban areas, except for a few major cases which constitute serious crimes, should be solved in the process of consolidating the commune- and brigade-run enterprises and strengthening industrial and commercial management and the management of goods and materials.

We must remember past lessons, act strictly according to the relevant regulations of the party Central Committee and the State Council and prevent enlarging the scope of attack and giving rise to ill consequences.

3. No mass movement should be started.

The decision of the party Central Committee and the State Council clearly stipulates: In dealing blows at serious economic crimes, no mass movement should be started; still less should the practice of subjecting everyone to the test be allowed. At the same time it points out that within certain limits it is also necessary to mobilize the masses and fully follow the mass line.

Why is it that no mass movement should be started in this struggle? It is because historical experiences, when summed up, show us that it is suitable to launch a mass movement for some types of work, but not suitable for other types of work. Uncalled-for mass movements can bring harm and losses to the revolutionary cause. The stress that no mass movement should be started in this struggle is a correct principle based on summing up historical experience and lessons.

Therefore, in the current struggle to strike at the criminals who cause serious damage to the economy, we should mainly use the law as our weapon, follow criminal investigation procedures and act strictly according to party rules and regulations, government and military discipline, judicial procedures and the articles of the law. There is no need to start a mass movement characterized by mass exposing and denouncing and free airing of views.

Some comrades have asked: If no mass movement should be launched in this struggle, why is it necessary to fully follow the mass line? Isn't this a contradiction?

We think there is no contradiction because mass movement and mass line are two different concepts. A so-called mass movement refers to a massive action with direct participation of the broad masses within a certain period of time and on a rather extensive basis to carry out a certain task. The mass line means doing everything for the masses, relying on the masses in everything, from the masses and to the masses. This is our party's basic line, and the most fundamental working method. It is universally applicable at any time and for any kind of work. Speaking of the relationship between the two, mass movement is just one way to carry out the mass line, but not the only way. Those who think that not to launch a mass movement means not to take the mass line and that to take the mass line it is imperative to launch a mass movement are wrong.

For a long time, many comrades have become used to launching mass movements characterized by their terrific din and regarded it as the only way to follow the mass line. This is a lopsided view.

In the current struggle, we are not to launch mass movements, but we will stress taking the mass line. How should we keep to the right track? This indeed is a new problem requiring us to study and practice anew.

According to the guideline of the party Central Committee and the State Council, fully following the mass line applies mainly to big and important cases which are relatively complicated and which involve more people. In dealing with such cases, we should, within certain limits, mobilize the masses who know about the cases to expose and inform against the criminals. Some cases may also be subject to discussion by the masses who are directly concerned, so that we may get their opinions, handle the cases fairly and, at the same time, educate the masses.

Now, our party's policies are clear-cut, and the line between right and wrong on major issues is very clear. So long as we firmly implement the party's principles and policies and pay attention to the means of struggle, we surely can deal steady, accurate and relentless blows at the criminals who cause serious damage to the economy and guarantee the sound progress of the struggle.

EDITORIAL URGES CATCHING UP WITH ADVANCED

[Text] Since the beginning of this year, many meetings of model workers, advanced collectives and advanced producers have been held one after another in the cities of Shanghai, Beijing, Tianjin, Guangzhou, Wuhan and so on; and in provinces and regions such as Hunan, Hebei, Shanxi, Nei Monggol, Henan, Shaanxi, Heilongjiang and so on. In the meantime, construction departments and the Ministries of Coal Industry, Posts and Telecommunications and Railways have also convened or are preparing to convene meetings of model workers or advanced producers. It is becoming the good and regular practice in various regions and departments to emulate and to catch up with the advanced.

A large number of advanced and model figures have emerged on various fronts in our country. Among them are Fu Changwang of the Baijiazhuang coal mine of the Xishan mining bureau in Shanxi Province; Chen Huojin, senior engineer of the Dalian shipyard; Hou Dewu, worker engineer of the Jilin chemical industry company; and Chang Binggui, Chen Aiwu and Cui Yao of Beijing. There are also some advanced collectives, such as the Beijing Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, the Handan No 2 construction company in Hebei Province, and so on. These advanced individuals and collectives are the most dynamic forces of all sectors. They are leading the way in the construction of our cause. All staffs and workers throughout the country must learn from the advanced and try to open up a new situation in the construction of the four modernizations.

As a rule, it is always a small number of relatively advanced producers who take the lead in adopting relatively advanced production techniques, and thus reach a certain relatively advanced level. And later, more and more people will learn their techniques and reach their level. In this way, the production level reached by a small number of people at the very beginning gradually becomes the production level of the whole society, and thus social production keeps developing. Our party attaches importance to the roles of advanced and model figures at all times. Comrade Mao Zedong praised the laboring heroes of the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border region as "leaders of the people." Comrade Liu Shaoqi commended advanced producers as "pioneers of mankind's economic development." In the 50's and 60's, our our country repeatedly held a "gathering of heroes" of model workers and advanced producers, and thus shaped the fine general mood of society in which people regarded being advanced as a glorious state. This general mood played an important role in pushing ahead with the achievement of the plan of the national economy and encouraging the masses of staff and workers to strive for success.

We must take a practical and realistic attitude toward the advanced. All advanced and model figures come from the masses. They have done a good job in leading the masses in a certain trade or a certain task in a certain area. Therefore, we should not portray these advanced and model figures as mysterious supermen whose achievements are unattainable. All advanced and model figures emerge from actual life, and are not products of "summation" by leading organs. Therefore, they should not be overpraised and their achievements should not be exaggerated. It is also wrong to attribute all the advanced deeds of many people to a certain individual, and irrationally establish the latter as an advanced model.

No advanced and model figure can be perfect. Anyone who has had an outstanding performance and has scored remarkable results in a certain field deserves commendation and to be set up as an example for others. However, we should never cover up the shortcomings of advanced and model figures. Everybody has shortcomings and we cannot wish them to be exceptional. It is a kind of metaphysical practice to only praise somebody's good deeds and hide his wrongdoings once he has become an advanced model.

We must take a correct attitude toward the advanced. We cannot demand that advanced and model figures be good in everything. As long as they are really outstanding in certain fields, we are bound to acknowledge their achievements and learn from them with an open mind. We should neither refuse to accept their achievements nor be nitpickers, nor be jealous of their talent. It is even wrong to totally repudiate their achievements by sticking to certain weaknesses of theirs, and improperly reproaching, censuring satirizing and attacking them. As the old saying goes: "An indolent person never braces himself up, while a jealous person always fears others bracing up." Without lofty ideals, and being content with things as they are, some people always obstruct others to work hard to achieve something because they themselves lack initiative. Such a mentality is precisely a manifestation of the small producer's backward ideology which has nothing in common with the proletariat's ideology. Failing to distinguish right from wrong and reversing honor and disgrace is a very unhealthy trend. The drive of emulating and catching up with the advanced will be obstructed as long as this unhealthy trend remains.

On the other hand, those advanced and model figures must correctly evaluate themselves. They must understand that they will achieve nothing without the efforts of the party and the help of the masses. A talented person can always find a rival. Therefore, everyone who has reached a high level should devote more effort to their work, make still further progress, and stand up to new tests under the new circumstances.

In carrying out the activities of emulating and catching up with the advanced, we must stress efficiency and get rid of formalistic practices. The effect of the activities of emulating and catching up with the advanced is mainly shown in the improvement of the people's political and ideological consciousness, the increase in economic returns, and the favorable general mood of society. Whether the drive is successful is not determined by the number of meetings held or by the number of people joining study tours. Learning advanced experiences must be integrated with the local actual circumstances; and mechanical copying must always be avoided. Furthermore, advanced experience must also be popularized at an opportune time and according to the local conditions.

In carrying out the activities of emulating and catching up with the advanced, we must give full play to the high aspiration of striving for progress. Those leading cadres must first have such a high aspiration. At present, quite a few comrades are lax and weak. Because they are not perceptive enough, they dare not support healthy trends nor check evil practices. The activities of emulating and catching up with the advanced can hardly be carried out as long as this situation remains. The leading cadres of various enterprises must strengthen political and ideological work and be adept at discovering advanced models and justly and forcefully support the latter. We must be politically concerned with those advanced and model figures, support them in their work and help them in their daily life. As for those backward units and people, we must strengthen education and do our best to transform them. All advanced and model figures must give full play to their creativity and do their jobs in an enterprising manner. We must have the ambition to catch up with and surpass the world's advanced level, and must be confident of improving our country's industrial and agricultural technological level. Starting from the present situation, we must strive for improving the economic returns and comprehensively fulfilling this year's state plan. We hope that various areas and various departments can thoroughly and extensively carry out the activities of emulating and catching up with the advanced, and thus continually open up a new situation for the four modernizations.

EDITORIAL URGES IMPROVING LOW-YIELD FARMLAND

[Editorial: "There Are Very Great Potentials for Improving Medium- and Low-Yield Farmland and Increasing Production"]

[Text] An urgent task for the Chinese people is to speed up the development of agriculture. The building of the "four modernizations" and the improvement of the people's material standard of living both require that agriculture provide more products, and first of all more grain. However, at present a problem is facing the development of China's agriculture, and that is that there is not much arable and reclaimable land and the potentials for increasing output of grain, cotton and so on by expanding the cultivated area are very limited. Although there is still more barren land in the country that can be reclaimed, this cannot be accomplished in a short time due to state financial and other limitations. In order to preserve the ecological balance, we will certainly not carry out any more stupid, indiscriminate land reclamation, tree-felling and burning of grass to plant grain.

To make rational use of the existing farmland in accordance with the national condition and improve the yield represents the main direction for attack in increasing output of agricultural products. There are big differences in yields on the existing farmland. One-third is high yield, one-third is medium yield and one-third is low yield.

High-yield land produces more than 1 ton of grain or 200-300 jin of ginned cotton per mu; and land with the lowest yields produces only a few score jin of grain or between 10 and 20 jin of ginned cotton per mu. The "minutes of the national rural work conference" circulated by the CCP Central Committee clearly pointed out: "Increasing output of grain and industrial crops depends mainly on changing the system of extensive cultivation, carrying out careful cultivation and intensive farming and improving the medium and low-yield farmland."

Medium and low-yield farmland accounts for the greater part of China's arable land. In 15 provinces (municipalities and autonomous regions) in north China, about 2/3 of the farmland [illegible] than 300 [illegible] the [illegible] China provinces [illegible] areas [illegible] where [illegible] are also very low. In the high-yield areas, too, there is some low-yield land whose yields are lower than the local average. So long as we work hard to rationally use and improve this land, we can achieve large increases in output in 1-2 years or 3-5 years. Some areas have already scored initial successes in this respect in recent years. Since the winter of 1979 Guangdong Province has carried out sustained improvements on low-yield land and achieved large production increases on 3.6 million mu of such land. In the past 3 years the 4 areas in northwestern Shandong, where output was low for a long time, have initially changed the situation of extensive cultivation and insufficient fertility and reaped successive bumper harvests of grain, cotton and oil-bearing crops. It is clear that in both north and south China and in paddy and dryland crop regions there are very great potentials for improving medium and low-yield farmland and increasing production. If we can increase grain yields by an average of 50-100 jin per mu on the country's 500-600 million mu of low-yield farmland, that will be a considerable figure!

In recent years, as we have been readjusting the national economy, we have reduced the investment in a number of large and medium agricultural capital construction projects, and temporarily slowed down the pace of transforming the production conditions, with the result that the peasants have been able to get their breath back. This was completely essential. However, we certainly cannot on this account misunderstand this as meaning that transforming the production conditions and improving medium and low-yielding farmland are not necessary. At present, certain places fail to attach sufficient importance to the work of improving medium and low-yield farmland and provide ineffective leadership over this work. Some just talk about its importance without implementing the work in a sound way. Some cadres hold that, since instituting the production responsibility systems, it is not easy to carry out this work, and so they have relaxed leadership over it. This is very wrong. It is true that some new situations and problems have arisen, that need study and solution, over the issue of how to carry out agricultural capital construction since the rural areas instituted the production responsibility systems, especially in areas practicing the systems of assigning land to each household in exchange for fixed levies and assigning full responsibilities. However, we can be sure on one point, and that is, the institution of production responsibility systems will not affect the work of improving low-yield farmland; instead, it has created unprecedentedly good conditions for this work. In the past, we scored some success in improving low-yield farmland. The problem lies in the fact that this work was not directly linked to the peasants' material interests. Some places went in for egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources and organized a "big noise" which wasted a lot of manpower and material without producing the proper results. Now, improving medium and low-yield farmland and raising yields have become the urgent demands of the peasants. We should precisely brace our spirits and actively provide guidance. So long as we hand the party policies over to the masses and rationally solve the question of burden and benefit, we will be able to make a success of this work.

Doing a good job in planning the improvement of medium and low-yield farmland is an important cardinal link in the gaining of the initiative by the leading organs.

It is necessary to conduct investigation and study, get a clear picture of how much medium- and low-yield land there is in each locality, the reasons for low yields, and the number of communes and brigades in difficulties where the people are poor and the soil thin, and so on, and map out plans on the basis of agricultural zoning and soil surveys. It is necessary to have both long-term plans and current specific arrangements; there must be both measures for curing the surface problems and a blueprint for dealing with their root problems. By persistently working in this way with plans and measures, doing a bit at a time, small victories can accumulate into major ones. The experiences of certain places tell us that it is also necessary to institute responsibility systems in improving medium- and low-yield farmland. Whatever type of responsibility system is practiced, the signing and fulfillment of contracts must help to encourage the peasants to take good care of the land and to voluntarily or collectively invest in agricultural capital construction.

The rural cadres, masses and science and technology workers have realized from many years of practice that in improving medium- and low-yield farmland it is necessary to switch from the past method of only carrying out water conservation construction to simultaneously paying attention to promoting soil conservation, improving the vegetation on the land, and bringing about a benignant ecological cycle. Hence, in improving medium- and low-yield farmland, it is necessary to base our efforts on the overall situation and carry out comprehensive harnessing of the mountains, waters, fields and forests. We must integrate China's traditional agricultural technology with modern science and technology, bring into play the role of the agrotechnical cadres, and strengthen technical guidance. We must promote a three-way alliance of leading cadres, agricultural technicians and the peasants and promote typical examples to lead everyone forward. We can always "get instant results" [li gan jian ying: 4539 4557 6015 1758] by promptly applying to the improvement of medium- and low-yield farmland the results of the surveys of agricultural resources and soil.

At present the state's finances are limited, and there will be no great increase in agricultural investment in the short term. In improving medium- and low-yield farmland, we must concentrate on small projects and projects run by the masses themselves. We must mainly rely on self-reliance and arduous struggle by the communes and brigades. We must teach the peasants to correctly handle the relationship between accumulation and consumption, and encourage them to invest the surplus cash they have accumulated in agricultural capital construction, so as to improve the production conditions. Of course, state support is also necessary, and in fact the state has continued to allocate some capital for this work in recent years despite its financial difficulties; many provinces, prefectures and counties have also invested some money in it from their local finances. This capital and material must be used where it is most needed and where it can produce the greatest economic returns.

While opening up the medium- and low-yield regions, we must by no means neglect the high-yield areas. These areas make great contributions to the state and shoulder the greater part of the task of producing grain, cotton, oil, sugar, tobacco and so on. We must encourage and support them to maintain high and stable yields and strive for further increases amid stability. With the high-yield areas continuing to produce high yields and the medium and low-yield areas catching up step by step, a new situation of improvement will appear in China's agricultural production.

NORTH CHINA PLAIN SYMPOSIUM HELD IN JINAN

Yao Yilin on Development

[Text] Jinan, June 27 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Yao Yilin has announced that the North China Plain has been listed as one of the country's regions enjoying priority in agricultural development. Addressing a symposium on North China Plain agricultural development on June 25, the vice-premier said that the 60 million U.S. dollars long-term interest-free loan from the World Bank will be used for the agricultural development projects on the plain.

The symposium, which opened on June 18, was attended by 300 experts in agriculture, forestry and meteorology from all parts of the country.

The vice-premier urged this loan be used wisely. The rest of the funds needed will be raised jointly by the state, local governments and communes and production brigades, the vice-premier said.

To speed up the agricultural development on the plain, he said, continued efforts should be made in the 1980s to build large shelter belts in the northern and western parts of the plain, construct more key water conservancy projects and increase the supply of chemical fertilizers, especially that of phosphate and potash which are lacking in the soil on this plain.

A faster development in agriculture on this plain will have greater impact on the growth of the national economy, the vice-premier noted.

He said that the state has over the past 32 years invested 24,000 million yuan RMB in the water conservancy projects to transform this once disaster-ridden plain into a major grain, cotton and soybeans producing center in China.

Vice-Premier Yao Yilin had made a special trip to the symposium to hear the opinions of the participating agricultural experts and engineers. The vice-premier was satisfied with what has been achieved in the scientific research in developing agriculture on the plain and urged the experts to help map out a sound overall development plan and make further efforts in their research in raising per-unit output of agricultural crops. "Agriculture must keep on developing and efforts be made to produce more and more grain and cash crops on the country's limited arable land," Vice-Premier Yao Yilin said.

Transforming Saline Fields

[Text] Jinan, June 29 (XINHUA) -- China has announced dramatic successes in transforming half the saline and alkaline fields on the Northern China Plain, a traditionally poverty-stricken area embracing five provinces. Farmland capital construction, an annual event in the past three decades involving millions of peasants, has helped raise per unit grain output 2.6 times on half of the 3.33 million hectares of saline and alkaline fields here. The area covered by this large-scale land transformation project -- 300,000 square kilometers south of the Yanshan Mountains, east of the Taihang Mountains and north of the Huaihe River -- encompasses the bulk of Hebei, Shandong and Henan Provinces and the northern parts of Anhui and Jiangsu.

Since national liberation in 1949, it was announced at a national academic forum on Northern China Plain agricultural development just concluded in Jinan, mass mobilizations launched each year to build projects diverting fresh water to rinse saline and alkaline content from the fields have become increasingly effective. The government has invested 24,000 million yuan (about 12,600 million U.S. dollars at the present rate) on the effort which, according to the forum, is vital to China's economic construction.

Salinity in land that has been transformed is reduced to less than 0.1 percent, up to international standards for arable land. Grain yield now average three tons per hectare -- in some individual cases more than 7.5 tons per hectare -- on land that has been improved. Before this transformation, the yield seldom exceeded 1.12 tons per hectare, about five times the amount of seeds sown.

Farm output for the entire Northern China Plain area averages 3.75 tons per hectare, the forum announced, indicating that the area has reached the nation's average level of agricultural development.

Inhabited by more than 100 million people — ten percent of the national total — the land is drained by the Yellow, Huaihe and Haihe Rivers, which used to be infamous for flooding and other disasters they caused people. Scientists attending the Jinan forum said the high water table underground and generally poor drainage caused salinity and alkalinity in the soil to come up to the surface, devastating farmland over large areas.

Work began shortly after liberation to build drainage canals within each of the three river systems, according to the forum. With the completion of the trunk canals in the 1960's, peasants were able to build drainage networks on their own farms while planting trees, improving the soil by applying more organic fertilizer and levelling the fields to facilitate irrigation and drainage and keep down salinity and alkalinity. In some places, saline and alkaline land was turned into paddy fields, complete with drainage and irrigation facilities.

Scientists spoke highly of the experience in transforming a 5,866-hectare area north of the Yellow River, in Shandong Province, enabling output of grain to shoot up to 4.87 tons per hectare from 1.35 tons per hectare in 1966.

Since 1966, peasants in the area have dug drainage ditches totalling 1,240 kilometers, ranging from one to 3.5 meters in depth. The drainage network is now reinforced by 1,050 pump wells designated to irrigate the fields and lower the water table.

About 80 percent of the saline land in northern Jiangsu — 416,650 hectares — has been transformed, yielding an average of 5.62 tons of grain per hectare. Since the completion in 1978 of a major project diverting water from the Yangtze River from southern Jiangsu to the north, peasants in the area have turned the bulk of the wheat and corn plots into rice paddies.

Central and provincial authorities have started 35 experimental centers in the Northern China Plain area, mainly for experience and demonstration.

Symposium Ends

[Text] Jinan, June 27 (XINHUA) — A ten-day symposium on the North China Plain agricultural development closed here today. The symposium worked out a number of constructive proposals to be submitted to the central authorities.

This was another important symposium following the 1979 and 1980 symposiums on the Northeast China Plain and loess plateau agricultural development.

Three hundred experts in agriculture, forestry, water conservancy, meteorology and other related disciplines, including 58 professors, researchers, senior agronomists and engineers, exchanged views on the development strategy for agriculture and other problems. Vice-Premier Yao Yilin and leading members from the State Planning Commission, the State Scientific and Technological Commission, and ministries concerned also attended the symposium.

It was the unanimous opinion that the North China Plain should be made China's major cotton and soybean producer while ensuring self-sufficiency in food grain. Soil experts proposed that more chemical fertilizers, particularly phosphate fertilizer, should be applied to improve the poor soil on the plain.

Water conservancy experts called for early arrangements for diverting water from the Yangtze River to the arid North China Plain. Forestry experts urged more shelter belts be built and interplantation of trees and crops be practised. They also suggested that more fruit trees be planted on the old course of the Yellow River.

RADIO CARRIES TALK ON BUILDING OF PLA NAVY

[Station talk "On Motherland's Coastal Defense"]

[Excerpt] You must know Mr Li Moan. In the past Mr Li Moan served as a member of the Kuomintang Central Committee, first vice commissioner of the Hunan-Hubei pacification commissioner's office and concurrently commander of the Changsha pacification district command. He is now residing in the United States.

In October 1981 he was invited to attend the commemoration of the 70th anniversary of the 1911 revolution. During his visit to the Yangtze River Bridge in Nanjin he paid special attention to the ships sailing on the river. He watched for a long time, but did not see any foreign warships there. He said with emotion: "The foreigners dare not bully the Chinese any more. The Chinese people should truly be proud and happy about this." Mr Li Moan's words were true.

Since the founding of new China, the people's government has formulated port rules and regulations in order to defend the sovereignty of the motherland and the national dignity. Since then, all foreign ships sailing on China's waters have been required to fly China's national flag atop their main masts, be inspected by Chinese customs officials at prescribed locations and enter China's ports under the direction of Chinese pilots. In a Chinese port, a foreign ship must strictly abide by China's port rules and regulations. Violators of these port rules and regulations are subject to punishment ranging from fines to expulsion, depending on the seriousness of the violation.

In addition, the people's government has stepped up harbor construction. Owing to its unremitting efforts, China's harbors have taken on an entirely new look and become scenes of prosperity. Today, China's major seaports such as Tianjin, Shanghai, Guangzhou, Dalian, Qinhuangdao, Qingdao and Zhanjiang have become centers of China's maritime economy as well as bases for defending the security of our great motherland.

Moreover, since the founding of new China, we have gradually built a powerful People's Navy. With the development of China's shipbuilding industry, the People's Navy has steadily grown in size and strength and is reliably defending the territorial waters of our motherland.At present the People's Navy is outfitted with modern surface ships designed and built in China, including minesweepers, escort vessels, landing craft, guided missile destroyers, torpedo boats, high-speed gunboats and guided missile boats. Moreover, it also has nuclear-powered submarines and a naval aviation force. The navy has built a complete naval operations system. When China was testing its carrier rockets in the South Pacific in May 1980, the People's Navy organized an escort consisting of more than 30 warships. This was the first time that China's warships left their wake on the rolling seas of the South Pacific. This made all Chinese people feel proud.

ECONOMIC CONTRACT LAW TO COME INTO FORCE 1 JULY

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (XINHUA) -- "The economic contract law of the People's Republic of China," adopted by the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, will come into force on 1 July 1982. The State Council recently has decided that the central and local industrial and commercial administrative departments at various levels will administer unified management of economic contracts.

The primary tasks of the industrial and commercial administrative departments in the management of economic contracts are to supervise and inspect the economic contracts signed between different departments and mediate and arbitrate disputes over the contracts between them; investigate illegal economic contracts and punish whoever is responsible for them; and supervise and inspect the economic contract management of various departments concerned.

In order to fulfill the task of managing economic contracts, the central administration of industry and commerce and the industrial and commercial administrative bureaus at various levels have strengthened the organs for contract management and fully staffed them with contract management personnel step by stop. The central administration also has compiled, printed and published 160,000 copies of materials concerning the study of "the economic contract law" for use by various localities in study and publicity. In May, it held a forum of relevant personnel from 20 major provinces, municipalities, prefectures and countries to specifically study how to implement the economic contract law.

In Shanghai and Tianjin, the municipal industrial and commercial administrative bureaus and the judicial bureaus organized lectures of various forms on the economic contract law. About 6,000 leading cadres of various levels and responsible persons of various industrial and mining enterprises listened to the lectures. In Shenyang municipality, more than 20 districts, bureaus and enterprises held cadre training classes. The Nankai ward industrial and commercial administrative bureau organized the management personnel of 314 neighborhood-run enterprises in the ward to study the economic contract law. These activities have fully paved the way for implementation of the economic contract law.

QUALITY CONTROL LECTURES HELD IN VARIOUS PLACES

[Text] The State Economic Commission and the Quality Control Society of China dispatched three teams to give rotational lectures on comprehensive quality control and to conduct investigations in various localities in six provinces in northwest, southwest and eastern China during the months of April and May this year. The teams were composed of scholars and workers specialized in quality control as well as leaders of various enterprises where quality control had been carried out comprehensively and successfully.

The mobile teams gave large-scale reports 31 times in 15 municipalities and prefectures in 6 provinces with total attendance reaching some 23,000. Investigations were conducted at 70 plants, consultations and diagnoses of plans were given and assistance was rendered to solve various actual problems encountered while promoting plans.

According to responses by cadres and masses in various localities where the roving teams visited, the rotational lectures served as an excellent forum for propaganda and education, for exchanges of experiences and for mutual development.

NINGXIA'S LI XUEZHI ATTENDS AGRICULTURAL MEETING

[Report: "Autonomous Region Convenes Agricultural Work Conference"]

[Text] Ningxia Autonomous Region convened a regional conference on agricultural work from 10 to 14 June. The conference conveyed the important instructions given by leading comrades of the central authorities on our region's agricultural production and construction, analyzed the situation in our region's agricultural production and construction, and studied recent conditions and problems. It called on leaders at all levels and farming, forestry, animal husbandry and water conservancy departments to strengthen leadership, work hard, be firmly mentally prepared to fight natural calamities and strive for bumper harvests and adopt effective measures to strive for this year's bumper agricultural harvests.

Li Xuezhi, Ma Xin and Ma Sizhong, leading comrades of the party and the government of the autonomous region, spoke at the conference. Autonomous regional people's government Vice Chairman Ma Tengai also attended the conference.

Leading comrades of the central authorities recently gave the following instructions on our region's agricultural production and construction: It is imperative to vigorously plant trees, build grasslands and plant shrubs; with the promotion of production, it will be easy for us to solve other problems. It is imperative to promote production. They also noted: The most important task in promoting agriculture is to plant trees, build grasslands and plant shrubs. This is also the most important capital construction project in bringing about an upswing in the economy of the Ningxia Autonomous Region of Hui nationality. Comrades who participated in the conference unanimously held that the instructions showed that leading comrades of the central authorities have paid kind attention to our region's agricultural production and construction, and that it is imperative to carry out the instructions.

The conference analyzed the 1982 situation on the agricultural front of this region and discussed urgent tasks concerning rural work and agricultural production and construction. The conference noted: The situation on the agricultural front of this region is good. There has been an increase in the region's sown area of summer grain crops as compared with last year. Summer and autumn crops in the irrigation zone built with water diverted from the Huang He are doing well. We have failed to fulfill the sowing plan for oil-bearing crops due to drought and frost. However, we have greatly increased the sown areas for all other industrial crops such as beet, Chinese wolfberry and leaf tobacco. With regard to forestry, we have overfulfilled the plan for planting trees all around, the voluntary tree-planting plan and the plan for growing seedlings. Although our animal husbandry has faced sustained drought, our sheep have maintained a high birth rate, we have maintained a high survival rate of lambs and preserved a large number of lambs, and our commune members have shown great enthusiasm for raising livestock and poultry. Our specialized households engaged in raising livestock and poultry and our key households engaged in raising livestock and poultry have increased from over 700 to more than 7,500 households. We have made new progress in building irrigation works and in irrigation management. We have also quickly and timely carried out the Huang He flood prevention work.

The following are our major existing problems in rural work and agricultural production and construction: Since we have just established the agricultural production responsibility system and it remains to be perfected, some cadres and commune members still have a misunderstanding of the responsibility system of assigning the land to each household in exchange for fixed levies. In the course of implementing the system, some assignments are too scattered and some tasks that should have been managed in a unified way have not been so managed.

For various reasons, some leaders at the basic level have become weak in leadership and some other leaders at the basic level have given up leadership and let things drift. In promoting agricultural production this year, we have frequently encountered natural disasters such as drought, low temperature, windstorm, frost and hailstones. As a result, agricultural crops in many large areas have been hit by these natural disasters. In particular, the sustained drought has brought about great difficulties and losses in mountain areas. The problems in building irrigation works and in irrigation management are: some mountain areas have demolished irrigation works; some communes and brigades in the irrigation zone built with water diverted from the Huang He do not have a unified management for irrigating their crops.

Although many trees have been planted this year, the tending and protection of trees has failed to keep abreast of requirements, and some trees have been gnawed or eaten by livestock. All these problems directly affect agricultural, forestry and animal husbandry production and construction. Carelessness and slackness will seriously imperil agricultural production. Hence we must at present resolutely overcome both blind optimism and pessimism and disappointment. We must teach the cadres and masses to realize the good situation and the favorable conditions and also to perceive the unfavorable factors and the difficulties. They should brace their spirits, go all out, seriously implement the "minutes of the national rural work conference," and perfect the various types of production responsibility system. It is essential to do everything possible to promote production in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, and diversification this year.

The weather this year is very abnormal. There may be lots of rain in the second half of the year, and there may also be cold spells and plant diseases and insect pests. We must therefore be prepared for the worst and work for the best results, strengthen field management, and strive for a bumper harvest. It is also necessary to do a good job in summer farmwork and in antiflood precautions. The mountain areas must unswervingly wage the struggle against drought and carry out self-salvation through production. A leading central comrade has called for planting trees, grass and shrubs. We must resolutely implement the instructions of the leading central comrade and be resolved to hurry to plant more and plant them well, so as to restore the vegetation. We must step up the tending and protection of trees and pastureland, set up responsibility systems and put them on a sound basis and also act in light of local conditions and make full use of our natural resources to promote new developments in diversification.

The meeting demanded that the leaders at all levels make all-round preparations with due consideration for the interests of all parties, grasp the present moment and also think of the long term, stress the key points and typical examples, perfect the agricultural production responsibility systems, put the cadre job responsibility systems on a sound basis, promptly solve the difficulties in actual work, and strive for an all-round bumper harvest this year.

Over 200 people attended the meeting, including commissioners, mayors and county heads responsible for agriculture in the prefectures (municipalities) and counties (districts) [parenthetical notations as published], directors of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry and water conservation bureaus, rural work cadres, and responsible comrade of the regional departments concerned.

SHAANXI FORUM ON ECONOMIC SITUATION LESSONS

[Report by Zhou Qianzheng [0719 6692 2793]: "Forum Convened by Industry and Communications Department of Provincial CCP Committee Puts Forward, After Discussion and Summation, Five Experiences in Conducting Education on the Economic Situation in Depth"]

[Text] In order to further deepen education on the economic situation, the industry and communications department of the provincial CCP committee recently convened a forum attended by responsible members of the propaganda branch of the industry and communications department and the basic construction department of Xian municipality and the province. They made serious studies and summarized five experiences they had learned in leadership work.

At the forum all the comrades agreed that propaganda education in the economic situation in the preceding period achieved some initial results in guiding staff and workers to have a correct understanding of the current economic situation, heightening their consciousness, enhanding their morale, buoying up their spirits and finally expediting production. The pressing problem at present is to further summarize experiences and to carry on the "education" in depth on the basis of extensive unfolding so as to win better results. After serious studies and discussion, comrades at the forum suggested that to carry on education in the economic situation in depth, they should start by paying attention to the following five problems:

1. Solve well the staff and workers' problems in ideology. The experiences of the Xian Municipal Industry and Communications Department and provincial textile industry department have shown that owing to their different circumstances, the different things they came into contact with and the different things they learned about, the mass of staff and workers would each observe things from different angles and their point of departure would vary as well. More often than not, they would merely see the individual and the part instead of the whole. As a result, this or that view or understanding would come about. Only by squarely facing these situations, understanding the feelings of staff and workers, studying the masses' talks and solving well the problems in ideology could one shoot the arrow at the right target and substantial results be obtained.

2. Grasp well several combinations. Departments of petroleum and chemicals, coal, machinery, electronics, railroads, architectural engineering, etc, have mainly grasped the following combinations: 1) education in the economic situation with the overall reorganization of enterprises; 2) education in the economic situation with education in raising economic effects; 3) education in the economic situation with education against corruption and taking strong measures against economic crimes; and 4) education in the economic situation with education in revolutionary traditions. Experience has proved that if the combinations are well put into practice, empty political preaching and the tedious job of accumulating figures will be done away with and thus education in the economic education would be deepened.

3. Aim at raising the socialist consciousness of staff and workers. Experiences of many regions, departments and enterprises have shown that the current education in the economic situation have played an important part in doing well the political work of the ideology of the "four upholdings." The basic aim has been to raise the socialist consciousness of staff and workers. Having made this clear, settling accounts and making comparisons are considered keys to solving logical problems, so that to settle accounts for the sake of settling accounts could be avoided.

4. Uphold seeking truth from facts. Many factories, mines and enterprises that have done well in education in the economic situation have maintained that in education in the economic situation, one should talk about the situation of the country as it was, and state the actual economic situation of the country. One should not only talk about the good situation but also the difficulties that one was faced with.

Staff and workers should be asked to be masters, contribute more, share the trouble of the country, work hard in production and solve the existing problems step by step through protracted hard struggle. The housing problem in some enterprises has been quite conspicuous. The leadership should present the economic situation of the enterprise to the masses of staff and workers as well as the plan for production development in the next 3 or 5 years and the plan for residence construction. At the same time they have pointed out that so long as production increases and the economic effect is good, the problem of house building will be solved as soon as possible. When the masses of staff and workers see that there is reason for hope and the prospect is promising, they will feel good and satisfied, their faith will grow stronger and their drive to increase production will be greater.

Finally, the common experience of various regions, departments, and factories, mines and enterprises is that the party committees have all put education in the ecomonic situation on the main agenda. They regard it as a significant matter and they are determined to grasp the "education" in depth and in detail and to reach for good results. At present, special work should be done to emphasize "in depth" and to make more efforts to raise the socialist consciousness of the staff and workers.

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO PRAISES WORK-STUDY PROGRAM

[Summary] Comrade Wang Enmao paid a visit on 22 June to the printing plant run by the No 4 secondary school of the Urumqi Railroad Bureau and praised the school's work-study program. "He hoped that schools of all types would vigorously promote work-study programs and strive to cultivate the students into laborers with socialist awareness and culture."

This printing plant was opened in 1978. Last year its output value was 180,000 yuan and it made a net of 40,000 yuan, thus providing capital for improving the school's teaching conditions.

Wang Enmao said: "The guiding principle that education should serve proletarian politics and be integrated with productive labor is correct. In the past too much stress was laid on productive labor, and this should be corrected. However it is also incorrect to neglect participation in productive labor. The orientation of launching work-study programs in schools is correct and must be vigorously popularized."

The Kirgiz nationality has a population of about 110,000 making up one percent of the region's total. They mainly live in the mountainous Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture in the western part of Xinjiang.

The Xinjiang people's broadcasting station now transmits programs in Uygur, Han, Kazak, Mongolian and Kirgiz, that is, more languages than in any other part of China.

[Editorial: "The China Card"]

[Text] It is difficult to understand the Reagan administration. The President, like his predecessor, seems determined to play Communist China against the Soviet Union. The result is a long string of broken promises. Mr. Reagan campaigned on a pledge to "carry out in its entirety the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act," and he promised to reestablish some sort of official government relations with the Republic of China.

Certainly Communist China is delighted to let the United States modernize its armed forces at American expense. One American commentator suggests that the problem with U.S. foreign policy is that Reagan really does not understand foreign policy. Even when Mr. Reagan gets good advice on China policy, he ignores it. In May, five former ambassadors to the Republic of China -- Karl Rankin (1950-58), Everett Drumright (1958-62) Jerauld Wright (1963-65) Walter McConaughy (1966-74) and Leonard Unger (1974-79) -- wrote to the President, urging him not to seek better relations with Red China at the expense of the Republic of China. Rankin wrote: "We are under no obligation to please a regime which remains avowed communist, which practically booted out our representative in 1949, killed and wounded thousands of American soldiers in Korea, and would make a deal with the Russians against us tomorrow if it suited their convenience."

Ambassador Drumright declared: "Handing over Taiwan to Red China would really amount to dumping one of the most successful experiments in east Asia and would also amount to giving up the equivalent of several aircraft carriers." Smith Hempstone, the commentator, emphasized: "These are the voices of diplomats who have spent years in Asia, men who need to punch no tickets because their careers are behind them. The President would do well to listen to them." It is sound advice. One of those who concurs is U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, who has consistently been a loyal friend of the Republic of China. The senator has a far better understanding of the China issue than does Mr. Reagan or any of those who advise him.

The greatest mistake the United States made was to believe Mao in 1949. American policy in Asia has been a continuing series of errors ever since. In the Republic of China we understand communism better. We know you trust Peiping at your own risk and we never believe their promises. The only sound China policy is to support the Republic of China to return to the mainland as the legal government of all of China. Senator Goldwater knows this, even if the Reagan administration does not. If additional evidence is needed, there is the recent case of an American citizen ousted from Red China on the excuse that she obtained the marriage regulations, which Peiping insists are state secrets.

[Editorial: "So-Called 'Shanghai Communique No 2' and the Taiwan Relations Act"]

[Text] According to reports from various sources, negotiations and preparations between the United States and the CCP for a so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" have now entered the final, decisive stage.

Although there have been no open and direct statements, there are indications that negotiations are being actively carried out in Peiping and Washington. On the one hand, talks and contacts of various kinds are going on between the United States and the CCP; on the other hand, necessary coordination is also being worked out between the departments concerned in the United States.

The so-called "Shanghai communique No 2," as its name implies, would be a supplement or revision of the "Shanghai Communique" signed in 1972. That "Shanghai Communique" was mainly designed to pave the way for the establishment of formal relations between the United States and the CCP. It was an attempt to reach a prior understanding on the principle for the settlement of certain major disputes. The so-called "Shanghai communique No. 2" is obviously intended as a further effort to deal with problems which have remained unsolved since the establishment of relations. For this purpose, the United States and the CCP have been negotiating continually in Washington and Peiping since October last year. In fact, Reagan's three letters to important CCP officials were still focused on the same problems. So, the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2 is not only a continuation of the original "Shanghai Communique," but a summing up of U.S.-CCP negotiations since last October and a formalization and embodiment of Reagan's three letters. Both the original "Shanghai Communique" and the "Shanghai communique No 2" now being planned are deliberately aimed at dealing with the "Taiwan issue," that is, the relations between the United States and the Republic of China. Before establishing diplomatic relations with the CCP, the United States had formal diplomatic relations and a long-standing friendship as allies with the Republic of China. Therefore, when the United States and the CCP wanted to establish formal relations, they could not ignore the existence of the Republic of China, nor could they ignore the longstanding ties between the United States and the Republic of China. This is why the "Shanghai Communique" is full of ambiguous words and phrases, each side making its own statements. Then, the United States established diplomatic relations with the CCP and severed formal diplomatic relations with the Republic of China. But it has still maintained very close substantive relations with the Republic of China. The legal basis for these substantive relations is the "Taiwan Relations Act" adopted by the U.S. Congress. Under the act, the United States can not only continue to maintain close economic, cultural and social relations with the Republic of China and supply the latter with necessary defense weapons, but can, based on its President's understanding and judgment, take necessary measures to defend the freedom and security of the people in Taiwan. Therefore, the main target the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" must deal with undoubtedly is the "Taiwan Relations Act."

Until recently, people could not be sure what the on-going secret talks between the United States and the CCP were primarily about and what the contents of the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" would be. However, with the 20 June report by Baker, majority leader of the U.S. Senate, on his visit to mainland China, it became clear that all the talks have been directed against the "Taiwan Relations Act." In other words, although it appears that the secret talks between the United States and the CCP since last October have been focused on the arms sales issue and that the CCP is trying to force the United States to reduce and eventually stop its weapons supplies to Taiwan, in fact, the arms sales issue is merely a pretext of means used by the CCP for the ultimate purpose of forcing the United States to revise or annul the "Taiwan Relations Act," which is the basis for the arms sale. So, the real purpose of the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" is to circumvent objections from the U.S. Congress by beating around the bush and to replace the "Taiwan Relations Act" by devious means.

However, the question is whether the "Taiwan Relations Act" can be easily replaced by the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2." Can the "Taiwan Relations Act" be easily revised or annulled? On this question, the CCP is now mounting a fierce attack on the United States with a specious argument, attempting to force the United States to yield to its demands. However, if the leaders in the U.S. Government and Congress give the matter some thought, they will know that the CCP's argument is really not worth refuting.

For example, the CCP asked Baker face to face: "Could the United States tolerate a Hawaiian relations act which the CCP could institute under similar circumstances?" We don't know whether Baker replied to that question then and there, nor do we know whether the U.S. government intends to reply. In fact, the question is sheer nonsense. Most signficantly, Taiwan is different from Hawaii, and the Government of the Republic of China in Taiwan is different from the Hawaiian state government. The Hawaiian state government has never exercised sovereignty over the entire United States and has never had diplomatic ties and relations of alliance with the CCP. No country has ever recognized Hawaii as an independent country. How can it be compared with the Government of the Republic of China, and with the relations between China and the United States? What basis could the CCP have in drawing up a Hawaiian relations act?

Therefore, even though it seems that the "Shanghai communique No 2" is on the verge of making its appearance and that Sino-U.S. relations are about to face another shock, we feel that we can still fight back jointly with those of insight in the U.S. Congress and keep the "Taiwan Relations Act" intact.

[Text] Taipei, June 28 (CNA) -- The Cabinet said Sunday public officials of the Republic of China are not allowed to attend the annual meeting of the "Federation of Taiwanese Associations" because that organization has come under the control of the outlawed Taiwan independence movement.

The Cabinet made the announcement in reply to the interpellation of six members of the legislative Yuan, who said some parliamentarians plan to attend the federation's annual convention in the United States.

The federation has reportedly been seized by the "Taiwan Independence League," a group calling for overthrow of the existing government by illegal means and responsible for many subversive and terrorist activities in this country, the Cabinet said. Noting that the league has also been branded by the State of California as a terrorist group, the Cabinet said no one holding public post in the Republic of China shall be allowed to attend its meeting. Those who defy the order shall be dealt with accordingly, it warned.

Meanwhile, four non-partisan members of the Legislative Yuan and Control Yuan will leave for the U.S. Monday as guests of a private association of Chinese professors.

Legislator Kang Ning-hsiang, speaking for the group, said they have not received any invitation from the federation, but he declined to rule out the possibility of attending its meeting if invited.

Two other nonpartisan parliamentarians are reportedly seeking exit permits to attend a meeting of the federation. This however, cannot be confirmed.

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu [2457 0689 3768]: "Some Beijing Moves on the Eve of '1 July'"]

[Text] Meetings From Beijing to Guangzhou

In 3 days it will be the 61st anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Communist Party. In the past few days, there have been reports from Beijing to Guangzhou on relevant activities. In Beinjing, the Organization Department of the CCP Central Committee recently called a work forum on the reorganization of basic-level party organizations. Responsible persons representing 11 provinces and municipalities attended the meeting. These provinces and municipalities represent almost a third of the nation's basic-level party organizations. In Guangzhou the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee called a forum of representatives of veteran party members in the countryside. What these veteran party members long committed to rural work also talked about was how to strengthen the reorganization and the buildup of basic-level organizations.

Judging from these two reports, the business of reorganizing basic-level party organizations in an overall manner and especially reorganizing rural basic-level party organizations will be started on a national scale. This is an important task on which the Chinese Communist Party will concentrate forces to tackle at this time.

40 Million Party Members and 2 Million Basic-Level Organizations

The Chinese Communist Party now has over 39 million party members. This figure was announced recently, and is several million higher than last year. To put things more simply, we can say that it is a party with 40 million members. Given a party membership of 40 million, there are a total of over 2 million basic-level organizations. Basic-level organizations are regarded as cells in the organism of the party. If every cell is full of life and vigor, there is a reliable guarantee for the health of the whole organism. Onherwise, there will be an adverse effect on the organism.

Therefore, the soundness of basic-level organizations has a great bearing on the whole party. After 10 years of turmoil, the Chinese Communist Party is again seeking reorganization. In the past 2 years, the line and general and specific policies have been put in order. The leadership organization of the CCP Central Committee has also been reorganized. At present, the question is how to make these 2 million-odd basic-level organizations play their proper role in the new era under the new situation.

Three Unfavorable Phenomea

In analyzing these 2 million-odd basic-level organizations, the RENMIN RIBAO commentator has taken a one-divides-into-two approach. He holds that the great majority of basic-level organizations are capable of acting according to policy and unifying and leading the masses in a struggle for the building of a modern and powerful socialist country. But on the other hand, there are also some basic-level organizations marked by the following three phenomena:

1. Being soft and weak and lacking in fighting power.

2. Being in a paralyzed or semiparalyzed state.

3. Being in an even worse state; these basic-level organizations have degenerated under the attack of bourgeois sugar-coated bullets.

The commentator holds that these phenomena have appeared "due to serious sabotage by Lin Biao and the 'gang of four' and due to hackneyed capitalist thinking and the corrosive effects and influence of remnant feudalist ideas, coupled with certain defects in our work."

The Party Must Control the Party

In fact, experiments with the reorganization of basic-level organizations have been conducted in various areas and some experiences have been gained. Most of the Chinese population is located in the countryside. There are more basic-level organizations in the countryside. Therefore, Guangdong Province has counted on veteran party members long committed to work in the countryside and has cited them as examples, urging young party members to learn from them and serve the people wholeheartedly. Beijing has again suggested that the party control the party. Strengthening the reorganization and buildup of basic-level organizations is an important aspect of the effort to make the party control the party. Those basic-level organizations that have become paralyzed or decayed can never be left untended or taken for granted.

An Important Meeting Likely To Be Afoot in Beijing

Prime Minister Dominic Mintoff of Malta flew back to Beijing from Dalian yesterday. This is a new move. After Mintoff arrived in Beijing last Thursday, he immediately flew on to Dalian. As far as protocol was concerned, this was a very unusual arrangement. This has inevitably made people think that an important meeting might have been in progress in Beijing before the arrival of "1 July." This made reception of the guest impossible. Mintoff has again returned to Beijing to visit and hold talks. Probably those high-ranking officials in Beijing have now become free to receive the guest.

INDONESIAN DIPLOMAT'S SPEECH TERMED 'ABSURD'

[Editorial: "Comment on the Indonesian Diplomat's Absurdities"]

[Text] The three parties that have been resisting Vietnam in Kampuchea have reached an agreement to make joint preparations for forming a united government in order to resist Vietnamese aggression. At this time, to the surprise of the people, an Indonesian diplomat published a speech stating that the chief threat in Southeast Asia comes from China. Calm study and discussion will merely prove what few facts this Indonesian diplomat has used in making this charge against China.

Is it because of the huge population in China that China will expand abroad and bring about a "yellow peril?" This view was once in vogue in Europe where people saw the Chinese as the descendants of Genghis Khan and thought that one day in the future the Chinese would carry out expansionism. However, this was because of their ignorance of history. In fact, China was a victim of Genghis Khan's invasion when he conquered Europe and Asia in the manner of a strong wind scattering the last clouds. As for the huge population, it has never been a cause of aggression. Otherwise, how can we explain the fact that the United Kingdom for a time dominated the world? Moreover, how can we explain the aggressive activities of the Empire of Persia and the Roman Empire?

Is it because China has been implementing a socialist system and is morally connected with the communist parties in other countries that China wants to "export revolution?" This is misunderstanding and a distortion of the communist system and its ideology. The revolution in any country cannot be achieved by force from abroad. The internal cause is the basis from which a change in something originates. A revolution depends on the awareness of the people in the country and no country can take the role of the people of another country into their own hands. Communists always hold that they will replace capitalism with communism throughout the world.

However, regarding the relations between different countries, they always hold that they should depend only on peaceful competition to prove the superiority of communism and thus arouse the awareness of the people of other countries.

The task facing the Chinese people at present is to build a modern China with highly developed material and spiritual civilizations. This demands the persistent efforts of generations of Chinese people. In order to fulfill this task, China needs to improve its leadership, readjust its economy, train personnel at home, and attract capital, science and technology from abroad. From the perspective of foreign policies, in order to achieve this, China wants to create sustained peaceful international surroundings so as to keep the construction in China free from interference from abroad. Furthermore, China clearly understands that since the Southeast Asian countries broke away from the fetters of colonialism, they have already established stable state power, and that the major task for these countries at present is to eliminate the economic traces of colonialism and reconstruct their national economies. Therefore, China sees nothing that calls for the "export of revolution" in the situation.

Last year Chinese leaders visited some ASEAN countries and said during the visits that China is morally connected with the communist parties in other countries, but it does not interfere in other parties' policiy decisions nor in the measures of other countries' governments related to their communist parties. China will consistently honor these words. The facts have clearly shown that China has not established any military bases in other countries nor deployed any troops abroad. How can China be a threat to other countries?

What draws people's attention is the illegal occupation of the four Japanese northern islands by the Soviet Union, the military bases that the Soviet Union is establishing in Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay and Port Bang Ton, the increasing patrol of its warships across the Strait of Malacca and its more undisguised activities of instigating Vietnam to invade Kampuchea and the border area of Thailand and supporting Vietnam in establishing an empire of Indochina. Does Indonesia turn a blind eye to all this? As for the United States, it has deployed its troops in South Korea and established a military base in Subic Bay in the Philippines. Does Indonesia also turn a blind eye to this fact?

No people of insight will approve such absurd allegations about the threat of China when we are faced with the unscrupulous aggressive activities of Vietnam. We must realize that this confusion of rights and wrongs will muddle people's understanding of the danger of the aggressive activities of Vietnam and sow discord and undermine the international unity in opposing the Soviet Union and resisting Vietnam. Therefore, we should refute these absurd allegations and clarify the facts.

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang this afternoon met with Rafael M. Salas, executive director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities [UNFPA], and Nafis Sadik, assistant executive director of UNFPA.

He extended a welcome to the two UNFPA officials for coming to China to observe the opening of China's third national census today.

Premier Zhao said that the current census in such a populous country is a big event not only for China, but for the world's population and development. He said that the population problem is largely a problem of the developing countries and is closely related to their social and economic development.

Salas and the premier discussed future world population trends. Zhao said that China would strive to control its population growth so as not to bring pressure to the world population problem.

After observing census activities this morning, Salas said the program was well organized and that people appeared eager to participate.

Premier Zhao said that the current census would achieve expected results. He thanked Salas and the UNFPA for their help in the census.

Zhao said that the Chinese Government was satisfied with the good cooperation with the UNFPA since China became a member of the UNFPA in 1978 and said he supported its activities. He said he hoped that China and the UNFPA would further exchange experience and work together for a solution to the world population problem.

Present on the occasion were Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Li Chengrui, deputy head of the census leading group under the State Council. Also present was Nessim Shallon, coordinator of operational activities for development of the UN system in China.

[Article by Gong Weixin [7895 4850 2450] and Chen Peiyan [7115 0160 1031]: "Review of and Prospects for U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Talks"]

[Text] Although the United States and the Soviet Union have signed a number of agreements after fierce disputes and repeated bargaining in Strategic Arms Limitation Talks in the past 10 years and more, this has had no effect on their nuclear race. This time, as the two sides resume talks, their plans show marked differences and their antagonism has sharpened. There is no doubt that this argument will go on for a long time.

The United States and the Soviet Union opened formal talks on reducing strategic arms in Geneva on 29 June. This has attracted world attention.

The United States and the Soviet Union conducted the first and second stages of strategic arms talks from 1969 to 1979. The talks now opening in Geneva are actually a continuation of the talks the two sides held for more than 10 years. In the first stage of talks from 17 November 1969 to 27 May 1972, the representatives of the 2 sides held 123 meetings. After fierce bargaining, they finally signed a provisional agreement on certain measures for limiting offensive strategic arms.

This provisional agreement was scheduled to last 5 years. It froze the number of land-based ICBM's of both sides at the level as of 1 July 1972 -- that is, the Soviet Union had 1,618 and the United States 1,054 -- and froze the number of submarine-launched missiles and missile-carrying submarines, including those under construction, at the level as of 26 May 1972 -- that is, the Soviet Union had 950 such missiles and 62 submarines while the United States had 750 missiles and 44 submarines. The agreement made no provision regarding limitations on strategic bombers. This froze a further increase in numbers at a time when both sides had already achieved "overkill" in offensive strategic weapons, and its effect was to shift the nuclear race onto the track of focusing on improving weapons quality. As far as the Soviet Union was concerned, the provisional agreement helped it to maintain numerical superiority over the United States in offensive strategic weapons and to concentrate efforts on catching up with the United States in quality. As far as the United States was concerned, since it had at the time actually halted any further increase in the number of its offensive strategic weapons, the provisional agreement also obviously accorded with U.S. interests in limiting increases in Soviet offensive strategic weapons, especially the giant SS-9; and at that time the superior quality of U.S. weapons was enough to offset the Soviet superiority in quantity. The provisional agreement did not touch the nuclear arsenals of the two sides, but simply laid down rules for the nuclear race in the future. Apart from that, as the United States and the Soviet Union both felt at that time that anti-missile defense systems were tremendously expensive and of doubtful effectiveness, neither side was prepared to develop them in quantity. They then agreed on a "pact on limiting antimissile defense systems," by which each side maintained two such systems.

The United States and the Soviet Union began the second stage of the talks in Geneva on 21 November 1972. These talks lasted 7 years, and some 300 plenary meetings were held. Finally, on 18 June 1979, Carter and Brezhnev signed SALT II in Vienna. This treaty would remain effective until 1985. It stipulated the total number of strategic weapons of each side as 2,250, including 1,320 MIRV carriers. In common with the provisional agreement, the treaty still only placed limitations on quantity, not on quality; moreover, the number of MIRV's was higher than each side possessed at the time. Thus, some leeway was left for further increasing their numbers.

After the signing of SALT II, there was a strong reaction within the United States. Many senators expressed doubts over whether the treaty benefited the United States. A number of U.S. military strategists pointed out that the treaty held the following disadvantages for the United States: It permitted the Soviet Union to deploy 308 heavy missiles whose destructive power exceeded that of all existing U.S. ICBM's; the Soviet Backfire bomber did not count as a strategic weapon and was not subject to limitations, whereas U.S. aircraft-carrier cruise missiles were treated as MIRV strategic weapons and therefore limited; the total number of strategic weapons and the permitted number of MIRV's was too high and helped the Soviet Union to take advantage of its superiority in numbers and payloads of ICBM's, and also accorded with Soviet requirements in attempting to speed up the deployment of MIRV's. According to the U.S. Constitution, a treaty has to be ratified by a two-thirds Senate majority. Since the treaty could not muster the necessary supporting votes, Congress delayed debating and voting on the treaty during the Carter administration. After taking office, Reagan held that this treaty had "fatal flaws," and opposed its ratification by the Senate. At the same time the talks on strategic arms came to a halt, owing to tension in U.S.-Soviet relations.

The United States and the Soviet Union are now reopening the talks. Although SALT II has never come into effect, while major changes have also occurred in the situation, both sides stated not long ago that they would abide by the previous agreement and treaty. When Reagan first took office he declared that he wanted to completely renegotiate SALT II, but later his attitude changed somewhat, and he held that part of it could be accepted as a basis for new talks.

Although maintaining that SALT II cannot be ratified, Reagan has recently stated on many occasions that the relevant provisions of the treaty will actually be observed until the United States and the Soviet Union conclude a new treaty through negotiations. Although these new talks are not being called SALT III, they are in fact a continuation of the talks of the past, and even the delegates to the talks are the same old adversaries at the negotiating table.

Neither the first nor the second stages of talks on limiting strategic nuclear arms, nor the new talks now being held in Geneva, display any sincerity on the part of the United States or the Soviet Union for nuclear disarmament. It is just a struggle by both sides, under the burden of the nuclear arms race, to try to impose limits on their opponent while developing their own arsenal and at the same time lighten their economic difficulties in some degree. At present, as in previous negotiations, the United States and Soviet Union, both acting according to their own interests, have put forward diametrically opposed schemes. The U.S. scheme calls for reducing strategic arms in two stages. In the first stage the focus is on reducing missiles and missile systems "that are most prone to cause instability," and to reduce the missiles and warheads of both sides by one-third. The second stage would stipulate a "maximum equal limitation" on other component parts of strategic arms, which would include reducing the missile payload of both sides to a level below the current U.S. level. Obviously the U.S. scheme is based on the Soviet superiority in strategic arms; it stresses the imbalance of forces and aims at achieving parity by reducing Soviet superiority, while at the same time maintaining U.S. nuclear technological superiority. While rejecting the U.S. plan, the Soviet Union has put forward a proposal for a so-called "immediate freeze" on the strategic arms of both sides, and then begin talks on reductions. The Soviet Union holds that although the strategic arms makeup of both sides differs, "parity already exists," and no reduction can affect this parity. The Soviet Union attempts to freeze the status quo in order to maintain its superiority over the United States in certain fields of strategic arms, and also to cancel the plan that the United States is now implementing to develop strategic arms modernization on a large scale.

Since the plans of the two sides are markedly different, and their standpoints are antagonistic, there are certain to be fierce disputes at these new talks. During the talks both sides will be continually changing their plans and playing new tricks. As in the past, the mood will at times be tense and at other times relaxed, and it will be a lengthy business.

[Article by editorial department: "Three Basic Points in China's Foreign Policy"]

[Text] During his talk with Guinea-Bissau Head of State Vieira on 19 April, Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: China's foreign policy can be summed up in three sentences: strengthen unity and cooperation with the Third World countries; oppose hegemonism; and preserve world peace.

These three basic points in China's foreign policy are precisely based on Chairman Mao Zedong's theory on the division into three worlds. The correct strategy of division into three worlds and the important idea of never seeking hegemony will remain the guiding ideology for our country's foreign policy in the future.

The first basic point is China's unity and cooperation with the countries of the Third World and its steadfastness in standing together with them.

The forces of the Third World have flourished greatly since World War II. Now some 120 -- 70 percent -- of the 160 independent countries on earth belong to the Third World. The population of these countries exceeds that of the superpowers, while their area is more extensive and their resources are more abundant. So long as the Third World can truly unite, its strength will certainly exceed that of the superpowers, and the two superpowers will not succeed in dominating the world and doing whatever they like. The expansion and aggression of the superpowers can also be thwarted.

China herself is also a Third World country and will always belong to the Third World. Common experiences, interests and struggles link our country with the Third World countries. We resolutely support the struggles of the Third World countries against imperialism, colonialism, hegemonism and racial discrimination, and support the just struggles of the people of all countries. We actively develop economic and technical cooperation with the Third World countries according to our strength and feasibility. This type of "cooperation between South and South" is very good and has broad prospects. We wish to work together with the developing countries of the Third World to change the unfair and irrational old world economic order and establish a new international economic order. We support the proposals of the group of 77 on establishing a new international economic order.

Look around at the world; how did the situation of ceaseless turmoil come about? An investigation of its source shows that it was caused by the rivalry for world hegemony between the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States. The United States is on the defensive and the Soviet Union on the offensive in this rivalry. The Soviet Union carried out a military occupation of Czechoslovakia at the end of the 1960's; in particular, 2 years ago it launched aggression against Afghanistan and also supported Vietnam in invading and occupying Kampuchea; it has also carried out expansionist activities in the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf and other parts of the world. The main threat to world peace thus comes from the Soviet Union.

China lays particular emphasis on opposition to Soviet hegemonism, and at the same time she also opposes U.S. hegemonism. The foreign policy pursued by China is principled and means acting independently and keeping the initiative in her own hands. As everyone knows, the United States has consistently supported the racist regime in South Africa, and stubbornly supports Irael in the Middle East, thus being antagonistic toward the African and Arab peoples. The United States supports the reactionary forces in Latin America and opposes the local nationalist and democratic movements there. The United States refuses to withdraw its troops from South Korea and hampers the peaceful reunification of Korea. As regards China, the United States is still selling arms to Taiwan and violating our country's sovereignty. We resolutely oppose the pursuit of hegemonism by anyone in any place. We consistently support all countries endangered by hegemonism.

The third basic point is preservation of world peace.

The aim of China's foreign policy is to preserve world peace. China faces a tremendous task in carrying out its four modernizations drive and improving the living standards of its people. We need an international environment of peace for a long time. The preservation of world peace also accords with the common interests of the people of all countries. Of course, whether or not world peace can be preserved is determined not by people's subjective desires but by the struggles of the peoples. We must strengthen unity and cooperation with the Third World countries and work together with all countries and peoples that uphold justice in order to oppose the aggression and expansion of the superpowers and preserve world peace.

The success of China's revolution and construction is inseparable from the support of the peoples of the world. China's future is closely linked to the bright future of the world. In international affairs, we must unswervingly implement our government's foreign policy and make contributions to world peace and friendship among all peoples.

SPOKESMAN TAKES ISSUE WITH U.S. DRUG REPORT

[Text] Washington, July 1 (XINHUA) -- The spokesman of the Chinese Embassy in the United States today made clarifications in reference to reports by the NEWSWEEK magazine and other publications that methaqualone smuggled into the United States from some countries allegedly originates from China.

The spokesman said: "China's export of a certain amount of methaqualone is a sale of a medicine through normal trade channels which fully conforms to international practice. China has nothing to do whatsoever with the dealings of those international drug traffickers who convert methaqualone into quaalude and then smuggle it into the United States. Chinese law clearly stipulates that abusive use and trade of drugs are prohibited, and it has been firmly observed. Any unwarranted accusations against China in this respect must resolutely be rejected."

INTEREST RATES VIEWED AS KEY TO U.S. ECONOMY

[Article by Gu Jin [6253 3160]: "High Interest Rates — An Obstacle to U.S. Economic Recovery"]

[Text] The United States has placed its hopes for an economic recovery on the large-scale tax reduction carried out by the Reagan administration. The starting point for the Reagan administration in reviving the U.S. economy is to encourage capitalists to expand production. However, high interest rates have made enterprises completely lifeless. It is obvious that the reduction of interest rates is the crux of the matter. If the problem of interest rates remains unsolved, the U.S. economy will continue to stagnate during the second half of the year.

An important day for the Reagan administration in carrying out its large-scale tax reduction plan is 1 July. With this day approaching, Washington has been filled with an optimistic atmosphere. Regan, the treasury secretary, and Dederick, chief economist at the Department of Commerce, have forecast a U.S. economic recovery in the second half of the year.

It is not at all strange that officials in Washington have placed their hopes for the U.S. economic recovery on the tax reduction effective 1 July. According to the theories of supply-side economics, a tax reduction will greatly arouse people's enthusiasm for work and savings. It is said that as long as the amount of bank savings deposits increases, enterprises will be provided with sufficient funds to expand their factory buildings and facilities and employ more workers. The great increase in supply will bring about a fully prosperous economy. It is also said that U.S. taxpayers will receive benefits from the Reagan administration's tax reduction amounting to more than $33 billion. Apart from that, the U.S. social security fees will be raised by $12 billion during the second half of the year. After a blood transfusion of $45 billion to enliven the market, the economy will certainly improve. Kennedy's tax reduction plan did play a great role! This is the background for the optimistic views boldly expressed by the officials of the U.S. Government in recent days.

However, one area which gives one much food for thought are some unfavorable factors in the U.S. economy which will contribute to the complete failure of this tax reduction plan.

Comparing the present crisis with the previous crises of the United States before the war, we have discovered two great differences. First, the drop in the inflation rate has never been so drastic. We all know that the U.S. inflation rate in the past few years was in double-digit figures. It dropped to 2.4 percent last April. Such changes are large enough. Second, during the period of crisis, interest rates exceeded 16.5 percent for a long time. This was unprecedented. Due to the drastic drop in the inflation rate, various commodities were sold at lower-than-expected prices.

This has caused major losses to many enterprises which usually survive price increases. They fell into dire straits and were unable to raise funds because of the rising interest rates during this period of crisis. The U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT of 3 May explicitly pointed out: "The present bankruptcy rate of the U.S. enterprises is a record high over the past 21 years." It added: A weak economy, poor profits and torturing interest rates that the "catastrophe for enterprises will continue."

The starting point for the Reagan administration brain trust in supply-side economics for reviving the U.S. economy is to provide capitalists with sufficient funds so that they can expand their production. However, high interest rates have "thrown the enterprises into a state of lifelessness." Therefore, if the problem of high interest rates remains unsolved, the so-called prosperity in the second half of the year is only empty talk.

Indeed, the question of whether it is possible for interest rates to drop in the future has become a factor in determining the success or failure of President Reagan's economic policy. As interest rates are under the control of the chairman of the U.S. central bank (that is, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board), Paul A. Volcker, then with the approach of 1 July and the tax reduction, people in the Washington political circles have also intensified their criticism of the Fed for its inability to reduce interest rates. The news that Volcker has been forced to resign has circulated fast.

However, the reason for the continued high interest rates in the U.S. money market is not so much the responsibility of the Fed as it is the responsibility of the federal government for its huge deficit. The 21 June issue of the U.S. BUSINESS WEEK pointed out that in the next 6 months, from July to December, the U.S. Treasury Department will raise an enormous sum of $90 billion from the money market to make up for the deficit. The need for this enormous fund has become a chief factor in the tight market credit and has made it impossible for interest rates to drop.

Current U.S. interest rates have indeed taken a slight turn for the better. In the 6 month from October of last year to March this year, the GNP dropped at the rate of 4 percent annually but it has since picked up slightly since the second quarter of this year. The sharp drop in the inflation rate has also contributed to the increase in the purchasing power of the public. First, the turnover from retail trade has markedly increased. Second, housing construction, sales of cars, orders for consumer durables and other departments hard hit in the crisis picked up to a certain extent in May. Furthermore, the enterprise circles have gradually completed their work for disposing of overstocked goods. All this means that the U.S. economy has already passed the lowest point in the crisis and is slowly turning up. It is precisely this situation that has prompted Washington officials to place high hopes on the results of the Reagan administration's tax reduction plan and at the same time has greatly intensified their criticism of Volcker for his inability to reduce interest rates.

As a matter of fact, many U.S. publications pointed out a short time ago that neither reduction nor increase in the growth rate of the money supply can prevent interest rates from rising. Every major increase in the money supply invariably gives rise to the people's fear of the possibility of intensified inflation and thus stimulates interest rate increases. Every slowing down in the money supply also gives rise to the short supply of monetary credits, resulting in the rise of the interest rate, too.

It appears that the key to the drop in interest rates lies in the reduction of the huge federal budget deficit of the Reagan administration. However, the reason for the huge deficit in the federal budget is also inseparable from the large-scale tax reduction carried out by the Reagan administration.

Owing to the difficulty in solving the interest rate issue, the U.S. economy will still stagnate in the second half of this year. This is the view of most economists in the United States.

MOSCOW SAID ANGRY OVER KAMPUCHEA COALITION

["Commentary: Moscow Hot With Rage -- by correspondent Wang Chongjie" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, June 30 (XINHUA) -- The establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea by the three Kampuchean resistance forces clearly runs against the will of Moscow. Therefore, the Soviet press, apart from heaping abuses on the Kampuchean patriotic forces and spreading anti-China slanders, has poured out a spate of anger against the ASEAN states.

IZVESTIYA in an article today expressed "regret" and "profound anxiety" over ASEAN's solemn stand on the Kampuchean problem. The article slandered the ASEAN states as following an aggressive and provocative policy and "undermining the foundation for a practicable solution to the Southeast Asian problem."

The latest issue of the weekly MOSCOW NEWS also charged the ASEAN states' support to the formation of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government as deviating from "the orientation of turning Southeast Asia into a zone of peace."

The Soviet Union supports the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea while the ASEAN nations are opposed to it. So, who after all is interfering in the internal affairs of a sovereign country, flagrantly violating the elementary principles of international law, pursuing a policy of aggression and provocation and undermining the basis for a practical settlement of the Southeast Asian issue?

The ASEAN nations support the formation of a tripartite coalition government of Kampuchean patriotic forces and demand the immediate and complete withdrawal of the Vietnamese occupation troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the relevant U.N. resolutions while the Soviet Union encourages Vietnam's continued military occupation of Kampuchea. So, who is going against the direction of making Southeast Asia a peace zone?

It is a matter of course that Democratic Kampuchea should continue to retain its seat in the United Nations in the light of the U.N. Charter and norms governing international relations. But the Vietnamese aggressors and Moscow, their behind-the-scenes backer, demand that other countries recognize the Heng Samrin regime they fostered, and try to put it into the United Nations. What is this if not a flagrant act of trampling upon the U.N. Charter and norms governing international relations, an attempt to legalize the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea?

It appears that Moscow is out of its senses. It is none other than Moscow itself that has been backing Vietnam in its aggression, and threatening the peace and stability in Southeast Asia. Nevertheless, turning black into white, it heaps abuse on the ASEAN countries and exerts pressure on them, only to have its own scheme backfired.

The development of the situation in Southeast Asia shows once again that aggression and support for aggression are unpopular, while anti-aggression in defense of national independence wins universal sympathy. This is a fact independent of Moscow's likes and dislikes.

FORMER CPV PLATOON LEADER RECALLS KOREAN WAR

[Speech by Comrade Chen Yunqi, former platoon leader of the Chinese People's Volunteers [CPV] and now deputy political commissar of the division political department of a unit of the Beijing Garrison, on occasion of 32d anniversary of the Korean war -- initial words in Chinese fading into translation]

[Text] On 25 June we mark the 32d anniversary of the opening of the Korean fatherland liberation war triggered by the U.S. imperialists. As a member of the Chinese People's Volunteers, I recall this day with emotion.

Thirty-two years ago the U.S. imperialists openly triggered a war of invasion against the Korean people. Under the wise leadership of President Kim Il-song and the Korean Workers Party [KWP], the Korean people and men and officers of the Korean People's Army [KPA] undauntedly and heroically fought against the enemy.

Under the banner of "resist America, aid Korea, safeguard the home, and defend the nation" and the banner of proletariat internationalism, the CPV, waging 3 years of bloody struggle side by side with the Korean people on the Korean war front and upholding the appeal of President Mao, defeated the U.S. imperialists and achived a great victory in the Korean fatherland liberation war.

In those days 32 years ago when we fought shoulder to shoulder with the Korean people, our CPV soldiers were always warmly cared for by the Korean people. Through this, we felt more closely the warm friendly feelings toward the Chinese people of the Korean people.

It was a freezing cold winter night. Our unit had to stay in a village near the (Chongchon) River. Coincidently, a KPA unit was already in the village. At the news of our coming, they vacated for us the rooms they had occupied. After repeatedly offering the rooms to each other, we both had to make camp outside.

The villagers treated us warmly, giving us wood for fires and bedding. Next day at dawn, the villagers brought us cooked rice. Such a warm treat strengthened our conviction in victory and revived endless vigor in us.

Afterward, our unit was assigned the task of safeguarding railway transportation. The enemy used to destroy railways and bridges by mobilizing dozens of aircraft. Assisted by the KPA and the Korean people, we defended a bridge, fighting alongside the railway day in and day out. When the enemy's aircraft came, we shot at them with machineguns and even rifles and when the bridge was destroyed, we rebuilt it and repaired the damaged railway.

As a result of our safeguarding the railway, we were called the invincible railway defenders.

When at last the guns fell silent in Korea, the Korean people, under the leadership of the KWP led by President Kim Il-song, achieved brilliant success in socialist revolution and construction by implementing the principles of self-reliance in economy, self-support in politics and self-defense, while displaying the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and arduous struggle.

Today the DPRK stands towering as a powerful socialist country in the eastern part of Asia. The position of the DPRK is daily rising in the international community and the Korean people are an incomparably heroic people.

We are proud of having such a heroic people as comrades-in-arms. The revolutionary spirit of the Korean comrades-in-arms is the example we should emulate.

The proposals put forth by President Kim Il-song for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and to prevent national division are widely supported not only by the Korean people but also by the countries and peoples who advocate justice.

The South Korean authorities, however, are strongly opposed to the North-South dialogue, disregarding the aspirations of the whole nation. They trampled upon the North-South joint communique and are now laying obstacles to the nation's reunification.

The CPV and Chinese people strongly support the Korean people's sacred cause for the independent and peaceful reunification of their country. Without fail, the United States must remove its troops and equipment from South Korea. The PRC and the DPRK are fraternal neighbors, whose rivers and mountains are physically linked, and their relationship is that of lips and teeth.

The peoples of the PRC and the DPRK have established indestructible friendly relations in the struggle against their common enemy. In the course of socialist construction and restoration, the peoples of our two countries have mutually backed and supported each other while further strengthening and developing the great friendship.

As stated by Comrade Geng Biao at a Pyongyang mass rally during his visit to the DPRK, the Chinese people and army value the great friendship between the parties and countries of the PRC and DPRK as most precious and they will continue to make efforts to develop such a friendship. No matter what might come, the Chinese people and army will, as before, trimph by fighting alongside the Korean people.

UN-SPONSORED TALKS ON AFGHANISTAN CLOSE

[Text] Geneva, June 25 (XINHUA) -- The U.N.-sponsored indirect talks between Pakistan and the Soviet-backed Kabul regime concerning the question of Afghanistan ended here last night.

A press communique issued here today by the United Nations says, "The discussions focused on the four agenda items identified for consideration", namely, withdrawal of foreign troops, non-interference in internal affairs of state, international guarantees on non-interference, and voluntary return of refugees. The communique notes, "progress was made in the clarification of the positions of the interlocutors, in the identification of areas of agreement and in the development of ideas as to the structure and contents of the comprehensive settlement."

Speaking at a press conference held at the Palais des Nations this morning, Under-Secretary-General of the United Nations Diego Cordovez, who had been conducting the talks as the personal representative of the secretary-general, said a "set of understandings" had been reached in the final hours of the discussions to serve as a basis for deliberations in autumn. He added that "certain important, significant political concessions have been made" by the participants in the talks, but he refused to elaborate on the point.

Iran, which had been invited to join in the talks, boycotted the Geneva talks, but Cordovez said that he had kept Iran informed about the talks. Cordovez indicated that in the course of the talks, he had contacted the Soviet and the U.S. officials in Geneva.

The U.N.-sponsored talks on Afghanistan met with strong opposition from both resistance fighters in Afghanistan and Afghan patriots residing in Switzerland, who issued statements outside the meeting to assert their stands.

KYODO CITES PAPER ON TACTICAL NUCLEAR EXERCISE

[Text] Beijing, July 1, KYODO -- China has conducted a military exercise assuming the use of tactical nuclear arms, according to a local Chinese newspaper. China is believed not to itself possess such nuclear weapons at present. A report by the NINGXIA DAILY raised speculation among Western military sources here that China may add tactical nuclear weapons to its arsenal in the near future.

The exercise was staged late last month in the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region close to the border with Mongolia and the Soviet Union, the daily said in its June 27 and 28 editions, delivered here Thursday. It said the war game was held to show the results of modernization programs conducted within the local unit of the People's Liberation Army (PLA).

Liu Jinghai, deputy commander of the PLA's Lanzhou unit, and local Communist Party leader Li Xuezhi were among tens of thousands of persons who observed the exercise, the daily added. The paper failed to give the exact location where the exercise was conducted. The northern central frontier is important for China's national defense against a possible military encounter with the Soviet Union.

The Western military sources said the exercise probably involved militiamen as well as regular troops. They also noted that the daily carried a photo with a caption: "Explosion of a 'Nuclear Weapon' Deep Inside Enemy Territory." The "nuclear weapon" was apparently to be used in the exercise to counter enemy forces, the sources said. They said China likely still does not have tactical nuclear arms, which are normally aimed at military installations.

DENG YINGCHAO ARTICLE ON GUARDING PARTY SECRETS

[Article by Deng Yingchao: "A Communist Party Member Who Strictly Observed the Party's Secrecy-Maintaining Discipline" -- written in commemoration of the 61st founding anniversary of the party]

[Text] Time flies like an arrow and passes like a flowing river. Last year's joyous celebrations of our party's 60th founding anniversary are still fresh in our memory, and before we know it, the 61st founding anniversary is here.

I often recall things from the early period of our party's founding. At that time in China, warlords were exercising feudal separationist rule under the manipulation of the imperialist powers and were engaged in endless, tangled warfare. The forces of darkness were rampant and the people suffered untold miseries. The progressive people in China strove hard in search of the true way to the salvation of the nation and the people. The victory of the October Revolution had a tremendous impact on them and they were greatly inspired. Many people cherished the ideal of socialism and created an upsurge in studying and publicizing the Marxist-Leninist theory. Our party was founded at the proposal of some of these progressive people. The party acquired great vitality as soon as it was born because it firmly believed in Marxism-Leninism, represented the interests of the people of all nationalities in China, was the vanguard of the working people and was equipped with strict organizational principle and discipline. Although the imperialists and the feudal warlords were seriously split and desperately trying to knock each other out, they shared a common view toward the Communist Party -- a new rising force -- regarding it as an arch enemy and likening it to fierce floods and savage beasts. They both wanted to eliminate the Communist Party. Faced with a powerful enemy, our party relied on truth, the masses and on a contingent of party members with political consciousness, and incessantly waged heroic struggles. When we -- the party members of the 1920's -- first joined the party, we did not have brightly colored party flags as we have now at the initiation, nor was there a solemn oath-taking ceremony.

However, the solemnity of the initiation is still unforgettable for the rest of every comrade's life. When the responsible person (or the sponsor) of the party organization declared that a person had become an honorable Communist Party member and when he forcefully read the party's rules by which Communist Party members should abide, the person concerned would be very excited and would resolve and pledge to sacrifice everything for the sake of the revolution. I can still clearly remember these rules: Observe the party program and constitution, join the party organization, obey the party's assignment, pay the party membership fee regularly, abide by party discipline, keep party secrets and struggle for the Communist cause to the end. Because the party organization at that time was still operating in secret, it attached special importance to and earnestly attended to the work of educating party members on observing discipline and keeping secrets. Even now, I still remember these things quite well. Today, I would like to talk about Comrade Zhou Enlai, a Communist Party member who always strictly observed the party's secrecy-maintaining discipline -- the one I have seen with my own eyes in the political life within the party over the decades.

Comrade Enlai and I joined the party at different times and in different places. We did not work in the same place during the early years of the party's founding so we did not know each other's admission date. In our correspondence, we never mentioned things that were not permitted by party discipline. We only talked about our own ideas and understanding, as well as those of our friends and expressed our ideals and our yearning for the revolution. Through the instrumentality of the party organization, it was only after he returned to China that we knew we were both party members.

After we were married, Comrade Enlai and I agreed that both of us might work in the same locality or organ, but should refrain from working together in any specific department. We honored that agreement for decades. Now, I can see that it is better that a husband and wife not work together in a specific department. Meanwhile, we always reminded each other to strictly observe party discipline and guard party secrets under all circumstances because we felt that no party member should take exception regarding the observation of party discipline. Party members with greater responsibilities should strive harder to set an example for others and should be more conscious of observing discipline and strictly guarding party secrets.

In the winter of 1926, Comrade Enlai was transferred from Guangdong to work in Shanghai. I remained in Guangzhou and correspondence between us broke off. I did not know he played a part in leading the third armed uprising in Shanghai. On 12 April 1927, Chiang Kai-shek started the counterrevolutionary coup d'etat in Shanghai and wantonly massacred Communists and the revolutionary masses. Comrade Enlai kept struggling under the threatening white terror. Later, he was transferred to Wuhan by order of the party. My residence in Guangzhou was searched by the Kuomintang and three comrades living with me were arrested on the spot, one of whom was executed the next day while the others died in prison. At that time, I was hospitalized because of a stillbirth and managed to escape from danger thanks to prompt notification by the party organization and the righteous assistance of the masses. Shortly after, Wang Jingwei betrayed the revolution and brought about the Nanjing-Hankou connection and our whole party went underground.

In view of the brutal suppression by the Kuomintang reactionaries, our party Central Committee studied the situation at the time and decided to start an armed uprising in Nanchang to counter the Kuomintang reactionaries. It also decided to appoint Comrade Enlai as secretary of the front committee of the party and to assign him to Nanchang to lead the uprising. It was not until after dinner on 19 July as he was about to leave Wuhan that he told me he would be going to Jiujiang that night. I was not told what he would do and how long he would stay there. I was accustomed to secrecy and did not bother to ask. At the time, both of us were filled with indignation because of the powerful enemy we had to face. We grasped each other's hand tightly and we parted in silence, not knowing when we would meet again. In those years of white terror, whether it was between comrades or between husband and wife, every separation could mean separation forever. I learned of the Nanchang uprising only later when I read the Kuomintang newspaper.

The party organization has always instructed us not to mention or ask about things we are not supposed to mention or ask about and not to read the documents we are not supposed to read. This is dictated by the party's interests. In the history of our party, there have been numerous Communist Party members who we should never forget. At the crucial moments of life and death, these people upheld the party's interests and continued to strictly implement the party's secrecy-maintaining discipline by promptly destroying party secrets or even chewing the confidential documents and swallowing them in an emergency. Many of our martyrs as well as veteran comrades who are still alive would rather sacrifice their lives at the enemy's courts under severe torture for the sake of the party organization and other comrades' safety than divulge party secrets to the enemy. They have withstood rigorous tests in the struggle against the enemy. I will never forget their indomitable fighting will and their lofty quality of steadfastness and boundless loyalty to the party.

During the war years, military struggles had a direct bearing on the success or failure of the revolution. The military situation was changing so fast that the divulgence of information on one military action might result in serious defeats for us. Therefore, guarding the secrets became a conscious action of every comrade. It was also necessary to strictly guard the secrecy of those items that were nonmilitary but which required secrecy. On the Long March and during the periods of the war of resistance against the Japanese and the war of liberation, our flowing iron current was capable of crushing all fortifications and eventually defeated the powerful enemy. A very important factor in this success was strict discipline, especially the efforts to strictly guard secrets.

After the founding of the PRC, our party assumed the leading position in the life of the entire nation and found itself in a new historical period. The tasks it shouldered became more important. Guarding party and state secrets thereby became a sacred duty of all Communist Party members, especially the medium-ranking and senior cadres. Comrade Enlai knew many party and state secrets but we still observed discipline between us. He would not talk about the secrets, and I would not ask about them, and vice versa. There were many things that we separately kept to ourselves. For instance, he kept it a secret from me when China exploded its first atomic bomb. At the time, he told the responsible person in charge: In connection with this test all engineers and technicians should absolutely pay attention to guarding state secrets. Only those who take part in the test are to be told the situation regarding the related projects and tests. Other comrades, including our family members and relatives, are not supposed to know. He said: My wife, Comrade Deng Yingchao, is a member of the CCP Central Committee. I need not tell her about this matter since it is not related to her work. The comrade in charge relayed Comrade Enlai's speech at the testing ground and wanted everyone to strictly observe the secrecy-maintaining discipline. Therefore, nothing was disclosed beforehand. I did not know about this until recently, when I read the interview document prepared by the party literature research center of the CCP Central Committee.

In order to guard party secrets, he instituted a very strict system for safeguarding his office and documents. His secretaries, by division of labor, were allowed to read documents only in the fields to which they were designated and were not allowed to indiscriminately read those documents not related to their fields of work. In the fields of work to which they were designated through division of labor, the secretaries were given full access to the necessary materials in order to familiarize themselves with their work. Even if documents were in the fields of work to which the secretaries were designated, those which were especially confidential would not be disclosed to the related personnel until the documents had to be handled. The secretaries said that he was airtight. All letters addressed to him were not supposed to be opened by others, according to regulations. When a secretary opened a letter by mistake, she would have to seal it immediately and put a note on the envelope to that effect and promise to be careful in the future. Comrade Enlai worked in his office daily for more than 10 hours. With the exception of related personnel, others were not allowed to enter. Relatives and friends were no exception if they were not there to talk business.

He kept the keys for his office door and safe with him at all times. Normally, he would place these keys in his pocket and, at bedtime, he would place them under his pillow. He would turn the two keys over to me only when he was going abroad. I would keep the keys in the safest place possible as if I had been assigned a confidential mission. Once, he was in such a hurry to leave that he only became aware that the keys were in his pocket when he arrived at the airport. So, he put the keys in an envelope, sealed it and asked a comrade to bring them to me. Upon his return, the first thing that I did when we met was to turn the two keys over to him.

During the tumultuous decade, the party's discipline and secrecy-maintaining system were undermined and trampled underfoot so seriously that it seemed no secrets could be guarded. On one occasion, Comrade Enlai left for meetings and did not return home for one night and day because the meetings were held one after the other. I learned that the large character posters on the streets and the grapevine had the contents of the meetings concerned. Because I was doubtful, when he returned home I asked whether it was true. He immediately responded: How did you know? Who said that? He kept questioning me in all seriousness. So, I kidded, saying: You attended the meetings. You have your own channel and I have mine. I have ties with the masses and have "voluntary intelligence agents" of my own. This matter was left to pass between us amid laughter. At that time, the people would say: What secrets do we have now? However, Comrade Enlai was still tight-lipped and airtight.

After being stricken with cancer, Comrade Enlai once said to me during a chat: "There are still many things in my mind of which I have not yet spoken." In reply, I said: "There are also many things in my mind of which I have not yet spoken." At that time, both of us knew that the cruel reality of parting forever would soon be before us. However, what we had not spoken of was forever buried in our minds.

Now, we have embarked on a new long march, a road which is not smooth. We may be hit by surprise with various kinds of bullets. We must remain vigilant. It is all the more necessary for us to revive and rectify our party's work style, strengthen our party discipline and, particularly, earnestly enforce the secrecy-maintaining system of the party and the state. My brief account of Comrade Enlai in this regard may be beneficial to comrades.

UNFPA OFFICIAL PREDICTS SUCCESSFUL CENSUS

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Work on the first day of China's census was "adequate, very systematic" and "we foresee a successful count."

Rafael M. Salas, executive director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) made the remarks after morning visits to Beijing's four census stations and the computer center.

Addressing a press conference this afternoon, he said, the density of publicity for the census could be seen at the places where the U.N. officials went, which had aroused the interest of the people. The educational program before the census was "fantastic." Another UNFPA official said at the conference that they had been in Qinghai Province and Inner Mongolia autonomous region where they saw the slogan "be ready to respond to the census" on house walls and yurts. Commenting on the 21 computers provided by the UNFPA for China's census, Salas said because of physical problems, the installation of a computer in Tibet autonomous region was postponed. But the census work there was started earlier and would be completed simultaneously with other localities in the country, he said.

The U.N. official said that the population figure would be out in October and the entire census analysis should be completed in June 1984, which he said was quite rapid.

GUANGMING RIBAO REVIEWS PLANNED ECONOMY TRAITS

HK011146 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jun 82

[Article by Liu Qichang [0491 0366 2490] and Tang Fengyi [0791 0023 5030]: "The Actual Conditions and Basic Demands of Our Country's Planned Economy at the Present Stage" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] After the article "In Order To Adhere to the Socialist Path, It Is Necessary To Carry Out Planned Economy" was published in GUANGMING RIBAO on 9 May, some articles holding different views have been published in this paper. This is significant to the present nationwide discussion on some theoretical problems concerning the reform of the economic system. We would also like to air our views here.

COMMODITY PRODUCTION AND EXCHANGE ARE THE ACTUAL CONDITIONS OF THE PLANNED ECONOMY AT THE PRESENT STAGE

In their discussion, some articles analyzed the fundamental tenets of Marxism and pointed out: "Planned economy is a basic characteristic of the socialist economy." "Carrying out planned economy is a fundamental and principled question in adhering to the socialist path." This is undoubtedly correct. We should never waver on this question. However, an important practical problem before us now is how to make a concrete analysis of the socialist planned economy we are practicing at the present stage. That is, the question concerning the relationship between the planned economy we are now practicing and commodity production and exchange, or the relationship between the planned economy and the market. Besides, there is a question of how to give full play to the superiority of the socialist planned economy in our actual work. We hold that to conscientiously study these problems by means of integrating theory with practice is of important immediate significance to adhering to the correct orientation of the reform of the economic system.

As everyone knows, the fundamental theory of practicing planned economy in socialist society was first established by Marx and Engels. This was an important conclusion they drew from analyzing the essence and trend of development of the capitalist mode of production. However, there were two important premises for Marx's and Engels' theory of planned economy. One is that all the means of production are owned by society. The other is that the commodity production has withered away. In other words, the planned economy they referred to was actually the one under which products were directly distributed by society. The socialist planned economy we have practiced since the founding of the republic is actually the one which bears the characteristics of the products-distribution type. Practice shows that this type of planned economy does not conform to the objective reality in our country in which commodity production and exchange still exist under the socialist conditions. Many drawbacks in our economic work were actually results of practicing this sytem and this has seriously hampered us in giving effect to the superiority of our socialist system. For this reason, we hold that a correct attitude toward socialist commodity production and exchange, and bringing this objective existence into line with the socialist planned economic system, will play a decisive role in giving full effect to the superiority of the socialist planned economy.

At present, people generally agree that there must be two premises for the practice of a socialist planned economy; that is, the socialized grand production and the public ownership of the means of production. This is correct. However, we hold that these two premises are not enough. There must also be a restrictive condition, and that is the socialist commodity production and exchange. Although with the first two premises we can draw a clear distinction between socialist and capitalist economies and make clear the basic characteristic of planned economy, which shows that it belongs to the socialist economy, we are still unable to distinguish between the socialist planned economy at the present state and that of the future when communism is realized.

Yet, this distinction is one of the important bases for establishing a realistic planned economy system. So far as the present-stage socialist planned economy is concerned, we should say that socialized grand production has required the practice of planned economy. Thus the demand of the conductive forces. The public ownership of the means of production has provided the possibility of practicing planned economy, and this is a guarantee of the production relations. However, the socialist commodity production and exchange have determined the characteristics of the planned economy at the present stage, and this is the concrete expression of the socialist productive forces and production relations at the present stage. For this reason, we hold that at the present stage, we must practice the commodity-type planned economy, that is, the planned economy taking as its meaning the development of commodity production and exchange in a proportionate and planned way.

Although it is correct to say that commodity production and exchange are not basic characteristics of the socialist economy, we cannot draw from this the conclusion that socialist commodity production and exchange cannot be actual conditions for the planned economy at the present stage. As a matter of fact, commodity production and exchange as actual conditions of the planned economy at the present stage has been a fact for some time. It is not a new "theoretical" problem. What we need to do is seek a proper form to relate the system of the planned economy to the socialist commodity production and exchange and establish a correct, reasonable and effective system of the socialist planned economy, rather than retrogress to the original status of neglecting the fact that commodity production and exchange still exist.

Some people are apprehensive that by stressing socialist economy as a kind of commodity economy, the planned economy will be weakened and our socialist economy will become a market economy. Therefore, they agree only that the development of commodity production is of great significance but deny that the socialist economy is a planned commodity economy. Some other comrades also agree that these two [planned economy and commodity economy] are organically related to each other as an entity, but hold that the planning characteristic is the essential attribution and the commodity characteristic is a subordinate attribution. We feel that these views have yet to be discussed further. The economic form characterized by commodity production and commodity economy can be adopted in different production relations and in different social systems. When we regard this form as a general economic category in our study, the human relationship os revealed under a material outer casing, but without revealing its class nature. However, when it is preceded by, for example, small producer's, capitalist or socialist attributes, it has a special meaning. Then why should we set the socialist commodity production and exchange against socialist economy, whether intentionally or unintentionally? Why should we regard the socialist commodity production and exchange as dissident? If we say that the characteristic which has something to do with commodity is a subordinate attribution, then perhaps we should also say that the characteristic which has something to do with products is the essential attribution. This is actually a prior concept which equated planned economy with product economy. But this concept does not conform to the objective reality.

SATISFYING THE NEEDS OF THE MARKET IS THE BASIC DEMAND OF PLANNED ECONOMY AT THE PRESENT STAGE

Since commodity production and exchange still exist at the present socialist state, there is also a question of market. At the Eighth National Congress of the CCP, Comrade Chen Yun said: "Our country's market cannot be a free capitalist market. It is a unified socialist market, in which the main body is the state market but with the free market as a subsidiary body under the state leadership and within a certain range. This free market is a supplement to the state market under the state leadership. It is therefore a component part of the socialist unified market." What Comrade Chen Yun said about the socialist unified market is correct. According to our understanding, the stage market mentioned here refers to the planned market, or the commodity market in which commodity is produced and exchanged under a unified plan, and the market in which commodity is produced and exchanged outside the state plan is the free market under the guidance of the state plan.

These two form the unified socialist market, which is a place for the circulation of commodity-type planned economy. Socialist planned economy means organizing, coordinating and controlling all the economic activities of planned and free production and planned and free markets according to the objective law (mainly, the objective requirements of the proportionate development), so that the entire national economy can be developed proportionately and in a coordinated manner.

Why do we say that under the conditions of the unified socialist market, to satisfy the needs of the market is the basic demand of a socialist planned economy? We would like to analyze this probelm from the following three aspects:

1. Proper proportion should be maintained in socialist production in a planned and proportionate way in accordance with the law of development and the law of value. However, what is the proportion that should be maintained, and in constantly readjusting this proportion, what should we act in accordance with? This must be decided by the basic socialist economic law -- the purpose of the socialist production, that is, to satisfy the people's increasing needs in their material and cultural life. Of course, these social needs (including the needs of the people's daily consumption and the needs of production consumption) can also be brought into line with the state plan. The scope and degree of the development of production in various periods are determined by the social needs at that time. Under a certain condition of the development of productive forces, to what extent the social needs can be satisfied is an important symbol of whether social production is developing in a coordinated manner and whether the socialist system of planned economy is prefect.

2. Social needs are extremely complicated and changeable. Being a practical economic category, they can only be reflected through certain economic relationships and economic activities. At the present stage, various social needs are satisfied through the relationship between commodity and currency, that is, through commodity exchange (in a planned, or relatively unplanned way), or through the market. Therefore, the information on the market needs does not only provide an important basis for regulation by market mechanism but also for regulation by plan. In other words, the social needs, which are reflected in the market information, are an important basis for making social economic plans and guiding the economic activities in a socialist country. Of course, the problem concerning the market needs is also a very complicated problem. They include immediate and future needs and are subject to change along with the changes in production and circulation, distribution and prices, and consumption. Under certain circumstances, there might be some false appearance of needs. Under the present situation in our country, as there exists many abnormal factors, market needs have become particularly complicated. But however complicated it might be, as consumption is always the purpose of production, satisfaction of the needs of daily consumption is the decisive factor for the development of the production of the means of subsistence, and the needs of the development of the production of subsistence means is the decisive factor for the development of the production of the means of production. At the same time, the needs of this consumption and production can be satisfied only through commodity exchange. This shows that keeping abreast of the needs of the market is the main channel for keeping abreast of the trends in the development of the social needs. Therefore, in the final analysis, the purpose of the exchanges either realized through the state market or through free market is to satisfy the social needs which are expressed by the needs of the market. This gives expression to the internal relations between production, exchange and consumption in the socialist planned economy.

3. Since satisfying the needs of the market is a concrete expression of satisfying the needs of society, serving customers (in principle, the state, which works out and issues plans, is in reality representative of various customers) can then be regarded as a concrete expression of serving the needs of the people by various production and circulation enterprises.

Producing more and better products to satisfy the needs of society with the least possible use of labor is a material means to satisfy the needs of society and raise the economic effect of the society. At the present stage, as commodity production and exchange still exist, this concrete expression of the purpose of socialist production has changed satisfying the needs of the people from an invisible and abstract principle or political slogan into a concrete objective to be achieved through carrying out the plans in the economic activities. In order to know more about the needs of society, it is necessary to collect a vast amount of market information, study the trends in the needs of the market and the trend of development in the relationship between supply and demand, and make scientific market predictions. On this basis, it is necessary to work out decisions and plans. Only when economic plans are worked out on this basis can they be full of vitality and give full play to the superiority of the socialist planned economy.

PRACTICING COMMODITY-TYPE PLANNED ECONOMY IS THE ORIENTATION OF THE REFORM OF THE ECONOMIC SYSTEM

To recognize or not to recognize that socialist commodity economy is the actual condition, and satisfying the needs of the market is the basic demands of planned economy at the present stage, in other words, what type of planned economy is to be practiced, is not only a theoretical problem but also an important practical problem. This is because different types of planned economy have different requirements on the economic structure and economic system as well as on the management of the enterprises. They also have different criteria to measure the economic effect. These are problems that should be effectively solved in practicing planned economy at the present stage. To do a good job in this respect is an important matter concerning how to correctly implement the party's policies and principles mapped out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and blaze a new trail in our economic construction for the attainment of better economic results and for bringing more material benefits to the people. This concerns the orientation and destiny of the reform of our economic system.

First, the purpose of the reform of our economic system is to blaze a Chinese-style new trail for the attainment of better economic results to satisfy the people's needs. For many years in the past, we one-sidedly stressed accumulation to the neglect of consumption, one-sidedly stressed that production decided consumption to the neglect of the promotion role of consumption on production. We are satisfied with the fulfillment and raise of output and output values according to plan and disregarded the relations between production and needs of whether the people's daily needs were satisfied. It seemed that the higher the targets and the faster the speed of development, the better the superiority of the planned economy that would be brought into effect. As a result, a negative situation of high accumulation, high speed, low effect and low daily consumption appeared and existed for a long time in our economic construction. In order to radically change this situation, it is necessary to take as the starting point and the end result of the development of the national economy the people's needs for essential consumer goods, which are expressed by the market demands. In making strategic decisions in economic work, it is first necessary to make a strategic estimation of the trend of development of the people's daily consumption and, on this basis, make a strategic arrangement for the production of the means of subsistence. Then it is necessary to make an arrangement for the development of the production of the means of production in light of the needs of developing the production of the means of subsistence, and based on it, work out the plan for the economic and cultural development of the whole society. This principle must also be followed when making short-term plans or readjusting plans. Such is the Chinese-style new way for our socialist planned economy, in which the economy is propelled forward by satisfying the needs of the people.

Second, the correct orientation of the reform of the economic system at the present stage is to realize the transformation of the product-type planned economic system into the commodity-type planned economic system. Just as many people say, we have suffered a lot from overconcentration and rigidity in management and from our past practice of applying administrative methods in economic management.

This has been an inevitable result of practicing the product-type planned economy for a long time. Under this planned economy, the whole country was treated as a big factory and the economic relations between various localities, enterprise and between the state and the enterprises were neglected and were regarded as relationship of the division of labor in production and technology between different units in a factory. This inevitably gave rise to drawbacks such as unified revenue and expenditure and "eating out of one big pot." We hold that in order to adhere to the correct orientation in the reform of the economic system and to carry out the policy of enlivening the economy, it is necessary to transform the product-type planned economy into the commodity-type planned economy, organize the economic activities of the whole country in accordance with the principle of unified planning and separate management at various levels, and combine the plans for economic development with the enthusiasm of various aspects (the state, localities, enterprises and staff and workers) in the development of the economy. Practicing the commodity-type planned economy does not mean that the plans for economic and social development must passively suit the needs of the changeable market. On the contrary, it is necessary to make active regulation of the market by means of various economic levers in the light of the requirements of the objective economic laws so that a comprehensive balance may be achieved. Therefore, relevant reforms must also be carried out in the pricing, taxation and other systems.

Third, the reform of the economic system must be carried out and the commodity-type planned economy must be practiced in the enterprises. The practice of the commodity-type planned economy not only requires the departments in charge of economic planning to pay more attention to the market information but also requires all enterprises to carry out the production and operation management system focusing on operation, to take satisfying the needs of society as their own duties and produce and operate commodities that are needed by the market under the state plan, to be responsible for the customers and constantly improve the quality of their products and technological services, and to correctly handle the relations between the economic returns of the enterprises and those of the whole society, raise their competitive ability and seek economic benefits by appropriate means, such as supplying marketable, high-quality, reasonably priced and low-consumption goods. The change of the economic status of an enterprise also provides favorable conditions for various units within the enterprise in handling their mutual relations according to the principle of relating responsibility and power to profits. Thus, the practice of the economic responsibility system within the enterprise is not only necessary but also is possible. Obviously, the above-mentioned are requirements raised in the decisions of the CCP central committee and the State Council on overall reorganization of enterprises.

To sum up, we hold that further affirming that the commodity production and exchange are the actual conditions and satisfying the market needs is the basic demand of the planned economy at the present stage on the basis of affirming the necessity and possibility of practicing planned economy in the socialist society, which are determined by the socialized grand production and the socialist public ownership of the means of production, will not only solve the theoretical problem concerning the concrete objective and purpose of the planned economy, but will also help us deepen our understanding of and better implement the line, policies and principles mapped out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee.

SIA YAN SPEECH AT LITERATURE, ART CONFERENCE

[Test] Comrades: The Second Plenary Session of the Fourth Committee of the All-China Federation of Literary and Art Circles is now beginning.

This session was originally scheduled for last year. In the past 2 years literary and art circles have had "a busy time" holding many important meetings on special subjects. These include the forum on theatrical works called under the direct concern of the CCP Central Committee and especially the study of the "Decision on Certain Problems in the History of the Party Since the Founding of the PRC" adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee; the forum on problems on the ideological front held by the CCP Central Committee in May last year; the ceremony to mark the centenary of the birth of Lu Xun in September; and so forth. Members of the committee of the All-China Federation of Literary and Art Circles have been occupied with tasks concerning leadership, transmission and study. Therefore, the session was postponed time and again.

But the current session has now opened at what can be said to be a very opportune time. Not long ago Comrade Deng Xiaoping gave an important speech. Comrade Hu Yaobang also made an important speech on ideological and political work. On 23 May there were 15 letters published by Comrade Mao Zedong to people in literary and art circles and Comrade Chen Yun's speech "On Two Trends Among Party Literary and Art Workers." All these are of great significance in guiding our current and future literary and art work. Therefore, a review and study of the above instructions and documents, before the opening of the current session, could further enable us to understand the prevailing international and domestic situations, broaden our horizons, strengthen our confidence and take the realities of our literary and art circles into consideration and unite as one, with redoubled passion and confidence, in summing up the past and planning for the future. This, in my opinion, is both timely and appropriate as far as our cause is concerned.

The current session is a meeting held to review the past and sum up experiences. This is different from the several meetings held before the fourth literary and art congress. It is being called at a time when the masses of literary and art workers have undegone 10 years of internal disorder and turned chaos into order, carrying forward the revolutionary cause pioneered by our predecessors and forging ahead into the future. We are meeting at a time of fine weather. There is neither cloud nor frost. We may as well say that there is also a problem of ecological balance, as far as literary and art circles are concerned. For a long period of time, things were carried too far in felling and destroying flowers and trees in the literary garden. We must plant trees and cultivate flowers. Today, we have fortunately entered a period of stability and unity, in which we can plant trees and bring up people and no longer have the threat of a wind or rain storm. Education by negative example sometimes leaves a deeper imprint than positive education. The aim of summing up and learning from lessons is always to make better progress. We have done so. We have seen the bright tomorrow. Since the fourth literary and art congress, the situation has developed well in our literature and art. In various literary and art departments, there have appeared large numbers of new-type persons and new works. The quality of our literary and art works has shown a marked improvement. Literary and art criticism has also become more active. Writers and artists have strengthened their sense of being the master of the state. A situation is emerging marked by more attention to theory, enthusiasm for creation and an expanding contingent of writers and artists. Of course, we cannot deny that many errors and shortcomings have also appeared in the work in the past 2 years. It is easy to set mountains on fire and to freely fell flowers and trees. However, it is relatively difficult and time-consuming to maintain firmly in the hearts of hundreds of millions of people ecological balance and to increase the proportion of plant cover in a planned and guaranteed manner. There are both subjective and objective factors behind the defects and mistakes that have appeared in our work. We should of course oppose being overstrict in felling trees. But we should also take note of the fact that "Going uphill to collect firewood" has become our national habit. We must oppose the influence of "leftist" forces and patiently conduct education. We must also formulate some necessary systems for rewards and penalties. But the more important thing is to energetically plant threes and create forests and open up and increase the sources of energy.

There is a lesson in the economic field that says: "The bad currency drives away the good one." Vulgar works appealing to low taste also sometimes find a better market. Therefore, we must strive to improve the quality of literary and art works. We must have courage. We should, of course, criticize inferior products. But we should not be afraid of producing them. The best way to get rid of inferior products is to produce large supplies of high-class products that are good and cheap. We must enable all trades and lines in the whole country to turn out products that are "good and cheap and suited to the taste of young and old." Apart from closing down, suspending, merging or converting enterprises, I think that the most important thing is to strenghten political and ideological education. We must strengthen party leadership and, at the same time, improve party leadership. We must call for doing both of these things together and not just one thing alone. We must put in time and exercise a little patience. As far as this is concerned, spiritual and material products are quite different. Rashness and crude methods do harm. In addition, we must also take note of another problem. It is that our country has carried out an open-door policy. The material field has seen the appearance of foreign equipment, foreign technology and foreign capital. Spiritual civilization is no exception. Bourgeois liberalization is nothing new. This started when China was reduced to a semi-colony. However, we must today pay particular attention to new circumstances and new conditions. In the past 2 years, the Western world has been using various means to sell their so-called "freedom" and "democracy" and to sell their kind of individualism marked by an obsession with profit. But in this respect, our party has experience. We must not be afraid and must dare to wage struggle. But such struggle must be waged by reasoning things out and by using the pen. It must not be marked by the use of abusive language and put on the higher plane of principle and two-line struggle.

In order to sum up literary and art work experiences in a relatively comprehensive manner, the session, based on the demands of the masses of literary and art workers, has formulated a draft "on certain views about literary and art work." Now, this is distributed to every one of you. This is only a draft and leaves something to be desired. We hope that the committee members present and those comrades attending as observers will discuss and revise it and then pass it on to federations of literary and art circles at the provincial, municipal and autonomous region levels and literary and art organizations. The masses must be aroused to seriously discuss it and to put forth views about revising it. Beginning from the "May 4th Movement," our proletarian socialist literature and art has had a history of over 60 years. From the liberation of the country to date, over 30 years have also elapsed. No matter how many mistakes and setbacks have been experienced in between, we have also really drawn lessons from these mistakes and setbacks. We have learned to use our minds to think and to use our own feet to find a path relatively suited to our national conditions. We have not changed our open-door policy. Nor have we changed our guideline of "making foreign things serve China." We must enliven literature and art. But we also cannot make a mess of them. We must uphold the four basic principles. We are confident that by upholding these principles, we can surely do something worthy of this great nation in literary and art circles.

Comrades, our cause is a glorious one, but there are also many difficulties confronting us. From the October revolution to date, the proletariat has only a history of 60 years or so. On the other hand, the bourgeoisie spent 200 or 300 years from the industrial revolution to the seizure of political power and the advanced development of production. We lack experience and have taken a detour. But there is no reason to lose confidence. We have fallen into the pit but have gained in wit. We have understood that to build a powerful socialist country with a high degree of material civilization and spiritual civilization in an industrially backward country like ours with a population of nearly 1 billion, we must use our own minds or the minds of the Chinese to ponder problems. We must use the Chinese people's own feet to find a road of socialist construction suited for the national conditions of China. The call for total Westernization in the early part of this century did not work. Nor did the imitation of other countries' ways shortly after liberation work.

We must adhere to the goal of calling for socialism and communism. But we must link Marxist principles with the realities of China in a realistic way and not a mechanical way. We must bear in mind that the 1980's is an era of scientific advances, an era in which mankind has begun to understand itself and an era in which the realm of necessity has increasingly shrunk. Sciences are changing and developing, systems are changing and developing. Man's thinking and culture are also changing and developing. In the changing and developing process mentioned here, we are striving to link correct theory with the changing realities. In this era, we cannot be conservative, nor can we be reckless. We must have confidence. We must believe in our motherland with its several thousand years of culture and nearly 1 billion diligent, courageous and wise people. We must believe in the party's line and general and specific policies gradually improved upon since the 3d plenary session of the CCP Central Committee. Without the former, we would feel a step below others and would be imposed upon and take a beating. Without the latter, we would lose our bearings and would err again without being conscious of it. Let us be united, arouse our enthusiasm, talk less nonsense, do more concrete things and realistically keep our noses to the grindstone for 10 years. If we do, we can surely achieve a tremendous victory.

DING LING CITES CHEN YUN ON LITERARY WORKERS

[Text] When I was studying at the Marxism-Leninism Institute in Yanan in 1938, I was most fond of listening to Comrade Chen Yun's lectures on the "Construction of the Party." Every time he gave a lecture, he used the most practical and concrete examples to prove the theory, profoundly analyzed problems, expounded clearly on the theory and always used lively language and adopted a kindly manner. These lectures are something a man would not be capable of giving if he had not done much writing or if he had not worked hard for many years. To give them you must have real knowledge and deep insight, and you must accurately grasp the most important key link of the complicated real life of the broad masses of people. At that time, I was deeply impressed by his lectures, which I benefited from for a long time. Before and after I attended these lectures, I also had some contacts with him. My impression of Comrade Chen Yun is of a very sober-minded leader of our party, a professional revolutionary and a great statesman who enjoys extremely high prestige and at the same time is affable, constant and convincing.

On 23 May RENMIN RIBAO published Comrade Chen Yun's lecture "On Two Tendencies Among the Party's Literary and Art Workers," which he presented in 1943. After repeated readings of the lecture, I found that he truly and perfectly knew about the work, lives, minds and feelings of the literary and art workers in Yanan. Proceeding from the revolutionary cause and in order to facilitate the improvement and development of the literary and art workers, he earnestly and graciously instructed them and admirably convinced them. Though his speech was made 40 years ago, it remains as an important cure today for the mistakes of the comrades who are engaging in literary and art work in our country. We should study this speech, use it to check our actions, improve our self-cultivation and strive to make ourselves worthy of being called revolutionary literary and art workers of the party.

Comrade Chen Yun pointed out that there are two tendencies among the literary and art workers. One is seeking special privileges and the other is self-importance. In my opinion the two phenomena are in fact one problem, namely, the problem related to the stand of a revolutionary or, to be more specific, the problems of what position a revolutionary should put himself into. If he always puts himself first and always considers himself first in everything, he will naturally regard himself as someone special and as being born to be right and more noble than other people of any time and place, and he will naturally enjoy flattery and show disgust toward criticism against him.

His arrogance may even develop to such a degree that he will be annoyed if he is not flattered. When he is successful, this kind of person will become very arrogant and look down upon all other people. But when he suffers failures, he will be dejected and will blame everyone and everything as if everyone and everything were unfair to him and must therefore be cursed. People like him always demand that other people treat them specially and take special care of them. However, in Chen Yun's opinion this care is precisely the weak point and defect of these people.

For this shows that these people have received less education from the party and are poorly integrated with the workers and peasants. This is a true and realistic opinion. However, some literary and art workers often think that the leadership does not understand literary and art work, does not understand them and does not realize the great role of writers and literary and art workers in society. Misunderstanding often occurs because of this difference in understanding and these people always discover they have not been given important roles and always think that they are not duly understood or employed. In fact, in the history of the revolution led by our party, our writers and literary and art workers normally have always received proper care and respect. This is correct and necessary. The party's policy is to unite all the people. In the course of the revolution, the party respects all kinds of people who have made their contributions to the revolution and take care of those who, for a time, have some weak points and defects, or even have committed mistakes. If we respect only history and are not confused by temporary phenomena, we can realize that everybody can see that the party is carrying out this policy and has achieved magnificant results in implementing this policy. If a comrade has a correct stand, has indeed achieved good results and can dispense with being taken care of, there is no need to demand care. When a baby is learning to talk or cannot walk steadily, he needs the support of his elders, and when a man is ill, he needs health care. However, if he is healthy, he will not ask for care. Recently I have heard some people say that the party is more kind to writers who are not party members than to party-member writers. I think that this is very normal. The Communist Party always proceeds from the interests of the public. Therefore, it should give special treatment to nonparty writers for the very reason that they are not party members, and the party should rally them to work around it and win them over. The less people understand us, the more we should be kind to them and help them to enable them to correctly understand the Communist Party and socialism. Thus, we will be able to unite the majority of the people. Since you have already been a party-member writer, you should not demand special care; on the contrary, you should go deep into society to understand more people and take part in the work of uniting the majority of the people. If a man or a writer puts himself into a correct position and realizes that first of all he is a party member and a revolutionary, he will realize that he only has the duty to serve the people and has no right to demand things from the people and the party. Thus, he will not ask for special treatment and he will become modest and affable. He will think only that he has not done enough work and will continue to steel himself and make efforts. Then he will be able to maintain his good temper in any situation and will never be finicky or complain. Then he will be able to do his work well and win the confidence of the masses of people.

The old generation of writers happened to live in a period of wars and to attend the Yanan literary and art forum. They have studied many party documents and undergone steeling in many political campaigns. Many of them have gone deep among the workers, peasants and soldiers and have greatly changed their ideology and stand and thus have adopted a completely new mental attitude. They have produced many works (including poems and theoretical comments) that accurately reflect the people's lives, are beneficial to the people and are of high artistic value. Now times have changed and 40 years have passed. During the 40 years, there have been twists and turns in the party's literary and art line. This was especially serious during the decade of catastrophe brought about by the "gang of four" when good and evil people were confounded, rights and wrongs were confused and many literary and art workers were in adverse or desperate circumstances. However, even at that time, most literary and art workers remained loyal and continued to work hard. They have lived up to the instructions of the party and the people and deserve to be called party members. However, there are a small number of people who did not respond to the call in the new situation for bringing order out of chaos and rousing ourselves for vigorous efforts to make the country prosperous. On the contrary, they used the works they wrote in the past and the persecution they suffered from the "gang of four" as their capital to pursue fame, material gain, positions and power, thus turning their previous achievements into a hinderance to their progress.

They are fond of giving directions, traveling abroad and being shown on the screen and they work perfunctorily and exercise their leadership weakly. They treat comrades discriminately, letting those who follow them prosper and turning a cold shoulder to those who dare to oppose them. They seldom carry out criticism and self-criticism and maintain the appearance of unity and of being without discord. In fact, under the calm surface, the ill feelings are deep rooted. A small number of people think that during a troubled time, it is better to mind one's own business because the memory of the persecution they suffered in the past is still fresh in their minds. They think that these things have nothing to do with them (in fact all practical problems directly or indirectly have something to do with them and with the party), and therefore can be left to drift. Even if they do oppose these things, they think it is better not to air their views because there is no use in doing so. They take little interest in study and allowed their liberalism to run rampant. When it's their turn to criticize others and when they ask for special treatment, they are full of vigor, but when it is necessary to criticize themselves they look as if they are exhausted and suffer all kinds of illnesses. Their number is small, but such practices do exist. If we hide these practices for fear of maltreatment, and if we do not bring a change to this situation and allow it to develop further, the future of our literary and art undertakings will troubled.

On the other hand, there are some young writers who happened to suffer persecution when they had just grown into a sensible age during the period of catastrophe. After the smashing of the "gang of four" they were older and more mature and had reached an age full of vigor to perform deeds. At that time, they saw that society was quite troubled and most things they heard and saw were unpleasant and undesirable. Therefore, they found that there were many things that they could write about. Most of them are people of ability who are enthusiastic to change the features of the motherland. They have a good motive to write and have indeed written quite a few good works to beautify their motherland's literary and art garden. However, just as was pointed out by Chen Yun 40 years ago, some of these people have some weak points and defects. This is chiefly because they have received less education from the party and have poorly integrated themselves with the workers, peasants and soldiers. During the past few years, our country has been making an overall readjustment in our various policies, and has been introducing from abroad some advanced scientific and technical methods, and machinery and equipment. At the same time some aspects of the bourgeois ideologies of "freedom" and "democracy" have also affected some people in our country. An unhealthy trend of worshipping foreign things has emerged in the society and communism and socialism has become, in the eyes of these people, merely the source of some failures and sufferings. This is reflected in a small number of works which begin by airing criticism and end in cursing, and which begin by denouncing a few individuals and end in condemning the whole society. These people inflated themselves to an unlimited extent and regarded all of China and all 1 billion people as appearing destitute of any good people except themselves and a few friends of theirs who think the same as they do. All the people in the world are dirty and only they are clean. These people treat their own defects as merits and describe ugly things as being beautiful. They are promoting this idea in their work. We should not blame our young people too severely for the emergence of this phenomenon. We party-member writers should do more work. Most of our party-member writers have been diligently working at their posts and writing without complaints and striving to perform their duties as party members. However, there are also a small number of party members who have been pay attention only to their work of writing and who have been turning a blind eye to the social phenomena that are happening around them. They have shown no concern for the progress of other people and have done no ideological work among the others. In doing their work, some comrades only take care of what is within the scope of his or her duties and are satisfied with themselves for not seeking privileges, receiving bribes or being corrupted. They think that by so doing they have performed their duties.

There are also some other party members who lavish praise on those whom they like, who perform their duties unconscientiously and who lack a firm stand.

Sometimes they are terribly left and sometimes they glibly talk about "democracy" and "freedom." When they are surrounded by many attendants and when they are cheered by people they become intoxicated by the attention. Long ago, Mr Lu Xun warned us to be on our guard against being killed by flattery or by reproof. Those who act in the habit of killing people with flattery or with reproof have no qualms about sacrificing other people, sacrificing art and sacrificing our cause in order to show themselves as 100 percent in the right. Our readers and our descedants urgently demand literary works that are full of enthusiasm, of high artistic value and rich with spiritual beauty that will enlighten them. True, there are negative phenomena in real life which the writers can write about and the readers can read, but our writers and readers and everyone of us more urgently want to know our future prospects: What will the future be? How will our country chart a path that will lead to prosperity? How can our society make progress and become prosperous?

How should we build the socialist spiritual civilization? We should not give vent to discontent and indignation as some people have done to seek monetary gratification. We must seriously probe into life and open up future prospects in accordance with people's desires. We should answer the following questions of our people and our youth: Where does their youth, lives, happiness and joy come from? How should they act? How can they devote all their talents and wisdom and give full play to their abilities? We should really plunge ourselves into the great construction cause of the Chinese nation. We should not act like the frog in Aesop's Fables who inflates herself by the side of an old ox until she blew up. A revolutionary writer and a literary and art worker of the party must have a strict sense of responsibility and he must also have a clear-cut stand concerning what should be encouraged and what should be rejected.

The principles that Comrade Chen Yun expounded on are easy to understand but if we want to carry them out, we must first have the ambition to serve the public and the party. Comrade Chen Yun asserted that in this speech he stressed people's defects, but at the same time he said that these defects were held by only a small number of people and even the comrades who had these defects had many strong points. When I read this speech and while I have been writing this article, I have thought more about the negative side. In fact, many of our comrades have done much work and their achievements are the main aspect of their work. Listing the above-mentioned negative phenomena is also aimed at educating myself. Since for a long time I did not take part in the regular activities of the party, my opinions on some problems cannot be free from being considered extreme and one-sided. In frankly airing my views I proceed from the hope that those who have made the mistakes will correct them and those who have not will guard against them so that our literary and art work will be daily improved and so that I myself will also be stirred up. I should not regard myself as being old or use senility as an excuse for not paying attention to the party's and the people's cause, for being overcautious and indecisive and for refusing to correct the mistakes of other people. I should learn from many old comrades and be brave to shoulder the responsibility. I should not keep silent for fear of committing mistakes. I hope that my comrade and colleagues will strengthen the unity, study hard and help one another in order to train ourselves to be resolute fighters of communism and to make new contributions to the prosperity of the socialist literary and art cause.

BISHOP YANG ON RELIGIOUS FREEDOM, AUTONOMY

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- "The draft constitution shows the freedom of religious belief is a long-range firm policy of China and not a temporary, expedient measure," said Bishop Michael Yang Gaojian, vice-chairman of the Chinese Patriotic Catholic Association, here today.

He was speaking at a meeting of the national committee of the Chinese People's Political Consulative Conference discussing the revised draft of the nation's constitution, to be submitted to the National People's Congress.

He mentioned article 35 of the draft which says: "Citizens of the People's Republic of China enjoy freedom of religious belief," and "the state protects legitimate religious activities."

The bishop, 69, said Chinese citizens have enjoyed freedom of religious belief, with both believers and non-believers alike "uniting and working hard for building a prosperous socialist country.

"With the support of governments at all levels," he said, "more than 200 churches have opened throughout the country and normal religious practices promulgated. During Saint Mary month in May, more than 20,000 went to a suburban Shanghai basilica. On Christmas and Easter, thousands attended services. Since 1981, 12 bishops have been consecrated." The bishop denounced the efforts of the Vatican to exercise authority over China's churches, saying China will run its religious affairs independently. He said the clause forbidding domination of religious affairs by any other country "safeguards China's independence, dignity and the sovereignty of China's churches.

"Chinese churches were once subjected to the control of the Vatican as a tool of colonialism," he said. "Since the founding of the People's Republic, however, all our clergy and laity have stood up to struggle against imperialism, encourage patriotism, free our churches from the control of the Vatican and administer them independently.

"However," he said, "some hostile forces inside foreign churches who have never reconciled themselves to our victory are trying to interfere with and sabotage our churches in an attempt to put them under their control again. This can never be tolerated," he said.

Also speaking at the meeting were Zhao Puchu and Zheng Guo, president and vice-president of the Buddhist Association of China, Imam al-Hajji Salah An Şhiwei, vice-president of the Islamic Association of China, and Yan Jiale, vice-president of the Christian Council of China. All agreed the draft made clear the state's policies on religion and was much clearer than the 1954 Constitution. The meeting was presided over by Burhan Shahidi, vice-chairman of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee.

HIGHWAYS BEING BUILT AT ANNUAL RATE OF 10,000 KM

[Excerpt] In recent years, our country has been building highways at the rate of 10,000 km per year. By the end of 1981, the total mileage of highways open to traffic was over 900,000 km. At present, except for a county atop the Kunlun Moutains in Xizang, more than 2,000 counties throughout the country are linked by highway. Three decades ago, the highway mileage open to traffic was only 70,000 km and there was no highway in most of the mountainous frontier areas and regions inhabited by national minorities. For example, in the Xizang Autonomous Region, there was not a single highway before liberation, but the region's total highway mileage has reached over 20,000 km since. Four major highways link the region with other provinces.

Currently, over 90 percent of villages and townships in the rural areas have highways, forming a nationwide highway transportation network with Beijing, the capital, as its center and linking all provincial capitals and major economic zones and reaching the deep countryside, mines and mountainous frontier areas. Over 20,000 km of highways have been built in Sichuan in recent years, bringing the total highway mileage in the province to 84,000 km by last year and topping other provinces in the country.

Li Fengping Report

[Text] The Fourth Session of the Fifth Zhejiang Provincial People's Congress solemnly opened this morning at the Great Hall of the People in Hangzhou. The emblem of the People's Republic of China was hung at the center of the wall behind the rostrum, which was flanked by 10 red banners. The rostrum was decorated with flowers and small pine trees. A total of 881 deputies from all fields of endeavor in the province attended the session.

Tie Ying, executive chairman of the session and chairman of the provincial people's congress, presided over the opening ceremony. At 0830 Comrade Tie Ying announced the opening of the session, followed by the national anthem.

On behalf of the provincial people's government, Governor Li Fengping delivered a report on the work of the provincial government. The report was divided into the following three parts: 1) review of the work in the past year; 2) the main task for the next year; and 3) the improvement of the work of the government.

Governor Li Fengping pointed out in his report: Since the convocation of the 3rd session of the provincial people's congress, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee, and with the guidance of the policy of achieving economic readjustments and political stability, Zhejiang has scored fresh achievements in all fields of endeavor, thanks to the joint efforts made by the people's governments at all levels, the broad masses of cadres and the people of all walks of life. At present, the political and economic situation in the province is fine. Zhejiang has witnessed marked improvements in economic construction in the course of carrying out readjustments. Various sectors of the national economy have done a good job in fulfilling their production plans.

Dwelling upon the main task for the next year, Governor Li Fengping said: We must continue to implement the policy of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and improving the economy; fulfill and overfulfill the plans for economic and social developments in the province; and score new achievements in developing the material and spiritual civilization.

It is necessary to penetratingly and extensively develop the "five stresses and four beauties" activities, develop the socialist spiritual civilization, do a good job in studying and discussing the draft of the revised constitution, and further strengthen socialist democracy and the legal system.

Touching on the improvement in the work of the government, Governor Li Fengping said: Work has been carried out to consolidate and build the government organizations at various levels in the past year. A number of middle-aged and young cadres and personnel specialized in certain fields have been taken in by the leading groups of the various departments of the provincial people's government and by those of the municipal and county governments. The work style of the government offices at all levels has shown an upturn and their work efficiency has improve somewhat. But the problems of over-staffing, duplication of effort and low efficiency are still serious in some offices. This requires us to step up preparations for streamlining these government offices, to intensify cadres' education and training, and to improve their work style and work methods. This will be part of our efforts to further promote the unity between the army and the government and the unity between the army and the people.

In conclusion, Governor Li Fengping called on the people of the province to hold aloft the banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and, under the leadership of the CCP, to valiantly press ahead to build a powerful, modern socialist country which is highly democratic and highly civilized and to build a new and prosperous Zhejiang.

His report was greeted with warm applause.

Other executive chairmen present today were Wang Fang, Liu Dan, Liu Zizheng, Xia Qi, Li Yuhua, Li Lanyan, Wang Qidong, Yu Jiyi and Xing Zitao. Also seated on the rostrum were responsible persons of the provincial party committee and the provincial people's government Chen Zuolin, Xue Ju, Cui Jian, (Wang Jinyou), (Wang Yaoting), (Li Chaolong), Zhai Xiwu, Li Kechang, (Zhang Chaoman), (Zhang Tingchai), Chen Anyu, (Pan Yuanbin), Liu Yifu and (Wu Zhizhuan) and the provincial CPPCC committee chairman, Mao Qihua.

Present at the session as observers were members of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee who are attending its fourth session. Also attending the session as observers were NPC deputies currently in Zhejiang, responsible persons of the standing committees of the municipal and county people's congresses and of the municipal and county people's governments, responsible persons of the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's government.

The session began group discussion this afternoon to discuss Governor Li Fengping's report on the work of the government.

Tie Ying at Session

[Excerpts] Yesterday afternoon and today the Fourth Session of the Fifth Zhejiang Provincial People's Congress held panel discussions on Governor Li Fengping's report on the work of government. The panelists pointed out that, in the past year, the province has witnessed industrial and agricultural production increases, registered a slight surplus in the balance of revenue and expenditure and improved the rural economic structure while raising economic efficiency in industrial production and continually improving the people's livelihood. All this shows that the situation in the province is improving year by year. Although we have scored achievements, we must guard against arrogance and rashness and continue to press forward. As for the five guidelines for future work and the task for this year put forward by the governor in his report, the panelists said they are in conformity with the actual conditions in the province.

When the deputies from Jiaxing County touched on the present shortages in energy supply, Comrade Tie Ying pointed out that the shortages involved the problem of energy conservation and exploitation of new energy resources. Ours is a province in which energy resources are rare. This entails conscientiously implementing the rules and regulations on conserving energy, replacing high energy-consuming equipment and machinery, and reducing our energy consumption in every possible way. In addition, we should exploit every potential energy source, build small hydroelectric power stations in the mountainous areas and construct marsh gas tanks in rural areas. Moreover, efforts are needed to develop tidal energy, wind power stations and other new energy resources.

Deputies from grassroots rural units exchanged their experiences in improving the responsibility systems in agricultural production. They put forward many measures for the protection of farmland, production development and population control.

Wang Fang and other vice chairmen of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress joined the deputies in discussing the report on the work of the government.

[Excerpts] The Fourth Session of the Fifth Zhejiang Provincial People's Congress held a plenary session on the morning of 20 June. The meeting listened to a report delivered by (Zhang Qi), chairman of the provincial planning committee, on the 1982 draft economic and social development plan.

In the report, Chairman (Zhang Qi) said: In 1981 Zhejiang Province resolutely implemented the policy of continuing economic readjustment and achieving greater political stability. Generally speaking, the economic plan was well implemented. Despite frequent natural disasters, we gathered fairly good agricultrual harvests, and the 1981 total agricultural output value increased 6 percent over 1980. Grain and cotton production decreased due to natural disasters, but the rural industrial, sideline and diversified undertakings developed quite rapidly. In the course of readjustment, industral production continued its steady growth, industrial structure was improved, and total industrial output value increased by 13.7 percent over 1980.

On 1982 tasks, Chairman (Zhang Qi) said: The 1982 plan sets a general demand for a 4 percent increase in total agricultural output value; a 6 percent, or better yet, 8 percent, increase in total industrial output value; an 8 percent increase in retail commodity sales; and a 3.7 percent increase in revenue over 1981. It calls for keeping capital construction investment at the same level as 1981 and demands further development and improvement of science, education, culture and public health.

Executive Chairman (Liu Zisheng) presided over today's general meeting. Members of the provincial CPPCC committee attending the fourth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee were present at the general meeting as observers. Deputies discussed these three reports at group meetings.

In his report on the work of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, Vice chairman Wang Fang pointed out: The standing committee of the provincial people's congress called a number of meetings and discusses 26 topics on the agenda over the past year and passed resolutions and decisions on important matters. Vice Chairman Wang Fang said: The standing committee of the provincial people's congress has, over the past year, also undertaken the job of formulating, discussing and approving a total of nine local regulations, including the regulation governing urban sanitation control, draft regulations for trial use in Zhejiang Province governing planned parenthood, trial regulations on the protection of oceanic and aquatic resources of Zhejiang Province, and the provisional regulations governing the protection of vegetable bases in Zhejiang Province. The formulation of these regulations has a positive impact on the rule of law, on safeguarding the people's interests and on promoting socialist construction. To safeguard the dignity of law, it is necessary to attach importance to publicizing the rule of law, to strengthen inspection and supervision and to wage a struggle against all illegal activities. To ensure smooth progress in the four modernizations, we must, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, uphold the four fundamental principles, resolutely strike at serious crimes in the economic field and do a good job in developing spiritual civilization.

Gao Wenquan, president of the provincial higher people's court, and Zhang Shixiang, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, gave work reports on the work of the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate over the past year. Since the third session of the fifth provincial people's congress, the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate have faithfully implemented the resolution of the provincial people's congress and dealt with criminal activities resolutely over the past year while concentrating efforts on consolidating social order. They have also waged struggle against serious economic crimes and achieved initial results and given full play to the role of the people's courts and the procuratorates. In their reports they put forth future work tasks and pledged to strengthen the socialist legal system, to carry the struggle against economic crimes through to the end and to further improve social order.

Tie Ying Report

[Text] The Fourth Session of the Fifth Zhejiang Provincial People's Congress held a plenary meeting this morning. Tie Ying, first secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee and chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, made a report on the current situation and tasks at the meeting. Responsible comrades of the provincial party committee and the provincial people's government, members attending the fourth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee and comrades attending the CPPCC session as observers, and responsible comrades of provincial organizations concerned, attended the meeting. The meeting was presided over by Comrade Li Fengping, secretary of the provincial party committee and governor of Zhejiang.

In his report Comrade Tie Ying first analyzed the international situation. Next, he talked about the domestic situation and several important current tasks. Comrade Tie Ying said: Realization of the four modernizations is our party's strategic goal for the new period. To achieve this goal, we must uphold the four fundamental principles. To adhere to the socialist road and achieve the magnificent goal of socialist modernization, we must have four basic guarantees. These four basic guarantees are also the major tasks the party Central Committee has been and is engaged in.

The first major task is to restructure the administration and the system. The current restructuring of government departments is not simply reduction and merging of departments and cuts in staff, but a profound revolution. Its basic purpose is to eliminate all kinds of abuses and malpractices in our organizations, structure, system and work style so that our superstructure will better suit the economic base and accelerate the progress of our socialist modernization. In the coming year we will begin to restructure the administration at the provincial level. We should start now to complete all the preparatory work.

The second major task is to carry the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field through to the end. In the past 5 months or so, party committees and governments at various levels in the province have done a great deal of work and exposed and handled a number of important cases. Initial victories have been won in the struggle. Practice in the struggle over the past few months has shown that it is absolutely necessary to strike at the serious criminal activities in the economic field. It is an important manifestation of class struggle under the new historical conditions in our country's socialist society. We should, on the one hand, persist in implementing the policy of opening to the world and [passage indistinct].

Cultural development must have as its main content the following two aspects: One is the development of education, science, culture, art, public health and physical culture, and the other is ideological and moral education. The two are different, but also interrelated and mutually influencing. We call on party organizations at various levels to firmly grasp ideological and political work in the light of the characteristics of the new period, adhere to the ideological position of socialism and communism and forcefully and convincingly criticize all kinds of erroneous ideas and actions harmful to the socialist cause. It is necessary to study and disseminate Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, study modern Chinese history and the history of the CCP, study the party's line, principles and policies and foster a proletarian world outlook.

The fourth major task is to consolidate the party ranks and strengthen and improve party leadership. Rather remarkable results have now been achieved in normalizing inner-party life, reviving the party's fine traditions and work style and strengthening the ties between the party and the masses of the people. However, the problem of impurity in ideology, work style and organization still exists in our party. This requires that we continue to make great efforts to find solutions.

The ongoing struggle against serious crimes in the economic field is also one of the most effective measures for party consolidation and rectification. Through the struggle, the body of our party will become healthier; the party's fighting capacity will be further enhanced; and the party's work style, the social atmosphere and social order will all see a greater change for the better.

Comrade Tie Ying also pointed out: We must pay attention to the major task of studying and discussing the draft revised constitution.

Comrade Tie Ying said in conclusion: At present, the international situation is in our favor. The domestic situation is very good. Under the circumstances, we must heighten our spirit, increase our confidence, do still better in economic construction and develop in depth the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field.

By grasping these two links firmly and well, we assuredly will win still greater victories in our socialist material and cultural development.

[Summary] Responsible comrades of the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee met representatives of old rural party members who are not divorced from production in Guangzhou on 30 June. The veterans are currently attending a forum. Provincial CCP committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi and Secretaries Liu Tianfu, Liang Lingguang and Li Jianzhen took part in this activity.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi proposed three points to be learned from these veterans: "1) wholeheartedly serving the people without claiming credit or displaying arrogance; 2) being happy to be common laborers without pursuing fame and profit; 3) making revolution all their lives without losing color or coming to a halt."

Liu Tianfu also spoke. After praising the veterans, he expressed the hope that they would do a good job in propaganda work on returning to their units. He said: "The rural situation has been very good since the third plenary session. However, some peasants are now afraid that the policies will change. I hope that when you go back you will publicize among the masses the fact that the policies of the third plenary session will not change and the production responsibility systems will not be changed. They will be perfected day by day."

Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee Ren Zhongyi, Li Jianzhen, Wang De, Yin Linping, Kou Qingyan, Deng Yifan and Xu Shijie visited various old party members and cadres in the Guangzhou area on the eve of the party anniversary.

Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee, the provincial people's government, the provincial CPPC committee and the provincial military district, including Ren Zhongyi, Liu Tianfu, Li Jianzhen, Wu Nansheng and Wang De, attended the reception.

Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi spoke at the reception, saying: "The CCP was founded 61 years ago. This is the 61st year in which the members of the CCP, another stepping into the breach as one falls, have been bravely struggling for the liberation of the Chinese nation and the well-being of the people. Every Communist Party member, old or new, must look back on the course of struggle which our party has taken and by no means forget the past arduous struggle. We must not forget that the great victory of the Chinese people's revolution has been hard-earned. As we cherish our own eyes, we must cherish and develop this hard-earned achievement. He emphatically pointed out: "We must seriously straighten out the ranks of the party, further strengthen and improve party leadership and actively train and select the successors to the revolutionary cause to ensure that the force of cadres becomes more revolutionary, more knowledgeable, more professional and younger and the combat effectiveness of party organizations at all levels is enhanced." GUANGDONG HOLDS MEETING ON TRYING ECONOMIC CASES

[Text] Recently the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee held a meeting in Guangzhou on trying economic criminal cases. The meeting discussed and examined some typical cases and discussed how to further implement the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field and how to develop this struggle in depth. More than 80 responsible cadres from various prefectural and municipal CCP committees, planning commissions, people's procuratorates and courts, as well as from relevant departments directly under the provincial people's government, attended the meeting. Ren Zhongyi and Liu Tianfu also attended the meeting on the last day and gave speeches.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Comrade Kou Qingyan gave a closing speech on how to further carry out the struggle. He said that it is wrong for some people to think that since the handling of the long-pending cases has been stressed, the struggle seems to be coming to an end and that we can have a breathing spell. The provincial CCP committee holds that the seriousness of the economic criminal activities in our province must not be underestimated. Although we have scored great achievements over the past 5 months, this is only a good beginning. Of the economic criminal cases which should be investigated, only 15 percent have been thoroughly investigated. Our tasks are still very arduous. The relaxed attitude is obviously wrong. Comrade Kou Qingyan pointed out that at present, it is necessary to do a good job in handling the serious and major cases. This is the key link in further carrying out the struggle. Leading cadres are required to handle such cases personally and grasp one or two typical cases, especially those involving leading cadres at or above the county level. Principal leading comrades must have a hand in the handling of these cases and guide the work personally, just as the provincial CCP committee is doing now. Comrade Kou Qingyan said that in this struggle, it is necessary to act in accordance with the policy and principles of the CCP Central Committe on handling economic criminal cases. Mass movements should not be waged and everyone should refrain from making self-criticisms. Involving innocent relatives of the criminal offenders or obtaining confessions by compulsion to give them credence is not allowed.

GUANGZHOU RIBAO ON HITTING AT ECONOMIC CRIME

[Commentator's article: "Avoid Relaxation and Continue To Carry Out the Struggle in Depth"]

[Text] We have scored initial achievements in the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field and the struggle is now developing in depth in our city.

Under the influence of the policy and decisions of the party and government, by the end of May, 832 people had made a clean breast of their crimes. Of these people 20 had committed economic crimes involving over 10,000 yuan, 39 over 5,000 yuan and 207 over 1,000 yuan. The cases are being handled carefully and the work is progressing successfully. Quite a few units have conscientiously summed up their experiences and drawn lessons from past mistakes and deviations, and plugged up loopholes in this respect. The struggle is developing healthily.

However, we must also realize that the struggle has just begun and only some initial results have been achieved. Complete success is still far from being realized. The development of the struggle is uneven in various units in our city. Some units have scored greater achievements through concentrated efforts, while other units have not. Some serious and major cases have been discovered, and greater efforts are required to make extensive and thorough investigations and study of these cases. Meanwhile, as there are all kinds of obstructions, our tasks are still very arduous. Unfortunately, an attitude of relaxation and fearing difficulties has grown among our cadres and masses. Some people says: "It seems that the struggle is coming to an end, as the papers and radio broadcasts are carrying fewer reports in this respect and the leaders have less to say about it." Some of the comrades who are handling the cases are afraid of being retaliated against if the cases are not investigated and handled thoroughly. All this is disadvantageous to the further development of the struggle.

In order to further carry out the struggle, it is necessary to educate the broad masses of cadres and people with the numerous facts revealed in the previous period of the struggle and instill in them a better understanding of the seriousness and danger of criminal activities in the economic field and the necessity, the imperativeness and the protracted nature of this struggle. The facts which were exposed in the initial stage of this struggle amply show that bourgeous ideology has seriously corroded the body of our party and our revolutionary ranks. If we do not keep a clear head and heighten our vigilance, we will inevitably be influenced. We must also clearly see that the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field is not merely a short-term struggle for the present. We cannot win complete success with only one or two battles. The struggle must be carried out constantly and unremittingly for a long period of time. Since Guangzhou is the forward position in resisting the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas, the struggle in this city is especially acute and complicated. We must never lower our guard. If a good job is not done in this struggle, the realization of the four modernizations cannot be guaranteed and the party's work style and the social atmosphere cannot be improved. On the other hand, quite a few problems have been exposed in some units, and some of them even involve the leading cadres. If these problems are not thoroughly investigated and solved, we will prove ourselves irresponsible to the masses in these units. Therefore, we must be determined to carry this struggle through to the end and never wait and see and let opportunity slip.

The focus in carrying out the struggle in depth is firmly grasping the serious and major cases and making a thorough investigation and study of these cases. Instead of trying to attend to big and small matters all at once, we must grasp the focus when doing anything. The focus at present is to concentrate our efforts to make a thorough investigation of serious and major cases. There are comparatively greater obstructions to handling the cases involving leading cadres. Leaders in the departments in charge of handling these cases must take a clear-cut stand and adopt strong and effective measures in handling the cases. They must be impartial and incorruptible in executing the law and deal heavy blows to the serious economic criminals, whoever they are, wherever they come from and however high their positions may be. There can be no exceptions and no one is allowed to intercede for, be partial to or harbor criminals. Anyone who does so will be investigated and held responsible. As to those units which have not done well in this struggle and have not paid enough attention to the investigation of the cases which have already been exposed, immediate measures should be adopted to help them or to examine their work.

In order to make the struggle develop more healthily and deeply, we must grasp and implement the party's policies in a correct way and strictly distinguish between the two different types of contradictions.

We must draw a clear distinction between mistakes in work and illegal and criminal activities and between smuggling, selling smuggled goods, corruption, bribery, speculating and swindling and problems occurring due to the imperfection of some regulations and methods in carrying out the open-door policy and the policy of enlivening the domestic market. When sitting in judgment on a case, it is necessary to draw a clear distinction between corruption committed by individuals and appropriation of public property by the collectives. A mass movement in which everyone makes self-criticisms and suspects each other of being guilty should not be waged in this struggle. However, it is necessary to follow the mass line and lay stress on collecting evidence through investigation and study and acting in accordance with judicial procedures and legal formalities. If we act in this manner, the scope of the struggle will not be over-expanded and good people will not be wronged. So the comrades who are handling the cases should not worry about this. If some people have really made mistakes and are proved innocent after thorough investigations, by clearing problems, they will no longer be suspected by the masses and the load on their minds will thus be removed. Thus, they do not have the slightest reason to complain or even to retaliate against the comrades who have handled their cases. Both party discipline and state law do not allow them to do so.

The situation of the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field in our city is good, and the struggle is developing in depth. The CCP organizations and administrative offices at various levels must continue to do a good job in raising and unifying the understanding of the cadres and the masses and continue to strengthen ideological and political work. They must strive to prevent the growth of an attitude of relaxation and do a good job in dividing work among the leaders, organizing forces to handle the cases and resolutely carrying on this struggle until complete success is achieved.

[Summary] "From 9 to 13 June the Guangxi Regional CCP Committee held a meeting in Nanning which was attended by the responsible members of the various municipal and prefectural CCP committees, intermediate people's courts and procuratorial branch offices. In the light of the situation in the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field in the previous stage, the meeting studied the question of drawing clear lines of demarcation in applying the relevant policies and made arrangements for the tasks in the next stage. Regional CCP committee Secretary Zhao Maoxun and regional people's government Vice Chairman Shi Qingsheng attended and addressed the meeting."

"The meeting pointed out that since January this year, a number of serious economic cases in our region have been made clear and dealt with. More than 4.4 million yuan of illicit money and public funds have been recovered."

"Under the influence of the party's policies and state laws, 1,441 persons have given themselves up to the political and legal organs and prefectural CCP committees by making a clean breast of their crimes and returning 1.59 million yuan of illicit money. Through this struggle we have vigorously cracked down on economic criminal activities, educated and redeemed a number of cadres and promoted the improvement of party work style and social mood. However, viewed from the region as a whole, the struggle has just started and it is still necessary for us to concentrate our efforts on investigating and dealing with the cases that have come to light. The party and government organs at various levels should, therefore, conscientiously sum up and check up on the work in the previous stage and carry the struggle through to the end by adding to our achievements and solving the existing problems."

"The meeting stressed that it is necessary to further make clear the focal point in cracking down on serious criminal activites in the economic field and pay close attention to investigating and dealing with major cases. It is necessary to place the focal point of our work on investigating and dealing with current major cases in government units, enterprises and institutions, particularly on cases involving the leaders of the units. In the course of investigating and dealing with cases, it is necessary to strictly distinguish between and correctly handle the two different types of contradictions, have a correct grasp of the party's policies, uphold the principle of seeking truth from facts and lay stress on the weight of evidence and on investigation and study. It is forbidden to obtain confessions by compulsion and then give them credence." It is necessary to draw clear lines of demarcation in applying various policies.

The meeting pointed out that the party and government organs at various levels should conduct education in the struggle against corrosion among party members and cadres. The CCP committees at various levels should strengthen leadership over this struggle and the responsible comrades should pay personal attention to major cases. The prefectural CCP committees and the political and legal departments should coordinate their work well. The propaganda, cultural and press units should give full play to the might of public opinion by giving wide publicity to this struggle.

GUIZHOU RIBAO ON STRUGGLE AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIME

[Report on 18 June GUIZHOU RIBAO editorial: "Launch in Depth the Struggle To Hit at Serious Economic Crime"]

[Text] In the past few months, initial achievements have been scored in the struggle against serious economic crime in our province. Many serious criminal cases of bribery, corruption, fraud and speculation have been exposed and dealt with in many places. Many long-pending cases are being resolved at the moment. More than 400 persons have voluntarily confessed their crimes and given themselves up in the province. The criminals have been frightened, and there is a good change in the social mood. This is but a skirmish in the struggle, which should be conducted in depth and breath.

In present situation, seven cases exposed have not yet been thoroughly investigated. Some serious criminal cases may not have been exposed yet. Even in the cases already exposed, there is little progress. In some cases, only the persons of less importance are investigated, while the major culprits still remain untouched. The development of the struggle is uneven. We must make persistent efforts and carry the struggle through to the end. Any thought of relaxing efforts and losing vigilance is wrong.

Why are there breakthroughs in some units and areas, but not in other units and areas where crimes have to be exposed and dealt with? The key lies in whether or not the leadership attaches importance to the work and how it carries it out. If the leadership is resolute and determined and firmly grasps the leadership of the struggle in its hands, it can certainly organize forces, mobilize the masses, and build up a momentum so as to hit hard at the criminals. On the other hand, if the leadership is irresolute and lacks determination, the struggle cannot be carried out.

Some comrades fail to see the seriousness, danger and harmfulness of illegal and criminal activities in the economic field, and fail to realize the important significance of the struggle. They harbor the wrong idea that the struggle against economic crimes simply means arresting some culprits guilty of corruption and robbery, who should be dealt with by the discipline inspection committees and judicial departments, so there is no need to make such great efforts. Some comrades even go so far as to set the struggle to hit at economic crime against other work. They are afraid that carrying out the struggle might impede industrial and agricultural production. They fail to see the danger to our party from corruption by capitalist ideology. They fail to see the danger brought about by economic crime in implementing our policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the economy at home and smoothly carrying out socialist modernization. Without clearing up such confused understanding in our minds, we will be irresolute and weak in this struggle. Therefore, to carry out the struggle in depth, it is necessary for us to earnestly study the decision of the CCP Central Committee and State Council, and unify our ideological understanding. This is extremely important. All those comrades who have a wrong understanding of the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field must brace themselves and become sober.

In order to carry out the struggle against economic crimes more deeply, we cannot be satisfied with general leadership and simple arrangements. It is necessary to exercise specific leadership in the struggle. Greater efforts should be made in achieving breakthroughs in important cases. The principal responsible comrades must inquire into the cases in person and conduct investigation and study. They should help the personnel in charge of the cases to clear away obstacles, analyze the cases and make a judgement on each case so as to settle it properly. The cases exposed should be investigated and settled as soon as possible. No delay should be allowed.

With the deepening of the struggle, new clues must be found. If there are insufficient forces to handle cases, they should be augmented and strengthened. In the struggle, it is necessary for us to implement policy without the slightest deviation and grasp the main points without blurring the demarcation lines in policy.

SICHUAN RIBAO URGES ENLIVENING OF ECONOMY

["Economic Chat" column by Yang Liufeng [2799 2692 7364]: "Eliminating Maggots and Enlivening the Economy"]

[Text] Some serious economic criminal activities recently exposed by various localities are related to some of the companies of an enterprise nature, agricultural, industrial and commercial joint enterprises and enterprises run by communes and brigades which were established in the course of economic reforms. Dealing severe blows at economic criminal activities in these enterprises is beneficial to further enlivening the economy and speeding up the pace of the four modernizations.

It goes without saying that this is a good thing. However, some comrades attribute the criminal activities to the policies of enlivening the economy. They notice the above-mentioned economic crimes and unhealthy trends that have emerged in some enterprises. Thus, they negate the whole economic reform, blame and reproach the companies of an enterprise nature and the agricultural, industrial and commercial joint enterprises and enterprises run by communes and brigades. Their reproaches are unreasonable and incorrect. Some cadres, staff and workers of these enterprises are very downhearted and are discouraged by these reproaches. In fact, this is unnecessary.

From a truth-seeking point of view, the orientation of the provincial economic reform over the past few years has been correct and the development has been healthy. We have scored tremendous results and made contributions to enlivening the rural and urban markets and developing the national economy. As a matter of fact, there is no denying that we have created opportunities foe the evildoers due to the disastrous effects of the 10 year's internal disasters in the economic field, the unsavory trends in society and the fact that we lack experience and do not have tight control over administrative work. The evildoers sneaked into some enterprises, flaunted the banner of the state economy, collective economy or economic joint ventures and carried out various criminal activities. Some party members and cadres have been shot by bourgeois sugar-coated bullets and collude with those lawless people. As for the unsavory trends which emerged in some enterprises run by communes and brigades, they are closely related to practical difficulties, weak leadership and unhealthy administrative system. As a matter of fact, we must deal with the economic criminals according to law. As for problems which are not economic crimes, we must solve them mainly by strengthening ideological education and perfecting the administrative system. In particular, we must pay attention to distinguishing the small number of economic criminals in enterprises from the whole enterprise. We must not dampen the enthusiasm of the enterprises once we find problems; neither should we put all the blame on the staff and workers of the enterprises and on the economic reform. We must cherish and protect the enthusiasm of staff and workers and the masses to launch economic reforms and enliven the economy, and help them solve practical problems. By so doing, after we have dealt blows at economic criminal activities and eliminated maggots that harm the enterprises, we will further prmote the economic reform, the companies of an enterprise nature, agricultural, industrial and commercial joint enterprises and enterprises run by communes and brigades will be more vigorous and the national economy will become prosperous day by day.

[Summary] Today's SICHUAN RIBAO carries on its front page a letter from a reader, (Zhang Mingwei), which says: "Over the past 1 or 2 years, the trees along railroads and highways in Sichuan Province have been seriously destroyed. One-third of the afforested sections along the railroads have been destroyed. Many trees along highways have also been destroyed." In addition, the land lawfully reserved for railroads and highways has been encroached upon. While dividing farmland responsibility, rural areas in Ziyang, Zizhong and Neijiang Counties along the Chengdu-Chongqing railroad line divided among commune members slopes and the land on both sides of the railroad tracks which are lawfully reserved for the railroads so that they could cultivate crops on these areas. In his letter, (Zhang Mingwei) said: "It is hoped that the foregoing situation will be brought to the attention of governments at all levels along the railroads and highways, and that publicity and education will be strengthened, the system put on a sound basis and the laws and discipline strictly enforced. In coordination with departments in charge, it is hoped that the governments will strengthen management and supervision to ensure afforestation along the railroads and highways."

Along with this letter, SICHUAN RIBAO today also published a short commentary entitled "A Serious Problem Worthy of Notice." The short commentary says: "The serious situation of the destruction of trees along railroads and highways which was disclosed by reader (Zhang Mingwei) must be brought to the attention of the people's governments at all levels. With a view to doing well in afforestation and cherishing existing trees, party organizations and governments at all levels must take vigorous measures to conduct universal propaganda, seriously enforce the law on afforestation, make it known to every household and make everyone cherish trees. We must strictly implement the responsibility system of controlling and protecting trees, seriously implement the policies and ensure that whoever controls and protects trees receives benefits from them. Individuals who flout the law and whose cases are serious must be punished in accordance with the law. In close coordination with local governments, railroad and highway departments must rely on the masses to strengthen the management and protection of railroads and highways and put the system on a sound basis."

YUNNAN ORGANS' MEETING MARKS PARTY ANNIVERSARY

[Summary] The CCP committee of the Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee organs and the CCP committee of the provincial government organs jointly held a report meeting on 29 June to mark the 61st anniversary of the founding of the CCP. Provincial CCP committee Second Secretary Li Qiming delivered a lecture entitled "Struggle To Uphold the Party's Communist Purity." Li Qiming pointed out: "China has now entered a new historical period. Since the third plenary session, the CCP Central Committee has reestablished the Marxist ideological, political and organizational line and stipulated and instituted a series of correct principles and policies. The whole of socialist economic and cultural construction is now embarking on a track, suited to our national condition, of sustained advance, with stress on practical results and steady development. Viewing the situation as a whole, our party is good and combat effective. However, we must also realize that, apart from the danger of war, there is also the danger of peaceful evolution for our party, our state and our socialist cause in the new historical conditions.

This danger comes mainly from the corruption and degeneration of unsteady elements in the party. Every party member, especially the leading cadres, must have a clear understanding on this point."

Li Qiming also pointed out: "We must, with a high degree of awareness, do a good job in building the party, and build it into a strong core that can better unite and lead the people of all nationalities throughout the country to carry out socialist modernization. As far as the individual party members are concerned, they must faithfully carry out the solemn oath they took when they joined the party. They must always remember their purpose in wholeheartedly serving the people and that attaining the great ideal of communism is the party's ultimate aim. They must struggle for communism all their lives. The most important thing is that they must have firm belief and trust in communism and spontaneously apply communist ideology and morality to guide and circumscribe their words and deeds.

"In upholding the party's communist purity, it is also necessary to proceed from the perspective of the party's entire work and carry out building of the party itself in terms of organization, system, ideology and work style. At present the Central Committee has proposed and is gradually carrying out reforms of structure and system throughout the country, the struggle against serious economic crime, the building of socialist civilization, and rectification of the party ranks and adherence to and improvement of party leadership. These are four fundamental guarantees, on the basis of the four basic principles, for building socialist modernization. In fact, they are also fundamental measures for maintaining the party's purity and increasing its combat effectiveness. They represent the most realistic and effective rectification of the party under present conditions. The comrades of the whole party must unify their understanding and concentrate efforts on achieving success in these major tasks."

Li Qiming said in conclusion: "Every party member must unswervingly follow the demand of the Central Committee and uphold communist purity, and make his own proper contribution to build socialist modernization and attaining the great ideal of communism."

(He Changwen), secretary of the CCP committee of the provincial CCP committee organs, presided at the meeting.

[Summary] A meeting of directors of propaganda departments of prefectural, autonomous prefectural, municipal and county CCP committees was held recently in Kunming. Li Xingwang, deputy secretary of the Yunnan Provincial CCP Committee, attended and spoke. "How to carry out ideological and political work well in the course of building socialist modernization was the central topic for discussion at this meeting." For half a month the propaganda department directors studied the important speeches of leading comrades of the central authorities and the spirit of relevant documents. They came to understand: "The fundamental task of the propaganda departments of CCP committees at all levels is to look into the characteristics of propaganda work for the new period, strengthen ideological education and use the ideology of communism and the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism to educate the cadres, the masses, the whole working class and all people to enhance their spontaneity for adhering to the four basic principles and to encourage and arouse all people to enthusiastically build a powerful, modern socialist country."

The meeting held that the scope of ideological and political work now includes publicizing the building of socialist spiritual civilization, publicizing the striking of blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, the transformation of organs and enterprises, the improvement and readjustment of party organizations, strengthening of party leadership and so on. They are all aimed at building a powerful, modern socialist country.

After summing up experiences, the comrades present at the meeting discussed and decided on the key points of propaganda work in the second half of this year, which are to continue to publicize spiritual civilization, make the "five stresses and four beauties" campaign regular and systematic, organize the cadres at their posts to study Comrade Mao Zedong's philosophical works, train party members in turn and strengthen education in party discipline, party work style and party spirit. The meeting held (?that it is necessary to uphold) the unity of nationalities and conduct education in patriotism.

BEIJING COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBERSHIP INCREASES

[Text] Beijing, July 1 (XINHUA) -- Beijing's Communist Party organization has admitted 67,500 new members, of which 20 percent are intellectuals, in the last three years, according to a city CCP committee conference.

Most of the new members, of a total municipality membership of 650,000, are outstanding factory, scientific, research and teaching workers or labor heroes. Half are below 35 years old.

According to Chen Xitong, secretary of the CCP Beijing Municipal Committee, party education will be carried out among its new members as well as veterans, instilling the ideas and morals of a party member, thus strengthening their ability to oppose bourgeois ideas and rectify the party's working style.

Special efforts have been made in the last few years to recruit party members among specialists, scholars, researchers, professors, engineers and doctors. The newly admitted membership now totals 7,000, Chen Xitong said. Party membership among the city's intelligentsia has increased, he added. The city's party organizations admitted 240,000 members during the 10-year Cultural Revolution, he said.

He said the education is designed to further the line, policies and principles of the third plenary session of the eleventh Central Committee of the party, held in 1978. Party members are required to restore and carry forward the party's fine traditions and working style, and to maintain purity as a communist. The party's leading cadres in particular, Chen said, are required to set strict demands on their own children and bring them up as successors to the revolutionary cause.

BEIJING MUNICIPAL PARTY COMMITTEE HOLDS MEETING

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, the Beijing Municipal Party Committee held a meeting at which arrangements were made for the party members of the city to carry out the work of fighting against the corruption of capitalist ideology and conducting education in communist thought. The meeting pointed out that this educational movement is closely linked with the current struggle against serious crime in the economic field. The meeting emphasized that this educational movement is a study of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and an education for party members in party spirit, party style and party discipline. It is also an effective measure for strengthening the building of the party. It was requested at the meeting that all leading comrades at various levels of all the units practically strengthen their leadership and carry out the work step by step, conducting checks and summaries, thus doing a good job in the educational movement.

The major methods for struggling against the corruption of capitalist ideology and conducting education for party members in communist thought are: carrying out the spirit of rectification movement; adhering to positive education by positive example; integrating theory with practice; and through criticism and self-criticism. All leading cadres at various levels must first study the documents well. They must, in close connection with the practice of the present struggle, carry out work by summing up experience and holding meetings. All ordinary party members must be trained in groups and by stages. In the educational movement, it is necessary to guide party members in correctly realizing the seriousness and harmfulness of the corruption of capitalist ideology, as well as the necessity and protracted nature of the struggle against it. Only thus can we adhere to the four basic principles and uphold the communist world outlook and strive to be staunch, sober and capable Marxists in the struggle against corruption.

We must also do our utmost in carrying out the line and policy since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and guide the broad masses to fight for the fulfillment of building capital well. Municipal party committee Secretaries Liu Daosheng and Chen Xitong attended the meeting and delivered speeches. More than 500 comrades attended yesterday's meeting, including responsible persons from various departments and offices of the municipal party committee and municipal government, responsible persons from various districts, counties, bureaus and universities and colleges, as well as responsible persons from the 10 pilot project units.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

[Text] Zhou Hui, first secretary of the Regional CCP committee, delivered a work report to the regional CCP committee. In the report he emphatically pointed out: The improvement of the production responsibility system should be carried out in the light of farming seasons and the various links of production. We should not postpone this work until the next spring-winter period, nor should we shift it onto leadership at higher levels and expect it to take charge of this work alone. Moreover, we must not try to negate the production responsibility system by taking advantage of this opportunity for improving it and revert to the former state of eating from a big common pot.

Comrade Zhou Hui pointed out: Improving the production responsibility system is a very urgent task whose success or failure will be reflected in the whole process of production. Therefore, in the process of solving practical problems we must sum up experiences, amplify rules and regulations and persistently attend to the improvement of the production responsibility system in the light of farming and livestock production seasons and the various links of production to ensure the system will be perfected.

Comrade Zhou Hui pointed out: In perfecting the responsibility system, localities must pay attention to the following points:

1. Educate cadres and the masses to make them understand the significance of introduction of the responsibility system as a major reform in the agricultural economy.

2. Improving the production responsibility system is one of the central tasks in agricultural and livestock producing areas. This work should be carried out in a steady manner. Do not rush things. Do not execute this work in a manner as we do in unfolding a campaign.

3. We must rely on the masses in improving the responsibility system and mobilize them to participate in this work. We should never leave this work to a small number of people and let them carry out this work behind closed doors.

4. The objective for improving the responsibility system is to completely eliminate the practice of eating from a big common pot and to implement the principle "to each according to his work" in a more scientific and rational manner. We must not try to negate the responsibility system by taking advantage of the opportunity for improving it and revert to the former state of eating from a big common pot.

NEI MONGGOL URGES MORE PARTY COMBAT CAPABILITY

The article states: To strengthen the party, increase its combat capability, bring into full play the role of party committees as the core of leadership and the role of grass-roots party branches as fighting bastions, give full rein to the exemplary and vanguard role of Communist Party members, and unite and lead the masses of all nationalities to promote the socialist material and spiritual civilizations with great confidence and high morale is a pressing task. After the smashing of the gang of four, particularly since the third plenary session of the party, we have, under the leadership of the party Central Committee, done a lot of work to strengthen the party by setting right things which had been thrown into disorder. This has brought great changes to the situation of party organizations -- the political quality of party members has improved markedly and the party's combat capability has further increased. However, we must note that there are all sorts of problems existing in some party organizations in the localities and on the various fronts of our region. Some of the problems are rather serious.

The article points out: To solve these problems as soon as possible, we must, first of all, attend to strengthening the leading bodies. We must keep a clear head and resolutely remove the three types of people from leading bodies. As for people who politically resist the party's line and undermine to a serious degree the guiding principles governing party life and economically grossly violate the law and discipline, we must not allow them to remain in the leading bodies. Meanwhile, we must also solve the problem of a bloated leading body staffed by aging, poorly educated cadres. We must genuinely open our eyes, be good at seeking talented people and promote to leading bodies young and middle-aged cadres of ability and political integrity who have resolutely implemented the party's line, principles and policies. Moreover, leading cadres at all levels must uphold the party's principles, evince revolutionary vigor, work hard, maintain close ties with the masses, improve their style of work and ceaselessly increase their work efficiency so as to make the leading body a powerful core of leadership armed with dynamic party spirit, a good style of work and high efficiency.

Secondly, we must intensify education in the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, communist ideology, the party's line, principles and policies, the basics of the party, party spirit and in the party's three important styles of work to enhance the political consciousness and party character of party members and make them profoundly understand that to achieve communism is the ultimate goal of the party, to serve the people heart and soul is the fundamental purpose of our party and that every party member must uphold the four fundamental principles and devote his life to the communist cause.

Thirdly, we must enhance our sense of organization and strictly enforce party discipline. Every party member must conscientiously enhance his sense of organization and discipline. He must strictly observe the party's political discipline, unconditionally march in step with the party Central Committee in political matters and set the pace in unswervingly and enthusiastically implementing the party's line, principles and policies. He should dare to struggle unremittingly against words and deeds that undermine the party's political discipline and enhance his sense of organizational discipline.

Every party member must act according to party spirit and principles, follow the correct path, not the side path, and deal with problems on the table, not under the table. When he has a problem, he should submit it to a party meeting for solution through collective discussion. It is inadmissible to remain silent at a meeting and voice one's complaints afterward. We should earnestly study the party's resolutions. It is forbidden to go one's own way to find what suits himself.

As for a small number of party members who have violated the law and discipline, we must deal with them severely in accordance with party discipline and state law.

NEI MONGGOL CCP URGES FULFILLING ECONOMIC PLAN

[Text] The Nei Monggol Regional CCP Committee recently convened a standing committee meeting urging party committees at all levels in the region to lead people of all nationalities to advance on the crest of achievements scored, not be complacent at what they have achieved, enhance their vigor and make continued efforts to reap a bumper harvest in agricultural and livestock production and fulfill this year's economic plan in an all-round manner.

The standing committee meeting of the regional CCP committee held that thanks to the all-round implementation of the guidelines of the central directives on Nei Monggol's work in all localities of the region, new progress has been made in work of all fields during the first half of this year. An excellent situation characterized by stability, unity, economic development and a thriving market is just unfolding. The total number of the five major domestic animals is 41.8 million head, topping the previous record. Together with the number of hogs in stock, the total number of livestock in the region is 46.3 million head, a record. The sowing quality of various crops is better than in previous years. Rainfall is adequate in most areas and crops are growing well. In forestry production, the spring afforestation plan has been overfulfilled. Total output value of industrial production for the first 5 months of this year increased by 16 percent over that in 1981. The market is thriving and prices are basically stable. Taxes and financial revenue also registered increases over 1981. Science, culture and education, public health, physical education and other undertakings are progressing steadily. Livelihood in both urban and rural areas has noticeably improved. Unity among nationalities has been strengthened and the socialist consciousness of the masses has been further enhanced.

The Nei Monggol Regional CCP Committee urged all comrades of the party, all cadres and people of all nationalities to advance on the crest of achievements scored, further implement the guidelines of the regional conference of secretaries of banner and county CCP committees held earlier this year, make persistent efforts to reap a bumper harvest in agricultural and livestock production, promote industrial production, enact enterprise consolidation, further widen channels of commodity circulation, liven up financial work, comprehensively fulfill the economic plan, strive for a turn for the better in the financial and economic situation and make greater progress in work of all fields.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN AT EDUCATION MEETING

[Excerpt] According to our sources, after a 5-day session, the Heilongjiang provincial work conference sponsored by the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government on developing urban and rural secondary vocational schools concluded on 28 June. During the conference, participants discussed issues concerning development of urban and rural secondary vocational schools. The provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government set forth demands, urging municipalities throughout the province to learn from experience gained by Jiamusi municipality in this regard, counties to learn from Hailun County and major enterprises to learn from the state farms under the provincial general land reclamation bureau.

Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, delivered an important speech at the conference. Hou Jie, secretary of the provincial CCP committee and vice governor of the province, made a report entitled "Make overall arrangements and strengthen leadership over the work of properly and enthusiastically develop secondary vocational schools." Vice Governor Li Rui presided over the conference.

The conference noted: Since 1979, our province has established various secondary vocational schools and has also achieved a rapid progress in developing them. According to statistics compiled at the end of 1981, the province had 121 secondary vocational schools and over 81,400 students, who account for 20 percent of high school students throughout the province. Secondary vocational school students of the state farms, which have made great success in this regard, account for 49 percent of the total number of state farm secondary school students, 32 percent in Jiamusi municipality and 37 percent in Hailun County. This has brought about the first changes in the one-sided development of general high schools and the single-development structure of secondary education.

The conference noted: Junior middle school graduates throughout the province enrolled by senior middle schools account for 28 percent of the total number and senior middle school graduates enrolled by colleges and universities only account for about 4 percent. If we concentrate our education efforts on a small number of young people and are negligent in educating a large number of youths before they take up work, our secondary education will fail to fulfill the tasks of supplying qualified candidates for colleges and universities and training labor successors.

The conference urged localities throughout the province to organize major units at municipality and county levels to do a good job in making overall arrangements for the work and to adopt various measures independently for successfully developing vocational education.

HEILONGJIANG CONSOLIDATES PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

[Text] Since 1979 our province has begun to consolidate party organizations at the primary level. In the past 3 years, 290 units in the province were chosen to carry out consolidation. In 1982, the experiemtal units have increased to 201 CCP committees, including 94 CCP committees at and above the county and regiment levels, 276 general party branches and 3,707 party branches and involving 66,464 party members. In the course of the consolidation, all localities have insisted on doing well in ideological consolidation and have attended to party members' education, which is the key link, so as to solve the problem of some party members who have not joined the party ideologically. Through education, the political quality of party members has been greatly improved and their mental outlook has been markedly changed. The number of qualified and basically qualified party members has increased by a big margin, and basically unqualified and unqualified party members have remarkably decreased.

In the course of the consolidation, all localities have educated party members, first to conscientiously study the party's lines, principles and policies laid down at the 3d Plenum of the 11th CCP Central Committee to resolve the question on showing political identity with the CCP Central Committee; second, to study the draft of the revised party consitution and then the guiding principles for inner party political life to improve their political quality, strengthen their belief in communism, foster the goal of wholeheartedly serving the people and live up to the requirements for party members; and third, to combat corrosive influences and maintain communist purity.

This year, since we consolidated party organizations at the primary level, all localities, beginning with the implementation of the central emergency circular and other documents and combining with the work to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, have thoroughly educated party members to combat the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and guided them to check individualism at the outset, to conscientiously remold their world outlook and to uphold forever the communist purity. In the course of the consolidation, all localities have paid attention to the correct educational principles and methods of integrating self-education with mutual criticism, the improvement of political awareness with the solution of practical problems and the improvement of education with the strengthening of the role of party members. We all think that these practices are relatively good and are good experiences in primary party organization consolidation under the new situation.

At the session held this morning, (Liu Haiyun) was elected secretary of the seventh provincial CYL committee. (Tang Junqiang), (Shen Zhongguo) and (Xie Junyi) were elected deputy secretaries of the new committee.

Arriving at the session to meet newly elected members were leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee, including Yang Yichen, Li Lian, Chen Lei, Chen Junsheng, Zhao Dezun, Wang Yilun, Chen Jianfei, Wang Luming, Wang Zhao, (Wang Fei), Chen Yuanzhi, Zhao Xingyuan and Xie Yunqing. These organizations should regard education as a long-term task. In fulfilling this task, doing a good job in reforming misled youths deserves to be significantly undertaken not only by the party, but also the CYL. Leading comrades urged the seventh provincial CYL committee to rally and struggle under the party's leadership, to carry forward the fine tradition developed in the past, to lead the broad masses of youths to care to struggle and to painstakingly study, to be shock forces or vanguards in achieving socialist material and spiritual civilizations and to be new successors full of ideals, morality, cultured and well disciplined.

JILIN OFFICIAL DISCUSSES FOREIGN TRADE

[Recorded talk by (Jin Yinong), director of the Provincial Foreign Trade Bureau, entitled: "Exploit the Favorable Conditions in Developing the Economy and Expand Foreign Trade -- date not given]

[Excerpt] The provincial export trade fair -- a magnificent meeting on foreign trade as well as the largest foreign trade event in our province's foreign trade history -- has opened. The opening of this trade fair is bound to usher in a new prospect for comprehensively developing our province's foreign trade. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and following the implementation of the open-door policy, the province has made good and rapid progress in developing foreign trade, and the volume of commodities procured for export has also increased by a relatively large margin.

The 1979 provincial procurement of export commodities surpassed the 1978 figure by over 33 percent; that in 1980 surpassed the 1979 figure by 51 percent; and that in 1981 10 percent over 1980 -- historical records. At the same time, the variety of export commodities has increased rapidly. The variety of commodities procured for export increased from 375 in 1978 to the present 575. The variety of commodities suitable for export increased from 7 in 1975 to the present 430. Some of them have become brand-name products in international markets. Over the past few years, thanks to the reform of the foreign trade system, our province's foreign trade has been managed by industrialists and businessmen rather than managed by the state through allocation and transfer, which was adopted prior to 1975.

The targets for export have been expanded from Xianggang and Aomen to many nearby areas in Asia and far beyond the ocean. At present, the province has established foreign trade ties with 87 countries and regions on five continents, including Japan, Southeast Asia, North America, Africa, Western Europe and Xianggang and Aomen. The development of foreign trade has promoted our province's industrial production accordingly.

Because of the low index for foreign trade and [words indistinct] the present export business is far from meeting the demands of the current situation and the four modernizations. Worse still, the province has few varieties of exports which enjoy stable sales. The supply of readily marketable goods is inadequate. Economic cooperative ventures, such as processing and assembling with materials or patterns supplied by foreign firms and compensatory trade are poorly developed and few in number.

Therefore, we have to exert great efforts to raise the level of the province's foreign trade.

From now on, we should expand trade contacts with foreign countries and enlarge the scale of exports in line with the principle of maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in one's own hands and developing the economy through one's own efforts. In the course of continually expanding the export of agricultural and sideline products, we should emphatically develop the export of light and textile products, handicrafts, chemical industrial products, metallurgical products, mineral products and machinery and electronic products so as to enable the production of industrial and mineral products to outpace the production of agricultural, sideline, local and special products. We should make full use of the numerous labor force and the rich processing abilities to reduce the export of raw materials and increase that of finished products and luxury goods for family use. We should also increase items processed with materials supplied by foreign customers, develop trade items with Chinese and foreign funds and develop compensatory trade in a planned manner. We should make efforts to increase the economic interchange between China and foreign countries to expand and promote our province's foreign trade. Based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit, we are willing to establish economic cooperation relations with personages in trade circles in various places throughout the world. Personages in trade circles in various places throughout the world are welcomed to hold trade talks with us.

SIGNIFICANCE OF HAIG RESIGNATION EXAMINED

[Text] U.S. President Reagan personally announced at about 1500 on 26 June that he had accepted Secretary of State Haig's resignation and nominated former Treasury Secretary Shultz as Haig's successor. This event has attracted the attention of the world. The sudden change of U.S. diplomatic chiefs at a time when the world is in turmoil with several wars raging will certainly be of significance and have repercussions.

According to the U.S. Constitution, the president is the head of the state and concurrently the highest-ranking administrator, making decisions and taking control of the whole situation. This is completely different from the cabinet systems of other countries. However, in the administrative system, the secretary of state ranks highest among departments and agencies in the Federal Government. If a secretary of state has full and intimate knowledge of the president's political ideals and can faithfully execute the president's foreign policy, his power, influence and reputation will rise high above other administrative departments, and he may become a central figure among his peers serving as a model to other administrative departments. A famous case in point was Dulles under President Eisenhower.

In the past, Haig was Nixon's chief of staff during the "Watergate crisis" and later became NATO supreme commander. He was given the important diplomatic post after President Reagan took office. Haig has faced many troubles in the past 18 months as secretary of state. As the most powerful nation in the contemporary world and a leader of democracies, the United States has not been able to deal with the complicated and difficult problems in response to the internal and external situations as the people expected. President Reagan has so far not made public the reason for Haig's resignation, in spite of persistent questions by the press. The intention is perhaps to hold his past contributions to the army and the government in high esteem and to dignify his name. There are multiple factors leading to Haig's resignation, according to other observations.

First, although the outcome of the dispute between Britain and Argentina on the sovereignty over the Falkland Islands is determined for the time being, after 74 days of bloody fighting, the trouble for the future remains. It is truly regrettable that the United States failed to use its influence in a timely manner to turn hostility into friendship. On the other hand, Washington does not want to see the Latin American countries estranged from the United States. After the change of secretary of state, the chances for the United States to patch up its friendship with Argentina and for becoming the central force in Latin America will naturally become greater.

Second, in the Middle East, Israel has launched a massive attack in southern Lebanon with the initial objective of wiping out the PLO armed forces in order to protect its border from future trouble. However, since it moved its troops into southern Lebanon, the war has escalated, causing heavy casualties and making tens of thousands of people homeless. The framework of peace based on the "Camp David accords" advocated by the United States is in danger of collapsing. The Arab states in the Middle East hope that the United States will be able to restrain Israel, but the Soviet Union has made a false charge that Israel's action was engineered and directed by the United States. Our assessment is that Haig's resignation may bring about an early cease-fire in the war in Lebanon. Although the Middle East issue is profoundly complex, the interests of all parties concerned can be gradually resolved in the course of negotiations if a cease-fire is achieved first.

Third, in Asia the crux of the situation is the so-called China issue. President Chiang Ching-kuo has repeatedly warned that "In the relations between China and the United States both countries will benefit if they are united, but separation will harm both countries." In his campaign speeches President Reagan reiterated, and has done so many times since becoming President, that the ROC is a faithful friend of the United States and that the United States will never betray its allies. Nevertheless, some people in Washington, blinded by the policy of "uniting with the bandits to restrain Russia," have bowed to the blackmail and threats of the Chinese Communists in some matters, thus harming some interests of the ROC. The case of arms sales is one of the examples. The accomodating posture of the United States in its diplomacy with the Chinese Communists runs counter to the principle that both China and the United States will benefit from being united and also does not accord with the original meaning of the "Taiwan Relations Act" passed by the U.S. Congress. Justice-upholding people in both government and public circles in the United States have voiced their resentment about this. Countries in Asia and the Pacific region, especially the Southeast Asian countries, are very much concerned because the United States has gone too far to try to win over the Chinese Communists. By any means. Let's look at the Chinese Communists' side; they have blackmailed and threatened the United States, but they have never missed taking an opposite stand with the United States on major issues, for example, the anticommunist movement in Poland, the Middle East war, the future of the Korean Peninsula, the dispute between Britain and Argentina. The United States has gained nothing in dealing with the Chinese Communists. It has not won reverence from its enemies but has disappointed its friends.

What has been mentioned above is not necessarily Haig's fault alone. However, as secretary of state, he should be responsible for the work under his jurisdiction. At a time of both advancing and retreating, he has preserved the poise of a statesman.

President Reagan has nominated Shultz to succeed Haig as secretary of state. This position has to be approved at a Senate hearing. With his academic background and political experience, he will be approved without difficulty. We congratulate him in advance that he will be in charge of the U.S. foreign affairs at this difficult time; we profoundly hope that he will firmly grasp the basic principle that "unity will benefit both" and strive to strengthen and upgrade the essential relations between the United States and the ROC. At the same time, we hope that he will, following the target set by President Reagan, launch a global peace movement and "dump Marxism-Leninism on the ash heap of history" with the strength of a Red Cross army of democracy. This is the common goal of the free people in the world. The citizens and ROC Government have made it their duty to oppose communism and totalitarianism. They are pleased to cooperate with the United States for the interests of both sides and for world stability and peace and are ready to contribute to achieving this goal.

TAIPEI RADIO COMMENTARY ON GOLDWATER REMARKS

[Text] President Reagan has given Senator Barry Goldwater assurances that the United States will abide by the Taiwan Relations Act and provide for the security of the Republic of China. Vice President George Bush, who recently visited the Chinese mainland, gave similar assurances. People of Taiwan are gratified but confused. They trust President Reagan but feel that his administration has not been acting in concert with his words. For example, the United States and Red China have been talking about Taiwan's future in Peking [as heard] and Washington. These discussions are taking place on behalf of the Chinese Communists, who want the United States to stop selling arms to the Republic of China and hand them the title to Taiwan. In a sense, then, the United States is discussing the fate of the Republic of China behind its back. The Republic of China is not a party to these talks. It has not been consulted in any way. This is the first time the United States has negotiated the fate of a sovereign friendly state behind its back. It is not an accepted international practice. The United States has never denied reports that Washington might be prepared to reduce or even phase out the sale of weapons to the Republic of China if tensions in the Taiwan Strait were eliminated. However, the Chinese Communists have said again and again that they will never renounce their intentions to take Taiwan by force if China cannot be reunified by peaceful means. So what is there to talk about? The United States is bound by the Taiwan Relations Act which provides for the sale of arms to be used in defense of the people of Taiwan. This U.S. law also says that only the peaceful unification of China is acceptable. Communist aggression against Taiwan is clearly ruled out. Even atomic warfare is proscribed. Yet, in the last year or so, the United States has approved only the sale of $60 million worth of weapons parts to the Republic of China. President Reagan ruled out the sale of more advanced fighter planes on the ground that they were not needed. Under the Carter administration, arms sale to the Republic of China averaged $700 to $800 million annually. Taiwan needs at least that volume to modernize its forces and keep up with the communists.

As an island, Taiwan must have superior aircraft to control adjacent skies and keep the enemy away from the shores. The Republic of China's Air Force cannot possibly match that of the Chinese Communists quantitatively. The superiority must be qualitative. Yet, the present work horse of the free Chinese air force, the F-5E fighter, has already been surpassed or soon will be by planes in the Chinese Communists' arsenal. This poses a grave danger to the defense of Taiwan. The Republic of China does not seek offensive airplanes. It has never broken its word to the United States not to attack the Chinese mainland. The reunification reliance of free China is based on its own performance as the prospering democratic country and the belief that the Chinese people of the mainland will prefer this way of life to communism in the time to come. This is the threat that the Chinese Communists fear far more than attacks from the Soviet Union in the north. This is also why the Chinese Communists are trying to enlist the United States and its allies in compelling the Republic of China to surrender and hand over Taiwan for communization. Americans must be moved out of the way if the communists are to get at Taiwan with their huge armed forces. Peking knows that the free people of the Republic of China will never surrender and must be attacked after crossing the Taiwan Strait. However, Red China cannot fight both the people of Taiwan and the United States. They must win the struggle against the Americans without fighting so they can move against Taiwan whenever they think conditions are favorable.

Senator Goldwater raised many points in his talk with President Reagan and said that he received favorable responses. That good news should be followed by U.S. actions to back up the reassuring words. Taiwan cannot be defended by words, only by weapons in the hands of those using them to preserve their liberty.

ZAIRE, DPRK EXCHANGE WORDS, CAUSE PRC 'RED FACES'

[By foreign affairs editor David Chen]

[Excerpts] There were several red faces in Peking yesterday following scathing attacks and counter attacks between two of China's allies, Zaire and North Korea.

The Zairian Embassy in Peking called North Korea "a crook with the brain of a child" for its description of President Mobutu Sese Seko, as "a despicable servant of U.S. imperialism."

The embarassment in the Chinese capital is twofold.

Firstly, President Mobutu last week paid his fourth state visit to Peking and was well received by the country's top leaders, including the party vice-chairman, Mr Deng Xiaoping. When he left Peking, he went to Seoul, where he was wined and dined by President Chon Tu-hwan, and he voiced his support for the South Korean Government. The Zairian Embassy's acid statement attacking the North, which concurrently justified President Mobutu's visit to South Korea was therefore somewhat disconcerting, considering the very close relations between Peking and Pyongyang.

Secondly, the bitter statement came just after a high-powered Chinese military delegation, led by the defence minister, Mr Geng Biao, had made a well-publicised trip to Pyongyang. Not only was Mr Geng received by President Kim Il-song but he went to the North Korean side of the Demilitarised Zone and voiced strong support for a unified Korea, under North Korean leadership.

China must have felt embarrassed that the statement should have been released by the Zairian Embassy in Peking, though it was also distributed to foreign missions in Pyongyang.

Following President Mobutu's visit to Seoul, Pyongyang came out with a statement calling the visit "a ridiculous farce of two despicable servants subsisting on the breadcrumbs falling from the table of U.S. imperialists."

The Zairian Embassy retorted yesterday by describing the "insane and unseemly" attacks on President Mobutu as consistent with those of "a delinquent in the best sense of the work, indeed of a crook with the brain of a child who is still at the height of his innocence." It went on to allege that Pyongyang treated heads of state such as President Mobutu "contemptuously and without discretion as few masters treat their valets."

The embassy also denied that Zaire favoured South Korea over North Korea, and said President Mobutu had visited Pyongyang before visiting Seoul. His visit to the south earlier this month was intended to balance his trip to the North in 1974, it added. The text of the embassy statement was published by news agencies.

Zaire maintains diplomatic relations with both North and South Korea.

The embassy said Seoul had not objected to President Mobutu's visit to Pyongyang, but that on the contrary, it regarded the trip as evidence of "his obvious concern to dedicate all his intelligence, all his soul and all his heart to the search for a solution to the problem of the (Korean) Peninsula."

Zaire was opposed to "trusting its lot of ideas frozen in dogma, steeped in routine and which defy reason," it added.

While Chinese foreign ministry officials might privately chuckle at the language used, an observer said, they must feel a little ill at ease that the quarrel should be staged in the Chinese capital. Both Zaire and North Korea, which have been receiving economic assistance from China, are regarded by Peking as belonging to the Third World, whose cause China champions.

HUANG HUA INTERVIEW IN SPAIN ON SEVERAL ISSUES

[Fernando Pastrano report on 1 July interview in Madrid with PRC Foreign Minister Huang Hua: "I Take Back to My Country the Spanish People's Friendly Feelings"]

[Excerpts] "I cam here, bringing with me the Chinese people's friendship toward the Spanish people. I now leave Spain taking with me the Spanish people's friendly feelings toward my people."

Shared Viewpoints

"This visit of mine to Spain has yielded very positive results. I was able to verify that on several very important international issues we have shared viewpoints. Both our countries have the same desire to further develop our relations, and we have begun consultations to this end in several fields."

"One of the fields in which we can step up our relations is oil and coal exploitation. For instance, Hispanoil submitted a tender for the exploitation of my country's maritime oil deposits."

Third World Development

"For the past 30 years the Third World countries have had the fundamental task of economic development to improve their peoples' living standards. Economic independence also brings with it the consolidation of political independence. This is why the Third World countries demand the establishment of a new international economic order on an equitable basis. We have noted that the Spanish Government's position on this point is positive too."

"China is a developing country, and today the main task being tackled is to raise its economic level. For this is needs an international environment of long-term peace. In this connection we are very pleased to see that Spain too is very anxious to maintain world peace."

Arms Sales to Taiwan

"The sale of U.S. weapons to Taiwan is clearly contrary to international laws. When the United States and China resumed relations in 1979, the United States said that it would maintain only unofficial trading relations with Taiwan. But later the U.S. Congress passed the Taiwan Relations Act which is clearly contrary to the Chinese-U.S. communique, which stipulates U.S. recognition of the PRC as the sole and legitimate representative of China and that Taiwan is part of our territory."

"The fact of these arms sales shows that the U.S. administration wants to continue implementing the policy of preventing our country's reunification, the policy of the two Chinas. If the U.S. administration continues along this path, if it continues its interference in what is our country's internal affair, then it is inevitable that the Chinese side will react sharply and very likely that this will also coincide with a regression in relations between the countries."

[Pastrano] But it seems that the Chinese authorities are not taking account of the intransigence of the present Taiwanese leaders....

[Huang] "The majority of the inhabitants of Taiwan wish to rejoin their homeland. This is why, once the problem of foreign interference has been resolved, it will be merely a national problem that must be resolved peacefully. But the Chinese Government can in no way make an undertaking to foreign governments that it will not use force to resolve the Taiwan problem. That would be tantamount to surrendering sovereignty over the island."

Sino-Soviet Conflict

"Since China's rejection of Soviet demands to establish naval bases along the Chinese coast in 1958, the Soviet Government has taken a number of measures designed to exacerbate our relations, culminating in the deployment of its troops along our shared border and the border with the People's Republic of Mongolia. This all had a single aim: to encircle China. We can sum up the USSR's policy in a word as that of a social-imperialist power or of a country that calls itself socialist but is imperialist. In this context Brezhnev's statements last March about a rapprochement with China are no more than a sequence of pretty words. As far as we are concerned, it is deeds that matter, and hitherto we have seen no sign that the USSR wants to abandon its policy of expansion and aggression. Until that happens China will not abandon its own policy of opposing such hegemony."

Backing Kampuchea

"The agreement reached by the three Kampuchean political factions to form a coalition government is a very important step in the Kampuchean people's struggle against the Vietnamese invaders. It is a positive factor in maintaining world peace and impeding the Soviet strategy of the advance southward. We believe that international society should grant them their moral, diplomatic and material backing."

"I would like to ask you the favor of conveying my gratitude to the Spanish Government for its cordial welcome and its magnificent attitude, which has made my stay in your country very happy and successful."

REPORTS OF U.S. CURB ON TECHNOLOGY TO PRC CITED

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government is taking measures to stem the export of American technology to China, reported U.S. NEWSWEEK recently. It said that in order to prevent high technology sales to China, Washington has denied export licenses to some Hong Kong firms.

According to an ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL report, Bohdan Denysyk, deputy assistant secretary for export administration of the U.S. Department of Commerce, told the journal: "We are looking very closely at Hong Kong applications (for export licenses); if we find the company could be owned or controlled or have strong ties with China, we treat these companies as if we were dealing with the People's Republic of China." The U.S. Department of Commerce confirmed that in the past six months, "several export licenses" to Hong Kong companies have been denied. Denysyk also said that some export licenses approved before the Reagan administration came to office should have been denied because these Hong Kong companies have close ties with China.

STOESSEL REPORTED ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE

[Text] Beijing, July 7 (XINHUA) -- Deputy Secretary of State Walter J. Stoessel has been appointed by President Ronald Reagan as acting secretary of state to replace Alexander M. Haig, according to reports from Washington. Announcing the decision yesterday, U.S. State Department Spokesman Dean Fischer said Stoessel will serve as secretary of state until the Senate confirms the nomination of George P. Shultz to the post. Confirmation hearings for Shultz are tentatively set for July 13. If they go smoothly, Shultz could be sworn into office later in the week.

U.S. REVEALS SOVIET CLANDESTINE OPERATIONS

[Text] Washington, July 8 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government is accusing the Soviet Union of resorting to document forgeries, media manipulation and clandestine political operations to promote its foreign policy goals. A report released here today by the State Department Bureau of Public Affairs said that the KGB and other Soviet departments have carried out worldwide deceptive and cloak-and-dagger activities in contrast to public diplomacy.

Soviet forgeries were timed to influence Western opinion on sensitive issues, said the report. Last November, for instance, a forged letter from U.S. President Reagan to King of Spain Juan Carlos urged Spain to join NATO and crack down on antigovernment groups. It was mailed to Spanish journalists and circulated to all delegations (except the U.S. and Spanish) to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe then in session. But Madrid newspapers said the letter was a fabrication.

A latest example cited in the report was a forged U.S. Commerce Department document circulated in Brussels in late May, 1982, on the eve of the Versailles economic summit. The "document" referred to sensitive trade issues to stir up friction between the United States and its European allies, the report said.

In media manipulation, the report said the Soviet propaganda apparatus often makes up a false story, gets it published in a foreign country, sometimes of the Third World, then replays it by citing the foreign media as a source, in the hope that it will be picked up by more foreign media.

KGB agents disguised as diplomats are engaged in espionage activities. 19 Soviet officials involved in espionage were publicly expelled from 10 countries during the first 5 months of 1982, the report said.

INDOCHINESE FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING VIEWED

["Vietnam's Partial Troop Withdrawal Fraud" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA) -- The sixth conference of "Foreign Ministers of the Three Indochinese Countries" (Vietnam, Laos and the puppet regime of Phnom Penh) was held in Ho Chi Minh City on July 6 and 7, according to reports from Hanoi. The conference was sponsored by Vietnam.

A communique issued at the end of the conference claimed that Vietnam had decided "to withdraw a number of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea in July, 1982." It added that depending "on Thailand's acts in response", Vietnam "might consider a further withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea in the near future."

However, it noted with a threatening tone that if China and "other reactionary forces take advantage of the withdrawal to step up hostile activities", Vietnam would "consult" the Phnom Penh puppet regime and adopt "appropriate measures" under the treaty signed between the two sides. Obviously, an excuse is being prepared by Vietnam for sending in fresh troops to Kampuchea at any time.

The communique also called for the setting up of a security zone along the Thai-Kampuchean border which will be put under "international surveillance". Under this proposal, Thai troops will be present on that part of the security zone which is in Thai territory, while Democratic Kampuchean troops and other Kampuchean resistance forces "must be expelled" and refugee camps be "moved out" from the zone. By putting forward this proposal, Vietnam is trying to lure Thailand into direct involvement in the Indochina conflict, as it had intended to do before when it proposed the setting up of a "demilitarized zone" on the Thai-Kampuchean border, which was rejected by Thailand.

The communique called for the holding of an "international conference on Southeast Asia" with the participation of the Indochinese and ASEAN countries, and others. It claimed that the three Indochinese states "are prepared to meet ASEAN countries to discuss and reach agreement on all matters relating to this conference."

The communique termed the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea as a plot of China and ASEAN "to interfere in Kampuchea's internal affairs." It reiterated Vietnam's unfounded demand of leaving the Kampuchean seat vacant at the United Nations.

With regard to Vietnam's so-called "partial troop withdrawal", which had been leaked out before being announced officially, Samdech Norodon Sihanouk, the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawestsila all pointed out explicitly that it was meaningless. They held that the only way to solve the Kampuchean problem was the unconditional and complete withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the resolutions of the U.N. General Assembly.

RENMIN RIBAO EXPOSES SRV'S 'STRIVING FOR PEACE'

["International Jottings" by Yu Cun [0060 2625]: "The Butcher to Buddha"]

[Text] The Vietnamese authorities, who, propped up by the Soviet Union, are now forcibly occupying Kampuchea, all of a sudden have bragged about world peace. According to reports in the Vietnamese press, in "response" to the call of the UN second special session on disarmament, the Vietnamese authorities have launched a so-called "national drive of striving for peace and disarmament and opposing the war schemes of U.S. imperialism and all reactionary forces."

While preparing this drive, some leaders of the Vietnamese authorities have indulged in unbridled propaganda for the so-called "peace proposal" put forth by the Soviet Union, and have talked glibly about "the necessity of safeguarding the fate of mankind, the peace and safety of all nationalities" and even declared that they "would make known their attitude through various vigorous activities." They believe that so long as they wave an olive branch and prate about peace, they will be able to whitewash their hideous features of local hegemony and cover up their naked aggression in Kampuchea. However, how can make the Vietnamese authorities prattle about "striving for peace?" If you really want to respond "through vigorous activities" to the call of the UN second special session on disarmament, then please immediately withdraw your aggressive troops from Kampuchea. Can a butcher become a Buddha just by reciting scriptures, but not laying down his knife?

SIHANOUK, KHIEU SAMPHAN ACCUSE SRV OF DECEPTION

[Text] Phnom Malai, Democratic Kampuchea, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and Khieu Samphan of Democratic Kampuchea have accused Vietnam of trying to deceive the world through the propaganda of a partial troops withdrawal from Kampuchea. They made their remarks about the Vietnamese trick before a group of presspersons accompanying Sihanouk to inspect the liberated area of Democratic Kampuchea here this afternoon.

Questioned about the new gesture of Vietnam made known by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach yesterday, Sihanouk said: "Partial withdrawal? You have no proof that they withdraw anything from Kampuchea. And even [if] they withdraw some bad soldiers or non-fighting soldiers, there is no significance about this partial withdrawal. It is just to deceive the world and propaganda without any good consequence towards the Kampuchean people and the future of Kampuchea. It appears that Vietnam is not ready to give up the process of colonizing Kampuchea. For instance, Vietnam maintains the government of Heng Samrin, its puppet in Phnom Penh, as the so-called legal government." "Heng Samrin in any way is not a government but just representing Vietnam and the Soviet Union. We cannot accept it. So Vietnam must abide by the resolutions of the United Nations on Kampuchea and the resolution and declaration of the international conference on Kampuchea and withdraw its troops."

Replying to the same question, Khieu Samphan said that the so-called partial withdrawal of aggressor troops from Kampuchea was an old trick of Vietnam. It was employing such a trick to undermine the implementation of the U.N. resolutions on Kampuchea and the declaration of the international conference on Kampuchean problem, and to hoodwink the world public.

"Vietnam's so-called new proposal is also aimed at legalising its long-term occupation of our country and the puppet regime of Heng Samrin, so it is absolutely unacceptable," Khieu Samphan stressed.

SRV TROOP WITHDRAWAL PROPOSAL SEEN AS 'TRICK'

["Commentary: Vietnam's 'Partial Troops Withdrawal' Is Nothing But a Trick" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA correspondent Xiao Yang) -- The Vietnamese-controlled conference of the three Indochinese foreign ministers announced yesterday that Vietnam would "withdraw a number of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea".

This is nothing but a diplomatic trick played by the Vietnamese authorities to deceive world public opinion and extricate itself from its predicament.

The development of the present situation in Kampuchea is more and more unfavorable to Vietnam. The Vietnamese-launched fourth dry-season offensive against the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas has been foiled. A Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has been formed by the three patriotic Kampuchean forces. At the forthcoming 37th U.N. General Assembly, the majority of the U.N. member-countries are surely to denounce Vietnam for refusing to implement the U.N. resolutions on the Vietnamese troops withdrawal from Kampuchea.

It is under the above-mentioned situation that the Vietnamese authorities have dished up the fraud of "partial withdrawal" of the Vietnamese occupation troops from Kampuchea.

Vietnam's "partial withdrawal of troops" is a bait thrown to the ASEAN countries on the eve of Nguyen Co Thach's forthcoming visit to these countries. Posing a gesture of willing to "reconcile" with ASEAN, Vietnam attempts to induce them to accept the fait accompli of its occupation of Kampuchea, carry out "regional dialogue" and weaken ASEAN's support to the struggle of the Kampuchean people.

This is also a put-up stance taken by the Vietnamese authorities to gain economic aid from the Western countries to meet its pressing needs.

Someone may hold the view that Vietnam's "partial withdrawal of troops" shows its softened and flexible attitude. Thinking this way, he is falling into Vietnam's trap. The Fifth Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party held in March this year indicated no willingness on the part of the Vietnamese authorities to give up their ambition to occupy Kampuchea, control the whole of Indochina and lord it over the Southeast Asian region. If there is any change, it is only in tactics.

It is known in the world that the Kampuchean problem resulted from naked military invasion of a sovereign country by Vietnam. The key to the solution of this problem lies in an unconditional withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops from that country, leaving the Kampuchean people alone to decide their own destiny free from outside interference. Vietnam's "partial troops withdrawal" can in no way change the reality of its military occupation of Kampuchea. Under such circumstances, any impartial solution of the Kampuchean problem is out of the question. Moreover, the Vietnamese authorities may pull out some troops for show while bringing in more troops clandestinely. Such a trick is often seen in international relations. It is known that the Soviet authorities also performed a farce of partial troops withdrawal from Afghanistan, which resulted in no deduction but a strengthening and increase of its troops in that country.

If the Vietnamese authorities have the sincerity for a solution of the Kampuchean problem, the way is simple: to pull out all its troops from that country without any condition in accordance with the U.N. resolutions. This is the sole touchingstone for its "sincerity." Otherwise, all its tricks are doomed to failure.

THAI REACTION TO SRV WITHDRAWAL PROPOSAL NOTED

[Text] Bangkok, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Lt-Gen Som Khattaphan, spokesman of the Supreme Command of the Royal Thai Armed Forces, last night described Hanoi's declaration of partial troop pullout from Kampuchea as a trick to mislead the world about its real design on Kampuchea, reported the Bangkok POST today.

He expressed the belief that the partial withdrawal might involve only battle-weary and sick troops. Eventually, he added, Vietnam would send in fresh reinforcements to Kampuchea.

According to reports from Vietnam, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach told reporters yesterday that a "significant" partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea would begin this month. Thach's statement was made after the so-called "foreign ministers' meeting" of the three Indochinese countries which was held in Ho Chi Minh City this week.

The Thai military spokesman noted that it was possible the pullout was prompted by the high rate of desertion of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea and its deteriorating economy as a result of the costly war, "not by sincerity on the part of Hanoi."

The Thai papers yesterday quoted Prasong Sunsiri, secretary-general of the National Security Council of Thailand, as saying Vietnam's so-called partial pullout of its troops from Kampuchea was an old trick to deceive the world.

He said: "Now, the U.N. General Assembly is approaching. Vietnam is trying hard by various propaganda means to get more international support." "I absolutely don't believe what the Vietnamese have said about the partial withdrawal," he added.

SIHANOUK'S VISIT TO REFUGEE CAMP REPORTED

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO correspondents Wang Rongjiu [3769 2837 0036] and Yang Qun [2799 5028] "Sihanouk Visits Refugee Camp in Prachin Buri, Thailand"]

[TExt] At 1500 on 7 July, Prince Samdech N. Sihanouk and his wife visited 35,000 Kampuchean refugees at the Khao Idang refugee camp in Prachin Buri. Nearly all the people in the camp -- old and young, male and female -- came out to welcome him. Some old refugees told the prince about their sufferings of being far away from their homes and expressed their hope that the aggressors will be driven out so that they can return home.

Prince Sihanouk gave a speech at the welcoming meeting. He said that he had never been separated in his heart from the motherland and the people, although this was the first time he was visiting his compatriots. He expressed his thanks to the Thai Government and the governments of other countries for their humanitarian assistance to the Kampuchean refugees. He called on the young and strong to return to their country, join the army and take up arms to drive the Vietnamese out of their country. Prince Sihanouk said that the struggle to resist Vietnam and salvage the nation had to be carried out step by step and still had a long way to go, but he was sure that one day Kampuchea would be liberated. If only the people unite together, they will be able to win the victory. Now that the three sections of the patriotic forces against Vietnam have united, he hoped all people of the patriotic forces would forget their previous enmity and end their disputes. In the future, they will form a strong force through unity and cooperation in order to drive out the Vietnamese aggressors.

Sihanouk called on the Kampuchean people to support the patriotic tripartite united government.

He concluded: "So long as we are united and people throughout the world support us, the day will surely come when we will be able to rebuild our country."

Sihanouk finally handed over the sum of $10,000 granted by the Korean Government to the responsible person of the refugee camp and told him to use the money for the camp's medical expenses.

After listening to Prince Sihanouk's speech, a youth named So Ha Mi nodded, saying: "His speech was well stated. Now there is only one path for the Kampuchean people: Unite and drive out the Vietnamese aggressors." He told this reporter that he fled from Phnom Penh 3 months ago. He said the Vietnamese have garrisoned troops everywhere in Phnom Pehn. They have press-ganged people and even robbed them in public and made life unbearable for the people there. Another young man named Wen Suo [3080 4792] told this reporter that they all knew that the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea had been set up. He said: "Now we will be able to win over more people and are now more confident that the Vietnamese aggressors will be defeated earlier."

The magazine, whose first issue appeared July 1, was jointly founded by the China Market Publishing Corporation and the Hong Kong Economic Information Agency. It is mainly devoted to reports on China's policy on foreign economic relations and trade, and its market trends in order to promote international economic and technical cooperation. It also gives a prominent coverage of the China investment promotion meeting held earlier last month.

Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, contributed an article entitled "China's Policy on Absorbing Foreign Investments".

In the monthly review column, Zhai Xiangdong discussed China's open economic development policy. Coal Minister Gao Yangwen also wrote to the magazine, spelling out the broad prospects for China's coal industry. Additional columns carry interviews, introduction of commodities and joint ventures and export commodity production centers.

NATO'S ROGERS CITED ON DETERRENCE CREDIBILITY

[Text] Brussels, July 8 (XINHUA) -- The relative capacity of the Allied Command in Europe to counter the threat of the Warsaw Pact was declining and thus the credibility of NATO's deterrence was also in danger, said General Rogers, NATO's supreme allied commander of Europe (SACEUR).

According to the latest issue of THE ATLANTIC NEWS here, General Rogers addressed here recently a conference on "security and defence policy in Europe" organised by the Brussels office of the Konrad Adenauer Foundation with the group of the European People's Party of the European Parliament. Among others present at this conference were Secretary General J. Luns, Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans, Deputy of the European Parliament Von Hassel, as well as the U.S., West German and Dutch permanent representatives to NATO.

The SACEUR considered that the threat was continually increasing and NATO's conventional capacities are not adequate to conduct a frontline defence in Europe without recourse to nuclear weapons, as it does not possess the varied capacities which could be transformed into flexible response to an attack. Although the Allied Command in Europe reinforces itself every year, he added, the gap between the conventional capacities of NATO and those of the Warsaw Pact enlarges each year. However, the SACEUR pointed out that the required conventional capacities could be attained towards the end of this decade if the member countries adhered to the commitments they undertook in "force goals 1983-1988". This involved an annual increase in real terms of military budgets by 4 percent on average, a little over some countries' plans, and a little under some others. The most important aspect is that the allies promptly implement the measures established in the 1983-1988 plan, the general stressed.

BREZHNEV LETTER ON U.S. TROOPS TO LEBANON CITED

[Text] Moscow, July 8 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev warned in a message to U.S. President Ronald Reagan that if U.S. troops were sent to Lebanon, "the Soviet Union would build its policy with due consideration of this fact," according to TASS. Brezhnev also called upon President Reagan "to do everything depending on the United States to end the bloodshed in Lebanon, to halt the barbaric extermination by the Israel troops of Lebanese and Palestinians." He expressed the hope that "the actions of the United States and its emissary in the Middle East would not furnish a screen for the continuing Israeli aggression and the extermination of the Arab people of Palestine."

Observers here noted that the Soviet leader did not specify what measures the Soviet Union will take if the U.S. troops are sent to Lebanon and Israel continues its aggression there.

Further on Letter

OW090200 Beijing XINHUA in English 0136 GMT 9 Jul 82

[Text] Washington, July 8 (XINHUA) -- The White House and the State Department confirmed this afternoon that President Reagan has received a message from Soviet President Brezhnev on Lebanon.

State Department Spokesman Dean Fischer declined to go into the substance of such a communication, but he said Acting Secretary of State Walter Stoessel met with Soviet Ambassador Anatoliy Dobrynin yesterday at the latter's request and that Dobrynin brought in a copy of the letter.

The TASS news agency said earlier today that Brezhnev has sent a message to Reagan saying that if U.S. Marines were sent to Beirut, "the Soviet Union would build its policy with due consideration of the fact."

Asked if the message had any effect on U.S. policy, Fischer said: "We are proceeding in the way we think best in order to resolve the problems of what we are faced with in west Beirut."

The United States, acting on an informal suggestion by the Lebanese Government, agreed "in principle" on July 6 to send American troops to Lebanon to help evacuate Palestine Liberation Organization forces from west Beirut. A TASS commentary yesterday accused the U.S. plan as attempts "to strengthen the aggressor" and "supplement the Israeli occupation with U.S. occupation."

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES ISRAELI OPPOSITION TO BEGIN

[Short commentary: "Israeli People Are Waking Up"]

[Text] The Begin government's large-scale invasion of Lebanon and its savage massacre of Palestinians have not only aroused the strong condemnation of world opinion, but also met with increasing opposition from the people of Israel. It was reported that on 3 July over 80,000 Israelis held a spectacular demonstration in Tel Aviv opposing the Begin government's barbaric invasion of Lebanon. On the same day, the leaders of the "Peace Now Movement" in Israel also went to the area of west Beirut surrounded by Israeli aggressors.

They met with leaders of the PLO and expressed their willingness to unite with the Palestinian people and their support for the establishment of a Palestinian state. These facts fully show that despite the temporary plight of the Palestinian people, they are not isolated in their cause. Although the Begin government has thrown its weight around in Lebanon, it is being confronted with a new front at home.

For over 30 years the Israeli authorities have kept invading their neighboring countries and successively started four Middle East wars. Under the cloak of "peace of Galilee," they have this time again invaded Lebanon, wantonly killing peaceful residents, destroying cities and villages, and rabidly bombarding Beirut to force the PLO to lay down its arms and leave Lebanon. From their several decades of unsettled life, the Israeli people clearly see that the expansionist policy of the ruling group in Tel Aviv has not only inflicted a great tragedy on the Arab people, but also caused themselves great misfortune. They have gradually realized that the Arab people are not their sworn enemies and that only the perverse measures of the Israeli ruling group are the source of their misfortune.

At present, more and more Israelis have realized that the Palestinian issue left over from history is a complicated one that should be solved in a fair and just way. The Arab and Israeli peoples must unite in a common struggle to make the Israeli authorities change their policy. Only in this way can the Middle East problem be solved.

The move was prompted by concern at the prospect of U.S. laws to be applied in Canada and to Canadian exports to the Soviet Union.

BO YIBO DISCUSSES TRAINING, SELECTING CADRES

[Article by Bo Yibo [5631 0001 3134]: "Train People Who Cherish Ideals, Have Good Moral Character and Are Knowledgeable"; based on his remarks at the forum for model workers and "published with his approval"]

[Text] We are now in an important historical period in which new cadres are replacing the old. The streamlining of the government structure is being carried out smoothly and initial achievements have been scored. The restructuring of local government organizations, as well as factories and enterprises, will begin soon. In this situation, I would like to take the opportunity of this forum for model workers to say a few words to the trade union workers, model workers and advanced people. What I am going to say can be summed up in six Chinese characters meaning talented people, ideals and unity.

First, I would like to say something about talented people. All of us are undertaking the task of selecting the most talented people and promoting them to the leading bodies at various levels. On this question, we must boldly air our views. I know that in some places the model workers are making every endeavor to do a good job and yet are often scoffed at. This is abnormal and should not continue.

What sort of people should we select to the leading organs? In saying leading organs, I also mean leading bodies at various levels. There must be criteria for the selection of cadres, that is, to select people who cherish ideals, have moral character and are capable. In ancient China, this was called "selecting and appointing people of ability." The central authorities have already done this and have built up a very good leadership core. We must continue to do this and do a better job in the future.

It is necessary to break free from the old conventions and "select and appoint people of ability" by every possible means. Of course, we must heighten our vigilance and never let the three kinds of people, that is, the supporters of the Lin Biao factional clique and the "gang of four," the smash-and-grabbers and those who made their fortune by rebellion, enter the leading bodies. If we see any of these people selected, we must be courageous and point it out.

On the question of selecting talented people, all of you are required to take the lead and play a linking role. In my opinion, the trade unions should take responsibility in this work. Of course, the trade unions are directly under the party's leadership so this is also one of the tasks for the party! To put it more concretely, "selecting and appointing people of ability" means selecting and appointing people who cherish ideals, have moral character and are capable. We had criteria is this respect in the past. In the present situation, it is necessary to see whether they adhere to the four basic principles and truly implement the line of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. This is not an empty slogan but requires concrete actions. It is also necessary to see whether they are capable and ambitious. This is the first point I wanted to make, about talented people.

Second, something about ideals. Owing to the interference and sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" during the "Great Cultural Revolution," the ideals of young people were seriously damaged. Now many young people do not cherish ideals and do not know what they are working for. Some young people have blind faith in foreign things, thinking they are good. They do not know that the ugly side of capitalism can corrupt their minds. Of course, I do not mean that none of them cherishes ideals. But many people do not possess wholesome ideology in this respect.

The ideals I have mentioned refer to communist ideals and the combination of these ideals with the concrete job one is doing. Some people may say that they have ideals and wish to join the Communist Party, but they are not admitted into the party. Generally speaking, it is a good thing to want to join the party and we welcome this attitude. However, motives and purposes may vary. Quite a few people seek truth, Marxist ideals and to work better for the party, but some see admittance into the party as a ladder for winning promotion and getting rich. These cannot be called ideals.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that it is necessary to make our people ambitious, moral, educated and highly disciplined. Young people must cherish ideals. People are less motivated without ideals and moral support. In order to live and to live meaningfully one must have high morale. This is not simple. After the "Great Cultural Revolution," many comrades and I deemed this an experience to be summed up. How could many old comrades and the revolutionary masses withstand the cruel persecution and keep high spirits during the "Great Cultural Revolution?" Because they had lofty ideals and firm faith in the revolution and in communism. They firmly believed that the CCP is correct and is bound to succeed and the mistakes our party committed were temporary mistakes, lasting perhaps 8 or 10 years. When one is armed with this spirit, one can conquer all difficulties. It was this spirit, rather than material things, that helped our comrades overcome the difficulties. This is the second point I wanted to make, about ideals.

Third, a few words about unity. Have we not talked about unity for a long time? For example, when a meeting was held we said it was a meeting of unity and of victory. We also said that unity means strength and victory. Have we not stressed unity many times? By mentioning unity now I want to say that whether one is able to unite all the people around, say, all the people in a factory or a school, to work for a common purpose is the main criterion of whether our working personnel, especially leading personnel, are doing a good job in promoting unity.

Everyone must be able to unite with people; merely behaving well is not enough. To behave well or do a good job is certainly a good thing, but it is not enough. The question of whether more people can unite is also a question of the mass viewpoint. It is necessary to show concern for others and bring the collective forces into play. The more people we have united, the more our cause will prosper.

When I talk about "talented people, ideals and unity" I mean that they are interrelated. This is a task for every leader. The trade unions must attend to this work too. These are my opinions on this question I would like to offer for your reference.

WEN ZHAO BAO WARNS ON DANGER OF "PEACEFUL EVOLUTION"

HK090438 Beijing WEN ZHAO BAO in Chinese No 37, 15 Jun 82

[Article by WEN ZHAO BAO materials office: "The Danger of Peaceful Evolution"]

[Text] The shocking facts revealed since launching the struggle against serious economic crimes show to the whole party that the danger of the socialist cause moving toward "peaceful evolution" is very far from being eliminated.

In order to speed up China's modernization, we must assign an important strategic place to correctly implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world and developing external economis ties. As a result, we are facing new and extremely complex conditions. First, there is an increase in the channels by which external reactionary forces wage "peaceful evolution" against us. Secondly, there is a greater variety of means by which foreign hostile forces wage "peaceful evolution" against us. Thirdly, the measures that external reactionary forces use to wage "peaceful evolution" against us have become more sinister. On the one hand, they seize opportunities such as student exchanges, invitations and visits, academic exchanges and so on to attempt to make a "permanent investment" in certain of our personnel who go abroad, especially in certain leading cadres and their sons and daughters, in order to cultivate their forces in China; on the other hand, by means of radio, television, books, publications and so on they focus their "peaceful infiltration" on shaking the faith of our younger generation in party leadership and the socialist system. The influence of decadent capitalist ideology on certain people, the ideological poisoning it causes, and the pollution it effects in the social mood are now much greater and more serious than in any previous period. In the economic field, smuggling and peddling of contraband, profiteering and swindling, engaging in bribery and corruption and so on are much more serious and rampant than at the time of the "three-anti" drive; and in the ideological and cultural field, worship and blind faith in things foreign, and loss of national and individual character are also more common than at almost any time ince the founding of the state. Certain weak-willed people in our ranks, even including a very small number of medium and senior-grade cadres, have become prisoners of the bourgeoisie.

In thwarting "peaceful evolution" today, we should not repeat the political movements of the past, and still less should we launch another "Great Cultural Revolution"; instead, we must work through the socialist system itself and carry out this work under leadership and in a measured and orderly way. The imperialist policy of promoting "peaceful evolution" in socialist countries is a principle laid down. However this certainly does not mean that "peaceful evolution" in socialist countries is inevitable. So long as the body of the party is healthy and able to resist corrosion by various kinds of "germs," "peaceful evolution" cannot take place in our country.

RENMIN RIBAO ON UNITING SPEED, ECONOMIC RETURN

[Article by Yang Jianbai [2799 1017 4101]: "Brief Views on the Question of Speed and Return"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang has repeatedly stressed integrating speed with economic return and striving for a speed that brings about a good return. This is a maxim which hits at the current problem and is also a question of fundamental importance in economic theory.

Our country's economic situation has obviously improved after undergoing readjustments over the past 2 years and more. However, the factors accounting for an unstable economy have not been thoroughly eliminated. Stressing economic return is not only a long-term strategic principle, but is also an urgent task in carrying out economic readjustments and straightening out enterprises. However, stressing economic return does not imply neglecting speed. This demands that we correctly understand the relationship between speed and returns.

The speed that we always refer to means the growth rate from the initial stage to the later stage in the development of the national economy. The speed itself should be obvious and exact without exaggeration. Exaggeration is usually imposed by people by means of false reports. Certainly, the so-called false reports do not merely mean willfully fabricated reports. They also include a series of complicated factors in the system, accounting method, price and work. This requires specific analysis.

The production speed that we demand is the speed of production on the basis of good quality, low production cost and high marketability.

As far as quality is concerned, all products produced must have good quality. Those unqualified products should not be allowed to leave the workshop and go on sale in the market. Certainly, they should not be taken into account in the statistics on production growth.

As far as economic accounting is concerned, its fundamental principle is to obtain maximum economic results with minimum labor consumption. For production under normal conditions, it is necessary to strengthen accounting and strive to lower material and labor consumption in order to lower production cost, improve labor productivity and produce products which have good quality and low consumption rates. Only such products should be included in calculating the production growth rate. Some people say that the speed of production should only take output into account and not input. This is a misunderstanding. Products which require an extremely high production cost, exceeding the essential social labor consumption, will inevitably be eliminated through competition if they are not improved.

As far as the actual conditions are concerned, under the social production system carried out under the condition of social division of labor, all products, whether or not they go to the consumers via the market, will only be realized by means of exchange. This puts forth in an objective manner the question that products must be marketable. If products produced are unmarketable and are not likely to be marketable for some time in the future, we should, according to the laws governing economic development, change the production orientation and carry out the policy of closing down, suspending and amalgamating the enterprises and shifting enterprises onto other production. Otherwise, this will only bring about stockpiling. Some of our products are produced and accumulated products. If we say that such products bring exaggeration to the speed of production, this obviously is a question of system and work, and not a problem of speed itself.

Here, in order to avoid confusion, we must elaborate on the meaning of return and result. In my opinion, the true results of either macroeconomic or microeconomic activities should be judged from an overall angle of the society.

Economic activities which fail to bring economic benefits to the society or even bring damage to the society should not be regarded as effective. In this sense, it is difficult to separate result and return; and it is also in this sense that result and return are used as synonyms in this article.

Speed and return are integrated. We must affirm this principle. The true meaning of speed defined above is being analyzed from this point of view. The growth of social production relies on a scienific organization of production and business management. Production of poor quality and unmarketable products at a high production cost in a ruthless manner and at the expense of equipment and energy violates the principle of labor economy and fails to form a real speed. That is to say, the return is restricting the speed. Labor which is not recognized by the society and labor which fails to bring about good results will only cause a drop in speed in the long run and will not bring about a growth in speed. Some people think that stressing the returns and demanding good returns will only be achieved at the expense of speed. I do not agree. The reaction that economic return has on speed only means restriction of exaggeration on speed. In a dialectical point of view, laying stress on economic return is accelerating the growth of speed. This is because the better the returns the faster the speed, and not the other way around. Based on the above analysis, I think that the relationship between speed and return is not that of a "fish and bear's paw which cannot be obtained at the same time." On the contrary, to really achieve a faster speed of development which is not exaggerated, we have no other alternative but to strive to improve the return.

We are now situated in a stage of readjusting the national economy, thus the speed cannot be too fast. We must seek truth from facts and refrain from blindly pursuing a high speed. However, we must not understimate the importance of speed in the economic development of our country because of this. As we all know, our country's current economic standard is not high at all and our scientific and technological level is about several decades behind certain economically developed countries. If our social production fails to maintain a certain speed, or fails to develop at a faster speed than these developed countries, we will not be able to shorten the gap between us or to keep up with or overtake them. As far as practical needs are concerned, only by maintaining an essential speed can we overcome financial and economic problems and improve the people's livelihood. In light of this, we see that it is still very essential to strive for a relatively fast speed on the basis of obtaining good returns.

Finally, let us briefly talk about the question of how to strive for a speed that brings about good returns.

In order to strive for a better speed focusing on improving returns, I think we should simultaneously grasp the macroeconomic return and microeconomic return. The speed and return of the whole society is formed by summing up the speed and returns of various production units. Economic work is like warfare. We must do a good job of organizing the troops in order to win a battle; on the other hand, the decisions made by the base camps usually master the war situation. Thus, we cannot get good results in economic work by just grasping either the enterprises or the big problems.

As far as the enterprises are concerned, in order to improve returns and accelerate speed, we must first carry out such rectification as strengthening business management, perfecting rules and regulations, implementing the economic responsibility system and personal responsibility system, arousing the enthusiasm of all the laborers, and so forth. I am not going to elaborate on this now. I must point out that microeconomic returns should, in principle, be solved by the strenuous efforts of the enterprises themselves. However, problems which inevitably involve macroeconomic decisions and reform in a system must not be solved by the enterprises themselves, but must be solved by the higher levels. Only by correctly solving many problems in this respect can we improve the macroeconomic returns. This also means speeding up the growth of the national income in kind within the scope of the whole society in order to better satisfy the people's material and cultural demands. There are many questions concerning this and only three which are concerned with returns will be discussed here.

First, the question of loss and financial subsidies. Certain subsidies such as subsidies for the difference between purchase and sale prices of agricultural products are, in essence, the state's financial subsidies for filling the gap between price and value. The state has no alternative but to adopt this measure under the complicated conditions that the commodity prices cannot be readjusted in a short time. In the long run, it is necessary to readjust prices. Otherwise the financial burdens will be heavier. In addition, it is necessary to reconsider whether or not the state should be responsible for or subsideize some losses. According to statistics, there are now more than 1,300 small nitrogenous fertilizer plants in the country and more than half of them suffered a loss in 1981. Is it necessary for such plants and other plants which suffer losses to continue production? In my opinion, they should be divided and grouped under certain categories and studied in detail. The state ususally takes up the responsibility for the losses and grants subsidies. This does not help to improve the economic return but gets the opposite result. We cannot deny that certain losses are brought about by irrational prices. In my opinion, although it is impossible at the present stage to carry out an overall reform in the price system, we must carry out individual readjustments. Otherwise we will not be able to establish the economic accounting system or the economic responsibility system. However, we must point out that many of the losses are a result of poor business management. These enterprises which are running at a loss continue to exist by relying on the national income that other departments produce. This should be fundamentally changed.

Second, the question of stockpiling of products. Under the current system, unmarketable products are continuously produced and continuously accumulated, and responsibility is to be taken up by the state. Obviously, this is an irrational system. If we do not change it, we will not be able to talk about the economic responsibility system or improve economic returns.

Third, the question of strengthening planned management. Whether or not the macroeconomic decisions and the state's planned arrangements are correct has great influence on the macroeconomic returns. A minor error can ususally cause a loss of millions and hundreds of millions of yuan. Under the condition of producing and exchanging commodities, the plans must accord with the actual condition of market demand. This demands that we master the changes in the market, carry out market forecasting and make use of the market mechanism to carry outplanned regulation. Accordingly, it is necessary to expand the power of the localities and the decisionmaking power of the enterprises, and integrate planning with initiative and flexibility. However, giving the lower levels a greater power and making use of the market mechanism does not imply allowing anarchism to develop. Over the past 2 years, there were phenomena of blind construction and blind production which damaged the implementation of the state plan. As far as the relationship between exchanging commodities and work arrangements is concerned, Lenin pointed out: the adoption of the policy or market exchange does not change the single state economic plan, and does not go beyond its framework but alters the approach to its realization." ("Collected works of Lenin" vol 35, p 534) In light of this, we see that in either giving the lower levels greater power of making use of the market mechanism, we should not abandon the principle of state planned guidance and control. The only thing that changes is the approach to realizing the plan. The state plan must accord with the actual market situation leaving some margin for error. Control should not be too rigid, but the authoritativeness of the state plans is unshakable. After expanding the decisionmaking power, it is necessary to make good use of the economic lever and in particular, the lever of interest rates and taxation rates, forcing those who go astray from the plan to comply. At the same time, it is necessary to have economic legislation and various rules and regulations, and also strengthen supervision by the bank and financial supervision. We must punish according to law those who do not submit the sufficient amount of profits and tax. The state's planning organs also have the power to inspect and supervise the implementation of the plans. We must not allow people to promote blind construction and production which consequently damage our plan. We believe that by integrating the economic lever with the implementation of economic legislation and establishing the concept of the overall situation, and striving to strengthen planned economy and improve the economic return, we will definitely speed up the development of the national economy.

LITERARY, ART CIRCLES ADVISED TO STUDY PHILOSOPHY

[Report: "Literature and Art Workers Must Have a Solid Foundation of Philosophy"]

[Text] Editorial note: In a letter to Comrade Meng Yichuan, vice principal of the party school under the Ministry of Culture, Comrade Yang Xianzhen pointed out that literature and art workers must study Marxist philosophy. This is very important. We now publish this letter together with a synopsis of Comrade Hu Sheng's article "Letter to a Friend" (originally carried on page 3 of the 12 April 1982 issue of this newspaper) which was recommended in the letter. [end editor's note]

1. Letter to Comrade Meng Yichuan From Comrade Yang Xianzhen

Comrade Yichuan: I hope that you will look at Comrade Hu Sheng's "Letter to a Friend" which was carried on page 3 of the 12 April issue of GUANGMING RIBAO, especially the 13th, 14th and 15th paragraphs which say: "Historical researchers need to study philosophy, to study Marxist philosophy, and to study dialectical materialist theories and methods...."

These passages refer to those engaged in historical research. If we change "history" to "literature and art," I feel that these passages are totally applicable to those engaged in literary and artistic research. Comrade Hu Sheng said that historical research calls for a solid philosophical foundation.... Similarly, literary and artistic research also calls for a solid philosophical foundation. Those engaged in literary and art criticism and appraisal in particular need a solid philosophical foundation. Certain types of ideological turmoil in literature and art circles stem from the lack of a Marxist philosophical foundation, in which case there is no common language. You can vigorously advocate that all literary and art workers and writers should study Marxist philosophy, as well as dialectical materialism and historical materialism.

Yang Xianzhen, 13 April 1982

2. Synopsis of Comrade Hu Sheng's Article "Letter to a Friend"

Is there in our historians circles a tendency to underestimate theoretical thinking? Have we, due to an underestimation of theory, degenerated into naturalism (that is wantonness), with the result that we think incorrectly? I do not think that we can deny this. Consequently, for those doing research into the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom as well as historians researching other areas, it is probably necessary to stress the study of theoretical thinking and of thinking correctly.

To this end, those doing historical research need to study philosophy, Marxist philosophy, dialectical materialist theories and methods and theories and methods of historical materialism and historical dialectics. This is perhaps an important, and even crucial, way to raise our level of research. Raising the level of our research work actually means raising the level of those of us who are historical researchers.

Our historical research needs a solid philosophical foundation, that is, a dialectical materialist and historical materialist philosophical foundation. Even with a common philosophical foundation, we will not immediately reach common conclusions on every concrete question. We will still need to "let a hundred schools of thought contend." However, the result of "contending" will possibly lead to a commonly acknowledged conclusion. If it is a "debate" without a common philosophical foundation, it will be hard to find a common language and to reach a common conclusion.

Naturally, there is more than one way to increase the ability to think theoretically. I consider the study of philosophy to be a fundamental and indispensable way, but I do not reject other methods.

CHINA DAILY CITES HONGQI ON THEORETICAL WORK

[Report: "Party Leaders Call for Better Theoretical Work"]

[Text] China's theoreticians are urged to do a better job to combine Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought with the implementation of the four modernizations, says the editorial board of HONGQI (RED FLAG, organ of CPC's Central Committee) in the magazine's latest issue. Excerpts from the article follow:

Leading comrades of the Communist Party of China's Central Committee have pointed out that the party's theoretical work is not in accord with its practices, and they have urged theoreticians to solve the problem.

The basic task of the party's theoretical work is to combine the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought with the implementation of the four modernizations (industry, agriculture, defence and science and technology).

Since the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee (December, 1978), a series of correct domestic and foreign policies have been formulated and implemented, and this has shown the high Marxist level of our leadership.

But the party's theoretical work has not been persuasive enough in expounding and publicizing policies. For instance, some comrades have not paid enough attention to the four basic principles (socialist road, people's democratic dictatorship, leadership of the Communist Party, Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought) that the party has reiterated. Others even counterpose the upholding of these principles to the emancipation of thought, thinking that they have fettered the theoretical work.

Problem

It should be pointed out, moreover, that with certain individual comrades, it is not only a problem of adaptability to the task of the party, but a problem of incorrect thinking and style of study. For instance, there are people who advance various kinds of viewpoints and make speeches violating these principles or openly advocating absolute "freedom of speech."

So far, we have not fought energetically enough against this tendency toward bourgeois liberalization. Now we must treat this problem seriously.

Comrades engaging in the theoretical work of the party must identify themselves politically with the party centre. That is to say, they must uphold the four basic principles.

Comrade Chen Yun has said: Art and literary workers of the party must regard themselves, first of all, as ordinary members of the party, and in no case should they regard themselves, first of all, as literary people. Comrade Hu Yaobang has also said: Our party-member writers, artists, and theoretical workers should never forget even for a moment that they are first of all party members.

Theoretical workers must consider publicizing the party's line and policies and important task and a glorious duty because they are the life of the party and the guarantee for socialist modernization.

But to publicize the policies of the party should not be restricted to mere interpretation, although that is necessary. It should also include a very difficult work of theoretical research, for without a penetrating study of Marxist theories, without a rich knowledge of history and accurate understanding of actual conditions, a perfect programme of propaganda for the party's policies will not be possible.

RADIO-TV UNIVERSITY GRADUATES FIRST CLASS

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA) -- China's Central Radio and Television University graduated today its first class with 78,031 students majoring in machinery or electronics.

The number is equal to 30 percent of the country's regular college graduates this year.

Minister of Education He Dongchang and Minister of Radio and Television Wu Lengxi, both newly-appointed, spoke at a ceremony held here today to mark the event and extended congratulations to the graduates and their teachers who are scattered all over the country.

He Dongchang announced that the state recognizes the TV university graduates as regular three-year college graduates.

The minister of education praised the TV university as one of the effective ways to develop higher education in China.

The graduates began their audio-visual courses in February 1973 when the university was founded. Formerly workers, school teachers, technicians and government functionaries, the graduates in the past three years drew full pay from their original units, which also paid the tuition.

They will return to their units this month.

He Dongchang suggested that the university combine television courses with radio and correspondence ones as soon as possible to ease the shortage of television channels.

The minister hoped that courses of arts will be opened. The university is scheduled to open its first such course in the fall. By that time, He Dongchange said, there will be five specialities in science, engineering and arts.

The minister of radio and television said his ministry will continue cooperating with the education ministry in running the TV university.

Yuan Baohua, chairman of the national committee for workers' education, appealed at today's ceremony to enterprises and government departments to send more workers and staff members to the TV university in order to raise production and work efficiency.

Through unified examinations, the Central Radio and Television University since 1979 has enrolled three groups of more than 800,000 students nationwide.

Among them, 440,000 only took one subject each, and 140,000 such students finished their studies in 1980 and 1981.

The TV university now has more than 20,000 full-time and spare-time teachers, who are former engineers, faculty members of regular colleges and secondary technical schools.

JIANGXI DEFENSE INDUSTRY RAISES ECONOMIC RESULTS

OW080226 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Jul 82

[Text] Jiangxi Province's industrial departments of national defense have paid attention to raising economic results and perfecting the economic responsibility system. They have persistently promoted mass activities to increase production, practice economy, raise income and cut costs, thereby achieving steady increases in production.

By the end of June, these departments had fulfilled 53.1 percent of the annual production quotas for 1982, an increase of 37.2 percent over the corresponding period of last year.

In June, although the normal production and lives of cadres, staff and workers were affected by flood disasters, the entire defense industrial system still overfulfilled its monthly production quotas by 4.3 percent, making June the most productive month in the first half of 1982, thanks to the strenuous efforts of cadres, staff and workers to combat flood, restore production and minimize damage.

In fulfilling their production quotas for the first half of this year, the various enterprises under Jiangxi's defense industrial system had to overcome numerous difficulties. At the beginning of the year, many enterprises faced the problem of insufficient production tasks and anticipated huge losses due to the paring down of military production tasks and slow sales of manufactured goods for civilian use. Under these conditions, the enterprises paid equal attention to both military and civilian production tasks and improved the quality of their products. On the one hand, they gave priority to the production of items for military use, improved their quality, cut costs and insisted on fulfilling all contracts to build up their reputation. On the other hand, they never relaxed efforts to produce goods for civilian use, paid attention to market trends, enlarged the wholesale volume of goods that were in great demand on the market, increased their variety and specifications and strived to give good technological service to customers, thereby turning slow-selling products into brisk-selling commodities.

As a result of these efforts, Jiangxi's defense industrial departments succeeded in signing production and sales contracts for some 85 percent of items included in their production plans for civilian-use items. To solve problems of insufficient production tasks and shortage of fuel and raw materials, they fully mobilized the masses in carrying out technological innovations and improving production technology. Plants showing an over-consumption of diesel oil, electric power or coal were thoroughly rebuilt and out-of-date production techniques were abandoned, thereby raising productivity and cutting down on the consumption of fuel and raw materials.

DAZHONG RIBAO ON RURAL LIBERALIZATION PROBLEMS

["Talks on Rural Work" by Wang Jundeng [3769 0689 4098] and Ren Qiguang [0117 0796 0342] "Integrate State Plans With Decisionmaking Powers"]

[Text] The question of how, when implementing agricultural production plans, to handle the relations between the partial and the whole, that is, how to integrate guidance by state plans with respect for commune and brigade decisionmaking powers, is a matter to which we must attach great importance and solve while currently developing the agricultural economy.

In the past, due to "leftist" influence, there was too much stress on plans, and the upper level had the final say in every matter, great or small. As a result, there was excessive control, the production teams had no decisionmaking powers, and the enthusiasm of the production teams and peasants was gravely suppressed. We suffered a lot from this. Since the third plenary session, with the institution of production responsibility systems in the rural areas, certain units have gone to the other extreme without exercising any control. As a result, liberalization trends have appeared in production. Some peasants say: "As the land has been assigned to us, the upper levels need not bother about it, and we can grow whatever we like." This practice of separating state plans from peasant decisionmaking powers and setting the one against the other is wrong.

As everyone knows, the agricultural plans drawn up by the state are arranged in accordance with the needs of the development of the national economy and the people's life and square with the peasants' fundamental interests. Only by arranging production under the guidance of the state plans can the peasants avoid blindness in action, truly bring into play the role of decisionmaking powers and achieve optimal economic returns. Otherwise, if they proceed from personal interests and grow whatever they like, agricultural production is bound to get into a chaotic state, and the result will be imbalance between production and sales and between supply and demand. This will damage the national economy, and the peasants, too, will end up losers. Of course, it is not right just to have state plans without peasant decisionmaking powers. The peasants have abundant practical experience. Allowing them to enjoy full decisionmaking powers within a certain scope and extent and in certain cardinal links, and allowing them to bring into play their own strong points in accordance with the principle of acting in light of local conditions are of great significance for mobilizating the peasants' activism, enlivening the economy, and making up for inadequacies in the state plans. Hence, state plans and peasant decisionmaking powers constitute a unified organic entity. It is wrong to lay onesided stress on one of the two and neglect the other.

The correct method should be to organically integrate state plans with peasant decisionmaking powers and succeed in exercising control without stifling things and in enlivening the economy without creating chaos. This means exerting much effort, and requires a sound and scientific approach. According to our investigations, some places have applied philosophical thought to guide planning work, grasped the chief contradictions and given prominence to the key points. This has greatly enlightened us. First, they have solved the contradictions in crops. They get an unremitting grasp of the main production quotas for items that affect the overall situation, are related to the national economy and people's life, and come under state monopoly purchase, such as grain, oil and cotton. As for ordinary production quotas or secondary grain varieties, they give free rein to the masses to bring into play the auxiliary role of regulation by market mechanism; after the production teams and peasants have fulfilled the state plans, they are allowed to organize production themselves in light of local conditions, in accordance with market conditions and the state of supply and requirements, and within the scope of the policy regulations. Second, they have solved the contradictions in competing for land. Unified arrangements are made for the collective land, while the peasants can make their own arrangements for their private plots. On the collective land, they can carry out the unified sowing plans in a relatively concentrated way on large tracts of good land, while the responsibility households can make their own arrangements for cultivation on small and scattered pieces of land or marginal land.

Third, they have solved well the contradictions in handling second-category agricultural and sideline products. Products of this category for which procurement quotas are set can be handled by the communes and brigades or the peasants themselves after the quota bases are met. In this way they have grasped the chief contradictions; some things are prohibited, while others are permitted, and some methods are blocked while others run smoothly. They "control" things without affecting the peasants' enthusiasm, and there is "liveliness" without upsetting the unified nature of the state plans. They have "big centralization and small decentralizations" and "big plans and small freedoms." This has produced very good results.

Of course, the state, the collective and the peasant must make common efforts to truly integrate the state plans with the decisionmaking powers of the communes and brigades. When assigning plans, the state must take full account of local conditions and act accordingly, so that the communes and brigades and the peasants can make the best use of trade conditions and achieve optimal economic returns. At the same time it is necessary to guarantee supplies of chemical fertilizer, pesticides and other materials needed by the collectives and the peasants in production. The state must promptely procure all these products that are procured and avoid pile-ups, which would cause losses. For their part the collectives and the individual peasants must fully understand the importance of carrying out the state plans, and clearly realize that practicing production responsibility systems does not mean getting off the track of regarding state plans as the main factor and that the principle of taking simultaneous account of the interests of the state, the collective and the individual must not be forgotten. In this way they will spontaneously integrate the interests of the partial with those of the whole and the state plans with decisionmaking powers, do everything possible to make a success of production, make their proper contribution to the state, and increase collective and individual income.

Over the past year, according to plans set forth by the central authorities and the provincial CCP committee, party organizations at all levels throughout the province have generally trained their members by rotation by organizing members to attend party schools, adapting teaching materials from the resolutions adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, holding party member training classes and upholding the principle of "three meetings and one class" [san hui yi ke]. Over 2.5 million party members throughout the province have been trained, accounting for over 80 percent of the total number. Through the training, the broad masses of party cadres throughout the province have oriented their thinking to the resolutions, have further defined their working orientation and have upgraded their consciousness in implementing the party's line, principles and policies.

To bring into full play the bastion role of party organizations at grassroots level and the vanguard and model role of party members, the province has successively conducted campaigns in a thorough way by designating advanced party units and individuals. As a result, there are 8,689 party branches at or above the county level and 46,497 individuals throughout the province appraised as advanced in conducting these campaigns. The party committees at all levels have adopted various ways to commend these model units and individuals and to disseminate their model deeds in a big way.

Since 1982, the province has recruited over 45,000 new party members, and most of them are backbone personnel of various industries and trades. The province has also made new progress in recruiting new party members among intellectuals. There are 9,410 new party members who are specialists and technicians in various fields, accounting for 20.9 percent of the total number of new party members.

The quality of new party members has generally been upgraded. Of advanced producers and workers throughout the province, 24.2 percent are from these new party members.

SHANGHAI TEAM EXAMINES WANG HONGWEN'S OLD BASE

[Excerpts] Shanghai, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- Most of the 30 party style investigation teams dispatched by the Shanghai Municipal CCP Committee have successfully carried out their investigation and study tasks and left the units where they were dispatched. At present cadres are being trained by the municipal CCP committee to form a second group of investigation teams which will be dispatched to investigate the party style of a number of units.

During the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution," the party style of the Shanghai No 17 cotton textile mill -- the old base from where the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique's prime culprit Wang Hongwen gained fame and rose to power -- was seriously undermined. Following the downfall of the "gang of four," the "exposure-criticism-investigation" work was carried out quite successfully at the plant and the plant's leading group was totally reorganized. Now the members of the leading group of the plant are more united. The secretary of the party committee and the director of the plant have both demonstrated good democratic work style. During the past 3 years, the plant has made relatively rapid progress in promoting production. Before the "Great Cultural Revolution" it was a mediocre unit; now the plant is among the advanced ones. The party style investigation team enthusiastically summed up the past experience of the plant together with the plant's party committee, pointed out the plant's shortcomings and made efforts to help the plant make further progress.

Statistics show that at present more than 340 investigation teams have been formed by various districts, counties and bureaus in the municipality, with a total of more than 1,800 team members.

During the forum, through reviewing the history of the party's growth and development and its brilliant achievements in leading socialist transformation and construction, the participants profoundly felt that the points made by Comrade Wan Li on carrying forward the fine tradition of hard work and plain living, wholeheartedly serving the people and promoting party work style, were not only demands on the local party organizations but also demands and hopes on the PLA party organizations and every party member. In particular, it is all the more important that we old comrades take the lead in strengthening party spirit, changing the social atmosphere, and building spiritual civilization. TAN QILONG INSPECTS PROBLEMS IN NORTH SICHUAN

HK040557 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 4 Jul 82

[Text] According to RENMIN RIBAO, after conducting serious investigation and study, the responsible comrades of the Sichuan Provincial CCP Committee and the prefectural and municipal CCP committees held warm discussions at a recent provincial CCP committee work conference on the questions of how to promote the further development of the rural economy and make the peasants rich as quickly as possible. They reached unanimity in understanding and decided on the necessary policy measures in light of realities.

In mid-April, provincial CCP committee First Secretary Tan Qilong went to the mountain areas in north Sichuan to carry out investigations. He bore in mind the question raised by a leading central comrade of how to transform the rural economy in north Sichuan as quickly as possible. Comrade Tan Qilong visited more than 20 counties and municipalities in some 40 days. He went to the foot of the Min and Xue Mountains, the sources of the Fu and Jialing Rivers, and the Daba Mountains, which were formerly the base of the Red Fourth Front Army. He saw the serious destruction of natural ecology in these places. There have been many natural disasters and serious soil erosion. Not only is it impossible to improve grain production but output of many forestry, sideline and indigenious products has also fallen greatly. At the same time he visited several score production teams and households that have done well in diversification. Average income per head on these teams and households is generally 100 to 300 percent more than on other teams and households, and some of these teams and households are outstanding even in the context of the whole province.

The provincial CCP committee work conference printed and distributed Comrade Tan Qilong's investigation on north Sichuan and 20 examples of getting rich through production.

After conducting his investigation, Comrade Tan Qilong put forward specific views on how to uproot poverty, plant affluence and get a firm foothold in rural north Sichuan. He held: The root cause of the long failure to develop the economy rapidly in north Sichuan lies in the destruction of forests for land reclamation and single-minded concentration on grain production, which have caused a malignant ecological cycle. Hence, protecting and developing forestry is the key strategy for changing the poverty of north Sichuan.

He summed up an experience: If there are no forests on the mountains, rocks and soil tumble down; the lower reaches of the river suffer, but the root cause is in the upper reaches. Hence, it is necessary to grasp the vigorous revival of forestry as the first topic in leading north Sichuan to affluence.

Since January, other secretaries and standing committee members of the provincial CCP committee and the governor and vice governors have also gone to eastern, western and southern parts of Sichuan to investigate and study. On their return, they attended the provincial CCP committee work conference. They held that the views put forward by Comrade Tan Qilong in his investigation of north Sichuan were also applicable to mountain and pasture areas throughout the province. They held that to speed up the economic development of the rural areas of the whole province, apart from continuing to carry out the current practical and effective principles and policies of the central authorities and the provincial CCP committee, it is also necessary to decide on a number of policy measures to suit the new conditions.

The provincial CCP committee has stipulated: In developing the economy in the mountain areas, it is necessary to bring the two initiatives into full play and organize a joint effort by the collective and the individual. Wherever feasible, more private plots on mountain slopes should be allocated to the peasants, and hillsides and barren land unsuitable for collective management should be allocated to the peasant households for planting trees. The collective will retain ownership of the land, but the trees will forever belong to the peasnats, and there will also be the right of inheritance.

The regions in high mountains and hill country should get a good grasp of building basic farmland and improve crop yields. Under the premise of ensuring a steady increase in total grain output, mountain slopes that should be gradually switched back from agriculture to forestry should be distributed among specialized groups and households with contracts for tree planting.

The provincial CCP committee has also decided to allocate 395 million jin of grain mainly for use as subsidies for reduced grain procurement and sales in grain-deficient production teams whose land is to be switched back from agriculture to forestry or animal husbandry. This measure will be in effect until 1990. Counties in the high mountain regions (excluding the three autonomous regions) will assume sole responsibility for their own grain production and will correspondingly institute sole responsibility in financial matters for 5-year terms. Under the principle of upholding voluntariness, mutual aid, equality and consultation, it is proposed that the boundaries between different areas, trades and ownership systems be broken down and that various forms of joint undertakings be adopted to develop forestry, sideline and indigenous products and their processing, transport and sales.

SICHUAN RIBAO REPORTS ON RURAL POLICY RELAXATION

[Report on 4 July SICHUAN RIBAO commentator's article: "Bring Into Full Play the Power of Policies and Speed Up the Development of Rural Economy"]

[Text] The article says: The recent provincial CCP Committee work conference proceeded from the province's reality, suited the new situation and took a number of new policy measures for developing the rural economy. Some of these represent further relaxation of policies, some involve handing over more decisionmaking powers to the grassroots, and some mean providing a proper degree of support, under the premise of self-reliance. These measures all accord with the province's conditions and the people's desires.

The article says: The experience of practice in recent years has proven that relaxing the policies by proceeding from reality and emancipating the mind is profoundly supported by the masses, and has stimulated the prosperous development of production. In light of the current new situation, certain policies need further relaxation.

The article says: To bring the power of policies into full play, it is essential to maintain their continuity and stability. There have been many policy changes since liberation, and the masses are still agraid of further changes. We must conduct repeated propaganda and education, give demonstrations and take action to ensure that the masses will believe that the party's basic policies will not be changed. Thus they can get on with production with minds at ease. In this way the party's policies will also turn into the masses' action, and produce tremendous force.

[Radio and television speech delivered by Banqen Erdini, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and honorary chairman of the Buddhist Association of China -- recorded in Tibetan, with Mandarin translation read by announcer; date not given]

[Text] Fellow clansmen and compatriots of Xizang. On my arrival in Lhasa, the capital of the autonomous region, I was given a warm and solemn welcome by responsible persons of the party, government and army in Xizang and the cadres and people of all nationalities. I express sincere thanks for this. I also extend cordial regards to the people of Xizang.

I have been commissioned by the central authorities to visit and inspect Xizang. Xizang is my second home and is also my personal home. I have special feelings and love for Xizang. I am always thinking of Xizang, the people of Xizang, the mountains, waters and pastures of Xizang, and the [words indistinct] of Xizang. Thanks to the cordial concern of the Central Committee and the warm welcome of the people of Xizang, I am extremely happy to be returning now to Xizang, which I have not seen for 18 years.

My tasks here are, first, to inspect conditions in all respects in Xizang, to report to the central authorities. I will also put forward suggestions to the local authorities on bringing into play Xizang's superior features and avoiding the shortcomings. Second, I will comfort the peasants, workers, and PLA in Xizang. Third, I will call to pay respects at Buddhist images, pagodas and some monasteries [words indistinct] and will pray for prosperity and peace. At the same time there are a number of believers in the living Buddha who demand to pay respects to me as a matter of absolute necessity. They can do so, as they desire. I will also engage in some ad-hoc political and religious activities.

Today I want to tell the believers in the living Buddha, when you come to pay respects to me, just come with the intention of renovating your religious feelings, and do not consecrate me by any means. In my view, there is absolutely no need for consecration. [Words indistinct] excessive worship and consecration affects daily life and hampers production, which would make me uneasy and sad. In short, I have come to complete Xizang's [words indistinct]. So do not consecreate me when you come to pay respects.

Religious freedom is party policy. [passage indistinct] At the same time, under the brilliant beacon of the party's nationality policies, the people of Xizang enjoy true nationality and regional autonomy rights. We should strengthen the unity of Hans and Tibetans, enhance our patriotism, and preserve the unity of the motherland as we cherish our eyes.

Young people should study culture. In particular they should do well in studying Tibetan script and language and other aspects of the culture and knowledge of their own nationality, so as to enhance the cultural level of the whole nationality and bring the Tibetans into the ranks of the advanced nationalities.

The peasants and herdsmen should do well in agricultural and animal husbandry production and change the poverty of Xizang, so as to build our beloved Xizang into a united, affluent, democratic and civilized new Xizang [words indistinct].

HEILONGJIANG RIBAO ON ENFORCING PARTY DISCIPLINE

[Text] In the sense of greater depth and breadth, fighting against serious crimes in the economic field is a struggle against capitalist corruption and for maintaining communist purity. It shows that Communist Party members and revolutionary cadres must constantly go through rigorous trials in the socialist period. It is a life and death issue for the party in power to be determined by straightening out party style, and discovering and overcoming the decadent nature among our ranks. In order to effectively carry out this struggle, one of the important problems is to wield anew the tremendous authority of party discipline.

Confucius said: "It is cruel to punish someone without having first educated him." It has never been our party's policy to punish one without having first educated him. The problem now, however, is not that of "no education," but of "repeated education." Isn't it education to formulate and study "a number of guiding principles on rules in political life within the party?" Are the speeches on the rectification of party spirit delivered by the leading comrades of the central authorities education or not? Are those articles published in the newspapers and the voices of the masses "education" or not? Six years have passed since the smashing of the "gang of four" and 4 years have passed since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. This is absolutely not a short time for conducting education. The present problem is that some people refuse to mend their ways despite repeated admonitions. There are two aspects to this problem. One is the existence of lax discipline over many years. The other is that quite a few people are in the habit of practicing dishonest dealings. In such circumstances, problems cannot be resolved by just paying lip service.

It is necessary to adhere to ideological education, which should be conducted time and again. However, ideological education is not a panacea. In the past few years, there has existed this strange phenomenon: With regard to engaging in evil practice, and with a criterion and demarcation line in mind, the people can distinguish good from evil and know exactly what to do; on the other hand, some Communist Party members and leading cadres made mistakes of "being muddled when involved." That is to say, they have an unclear understanding of what is happening. Despite repeated persuasion from the party committee and repeated eduation from the higher authorities, some people still remain unchanged and persist in their own behavior. How dare they "not abide by the rules" and resist? One of the reasons is that they take advantage of lax discipline and exercise their power to protect themselves by using "connections." It shows that not only can we use the method of persuasion but must add the method of discipline. The execution of discipline is a form of education. By punishing through iron discipline those "unchanging" diehards, not only can we learn from past mistakes to avoid future ones, and educate and save some comrades from disaster, but we can also improve the image of the party and exchange the trust of the masses.

Discipline must be iron. That is to say, it must have a sacred force which cannot be violated, and it must also be the rule which everyone strictly abides by. Not long after the victory of the October Revolution, Lenin said: "Now almost everyone sees that without strict and genuine iron discipline, we Bolsheviks could not hold political power for 2 and 1/2 years, and not even for 2 and 1/2 months." In the early period after the founding of PRC, werealized this truth too. Nevertheless, not everyone remembers this truth today.

There is a saying, "it won't happen again," which means acknowledging existing facts. As mentioned above, why were people able to identify the evil wind while those who stirred up the evil wind were unable to have a clear understanding and had ideological problems? The reason "there is no improvement after education" lies in whether the illegal economic interests achieved by them should be touched or not. In order to protect their existing ineterest, those who believe in the doctrine of "power becomes useless after one's tenure of office" have used every conceivable means to counter disciplinary inspection and exposure by others. In such circumstances, "iron discipline" will mean nothing if there is only ideological criticism but no administrative punishment and no economic refunds and compensation are issued under the pretext that "it won't happen again." How can it save those who made mistakes, or educate others? As a result, we can neither learn from past mistakes, nor can we avoid future ones. Therefore, there is only one principle in "iron discipline," namely, "strictly executing discipline and investigating all violations of discipline." We must correct all mistakes, no matter how many there are or where they are.

There is another kind of case, "discipline can find no way in face of officials," as described by the masses. It is difficult to investigate some cases in which the persons in charge are involved, let alone to deal with them. Some people deal with the cases by the method of "grasping typical cases." Therefore, in their view the handling of a certain individual case means overall victory. Those who follow crooked ways believe in the truth of the "law never goes against the masses," and "some big people will take up the responsibility in the event of a crisis" and care for nothing. All this illustrates the existence of some people's priviliged rights above discipline, thus neglecting its value.

There is a Chinese saying: "If you want to work with iron, you yourself must be tough." Applying this to the problems of discipline, it means that leading cadres and leading organizations must not only become the models in executing discipline, but must also be models tougher than iron in executing it. Only when we act as Lenin said and strictly execute discipline among the Communist Party members and the cadres can there be a decisive and good change in party spirit and a guarantee for carrying out the line and policies of the 3d plenary session of the CCP Central Committee and for realizing the four modernizations.

MA WENRUI ON COMMUNIST IDEOLOGICAL EDUCATION

[Article by Shaanxi Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ma Wenrui: "Educate Party Members and the Masses in Communist Ideology"]

[Text] With the practical action of building socialist materialist civilization and spiritual civilization, the party members and the masses of people of our whole province have ushered in the 61st anniversary of the founding of our party.

As we commemorate this solemn festival, whether old or new party members, or comrades inside and outside the party, we all should properly do a little thinking and determine whether we profoundly understand the revolutionary cause undertaken by the party and whether we have done a good job.

We often talk about "the party's cause." What is the party's cause? As the term suggests, the Communist Party's cause is the realization of communism. To realize communism, we must make our way step by step. As far as the conditions of our country are concerned, we must first wrest political power, establish a state of dictatorship of the people's democracy and accomplish the democratic revolutionary task. Then, we must realize the socialist transformation of the system of private ownership of the means of production, eliminate the exploiting classes and carry out socialist transformation. At the current stage, we must gradually realize the four modernizations and build a high degree of socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization. To work hard and accomplish these tasks mentioned above is to realize the great ideals of communism. In the "COMMUNIST MANIFESTO" Marx and Engels pointed out: "The Communist Party fights for the most immediate goals and interests of the working class. But at the same time it represents the future of the current movement." This very clearly tells us that at any stage of development of the revolution, Communist Party members must cherish the great goals of communism and use communist ideology as a guide in observing and handling problems and in formulating and implementing the line and general and specific policies, which are not only in keeping with the actual conditions in various historical periods but also closely bound up with the great goals of communism. If we depart from the great goals of communism and from the guidance of communist ideology, we cannot correctly carry out the party's line and general and specific policies in various historical periods. We are also likely to erroneously interpret the party's concrete tasks and most immediate goals in a given historical period as the party's entire tasks and ultimate goals. We may also forget the future of a movement for the sake of its present and sacrifice long-term to immediate interests.

Communist consciousness cannot come about spontaneously. It must be the result of a long period of instillation and hard training and the result of communist ideological and moral education. This is our party's fundamental task in its political and ideological work and also the core of the effort to build a socialist spiritual civilization. We have much work to do to build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization. For example, we must conduct education in the need to love the motherland, love the people, love labor, love science and love socialism and conduct education in social and professional moral principles. We must also make extensive efforts to enlighten people so they can become new types who are developed in an all-round way -- persons who have ideals, a sense of moral values, a cultural background and respect for discipline. All such work must be handled with communist ideology as a guide. No idea can play such a guiding role separated from communist ideology. Bourgeois ideas of one kind or another cannot work. This has been repeatedly proved by history at home and abroad. Can patriotism play such a guiding role? It cannot. Everyone knows that there are patriots in our country who support socialism and also patriots who support the unification of the country. These persons are welcome and we want to unite with them. At present, we must energetically strengthen education on patriotism. But we must understand that proletarian patriotism is a recent important part of communist ideology. Communist ideology at its present stage can embody patriotism, but patriotism cannot embody communism. In today's China, if we communists do not use Marxism or communist ideology to educate the people and guide and exemplify our ideas and actions, we will be deprived of a spiritual pillar and our nation will disintegrate. In this regard, we should remain sober.

The current anticorruption struggle being waged is an important part of the effort to conduct education on communist ideology among the cadres and the masses. A large host of facts that have come to light in this struggle show that the corrosive effect of decadent bourgeois thinking on party members and cadres is quite serious. Within our party there are some people who have been hit by the bourgeois sugar-coated bullets. They have lost their lofty communist ideals and have fallen for the dazzling capitalist civilization. They have given up the fundamental aim of wholeheartedly serving the people and have fallen into the quagmire of bourgeois individualism marked by obsession with profit. They have thrown away Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as a sharp weapon with which to understand and transform the world. They have instead picked up rubbish represented by bourgeois liberalization. If we do not wage a solemn and serious but proper struggle against this phenomenon of decadence in some party members and cadres and instead allow it to grow unchecked, we cannot basically bring about a proper change in our party's style and in social practices, nor can we eliminate the danger of "peaceful evolution." It is in this sense that we say that this struggle between corruptive forces and anticorruption forces and between infiltrative and anti-infiltration forces is a major problem bearing on the decline or prosperity, success or failure of the party and the state. As early as the anti-Japanese war, Comrade Mao Zedong reminded the whole party that when a united proletarian and bourgeois front was established, some party members might be corrupted by the bourgeoisie. Therefore, we must maintain the political ideological and organizational independence of the proletarian political party. Under all circumstances, we must maintain the purity of communism and not lower the standards for Communist Party members. These basic principles put forth by Comrade Mao Zedong still apply today. Under new historical conditions, our party members and cadres must not only firmly and correctly carry out the central authorities' policy of opening the door to the world and enlivening the economy at home but also maintain a high degree of vigilance against the attack of bourgeois sugar-coated bullets, and consciously participate and energetically exercise leadership in the anticorruption struggle. We must use communist ideology and morals to guide and restrain our words and actions; strengthen training in the party spirit; faithfully fulfill our own oath taken when we joined the party; strive to be clearheaded communists; and fight for the communist cause throughout our lives.

Some comrades believe that since the policy we are now following is socialist, conducting education in communist ideology and morals means going beyond the historical period. Such a view is wrong. What we usually mean by communism is not only the communist social system but also the revolutionary movement under the guidance of communist ideology. Such a world communist movement is over 100 years old. Its history in China also spans more than 60 years. At present, what we are engaged in is not a communist movement in the usual sense. It is a communist movement with the socialist system established and the initial stage of communism already started. As early as the democratic revolution, our party preached such communist ideas as wholeheartedly serving the people, utter devotion to others without any thought of self, and so forth and the work attitude of thinking nothing of remuneration. Today, conditions for conducting communist ideological and moral education are more favorable than before. The need is also more urgently felt. Why should we now lack the courage to put forth and to discuss this problem? It should be noted that the matter of strengthening communist ideological and moral education complements and promotes the implementation of the socialist policy. The two can never be in opposition.

Communism is a great enterprise unprecedented in the history of mankind. To realize this great goal of communism also calls for our taking a long and arduous road. Under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and under the great banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, we must firmly and unswervingly strive to realize the historical tasks of the party at its current stage and create conditions for the realization of communism -- undaunted by any difficulty that stands in the way.

XINJIANG CIRCULAR URGES IMPROVING CENSUS WORK

HK090254 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 8 Jul 82

[Text] According to XINJIANG RIBAO, the regional population census office has issued an urgent circular demanding that the region closely monitor the process and quality of the work and seriously do a good job in the census.

The circular said: Since the region's census registration got underway on 1 July, the work has made smooth progress. According to incomplete statistics of the first 5 days, over 1.6 million households comprising over 6.5 million persons registered. This represents more than half the numbers who should register. Checks have shown that in most cases the quality of the work is up to the standard stipulated by the state.

However, varying degrees of problems have also been discovered in some areas and units. For instance, some units do the work in too great a hurry, while some lay too much stress on the accuracy of answers to various census questions and neglect the accuracy of data on numbers of people and households. Some fail to act according to the regulations and follow their own methods, which lead to rather great errors. The above problems must be rapidly solved.

The circular demanded that all parts of the region seriously sum up and check on the state of census registration in the first 5 days and get a thoroughly good grasp of registration and rechecking during the last 5 days of registration, to ensure that the region's third census is completed with high quality.

HK040832 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 4 Jul 82 p 1

[Text] On 1 July, 40 U.S. senators summitted a joint letter to President Reagan, urging him to pospone the execution of the agreement on cooperating with Taiwan to manufacture F-5E warplanes. Foreign correspondents asked Huang Hua, the Chinese foreign minister who is visiting Spain, about this. He answered that U.S. arms sales to Taiwan are an interference in China's internal affairs. It is natural for Beijing to react strongly to interference by Washington.

Last January, the U.S. Government unilaterally announced that it had decided not to sell advanced F-16 and F-5G fighters to Taiwan and that it would replace all Taiwan's old planes with F-5E planes. As usual, Beijing protested against this decision and has never approved or tacitly approved it.

Beijing realizes that Washington will use dual tactics. There are indeed some fools in the United States who stubbornly intend to interfere in China's internal affairs. Therefore, the Chinese Government has made preparations for retrogression of Sino-U.S. relations.

According to the schedule of the pro-Taiwan faction in the United States, the Reagan administration should make a decision in 2 months on continuing to supply Taiwan with F-5E warplanes. However, they worry about the possibility that the Reagan administration will delay making the decision because the new secretary of state, Shultz, has just assumed power, and a transition time is needed.

Taiwan authorities thought that they could make use of the opportunity of the change of secretaries of state to attain their lofty ambition. On the one hand, they are afraid that the U.S. State Department has formulated a plan to stop arms sales. On the other hand, they place hope on the rightists in the United States who will urge Reagan to change his diplomatic direction.

Sun Yun-hsuan, "president of the Executive Yuan" of Taiwan, issued a statement the day before yesterday. He again talked glibly about overthrowing the central government in Beijing. This is completely unrealistic. He simply went back on his speech delivered at the "symposium on the problems of the mainland" held last month. Mass media in Taiwan admitted that Sun Yun-hsuan's speech on peaceful reunification made last month had been given a lot of play on account of "misunderstanding," and that it was necessary to clarify the fact. Taiwan senior officials speak evasively and contradict themselves. This shows that their minds are in a turmoil. The fact that they contradict themselves is determined to a large extent by their calculation of the tendencies of the U.S. Government. The diehards in the United States have encouraged the diehard elements in Taiwan to obstruct the reunification of China.

U.S. GROUPS' 'TWO CHINAS' STAND REBUTTED

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY today carried a commentary refuting a recent joint statement by U.S. conservative organizations preaching their "two Chinas" policy. The commentary, titled "The Wheel of History Must Not Be Turned Back," reads in full:

The representatives of 28 U.S. conservative organizations issued a joint statement on U.S.-China relations and held a press conference at a U.S. Congress hall in Washington on July 8. The joint statement and speeches made by some of the representatives at the press conference openly preached their "two Chinas" policy, voicing opposition to the "renunciation" and "sell-out" of the so-called Republic of China (Taiwan). They asked the U.S. Government to stick to the "Taiwan Relations Act" and to go on selling sophisticated weapons to Taiwan. The statement also launched vicious attacks on the People's Republic of China.

This adverse anti-China current in Washington has surprised nobody. During a recent period, particularly around the resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, a number of ultra-conservatives in the United States went hither and thither in an arrogant manner and took one step after another in a desperate attempt to destroy the foundation of the existing Sino-U.S. relations completely. The antics of these forces ranged from Senator Barry Goldwater's visit to Taiwan to the voiced demand of 41 U.S. senators headed by S.I. Hayakawa that the U.S. Government sell F-5E fighters to Taiwan immediately, from a message to President Ronald Reagan sent by 14 conservative organizations urging him not to abandon his "old friends" to a demand for the resolute implementation of the "Taiwan Relations Act" voiced by some pro-Taiwan elements at meetings with officials of the Reagan administration. Few and limited in influence, these people represent neither the great majority of the American people nor the mainstreams of the Republican and Democratic parties, but they are stirring up trouble with all their might. Their minds crammed with the prejudices of the 1950's, they are devoid of an elementary knowledge about international affairs. Forgetting all about the historical fact that the "Cairo Declaration" signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt stipulates unequivocally that Taiwan and the Penghu Islands should be returned to China, they have gone so far as to declare that the circumstances attending China and its Taiwan Province are just like those attending Korea or Germany. They have clung desperately to their "old friends" in Taiwan to the extent of abandoning their grand old President Roosevelt.

It is easily seen that the long-term and fundamental goal of these conservative diehards is to create "two Chinas" and keep Taiwan under the control and aegis of the United States in a vain attempt to continue the division of China indefinitely. To achieve this goal, they have made no scruples about destroying completely the Sino-American relations fostered through long years of efforts by the people and governments of the two countries. They have totally repudiated the China policy unanimously followed by the four administrations under the Republican or Democratic parties since President Nixon took office and tried their utmost to tear to shreds the "Shanghai Communique" and the joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States, so as to change the Sino-American relationship back to one of hostility as in the 1950's.

Their immediate goal is to spare no efforts to instigate the American Government to continue selling Taiwan arms which, they said, would be "a deterrent to China"; in the meantime, they want to undermine the talks now being held between China and the United States on the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. In a word, they seem to be unhappy with anything less than ending the Sino-American relations, whose development has become a thorn in their side.

However, their viewpoints not only run counter to the fundamental interests of the American people, but also are harmful to the interests of peace and security in the world, the United States included. For all the uproar and clamors they have made to demonstrate their existence, they find few supporters among the American public. Any one who treasures the Sino-American relations should be on guard and not be trapped by the disturbance.

Following the collapse of a dynasty, there were always a number of survivors, old and young, of the bygone dynasty who dreamt of a comeback. Douglas MacArthur's idea of an "unsinkable aircraft-carrier" and the Dulles doctrine of nonrecognition of China have long been repudiated by history, but a number of people in the United States are still haunted by this idea and doctrine and are bent on trying to reverse the wheel of history. What they are dreaming of is the overlordship which the United States enjoyed in China more than 30 years ago when it provided Chiang Kai-shek with money and arms to fight a civil war. However, such fond dreams have long been dashed to pieces by the Chinese people. The People's Republic of China has stood like a giant in the east for 33 years. It is simply preposterous that these Americans refuse to open their eyes to the reality of the world and still cherish the fond dream of carving up China. We advise these old-liners to take a dose of sobriety to sober up and return to the reality.

U.S. ACCUSED OF INTERFERENCE IN PRC AFFAIRS

["Commentary: Ill Wind of Diehards in United States" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, July 9 (XINHUA) -- A number of diehards in the United States have recently fanned up an ill wind of persisting in interference in the internal affairs of China.

They openly asked the U.S. Government to adhere to the stance of "two Chinas" and feverishly incited the continued supply of weapons to Taiwan to oppose the sole legitimate government of the People's Republic of China which has long been recognized by the U.S. Government. They made reports, wrote articles and letters, and interviewed reporters, giving people the impression that they would not stop until the Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations were broken off.

A number of representatives from U.S. conservative organizations yesterday held a press conference at a hall of the U.S. Congress, which is rare in U.S. history. A joint statement read out at the press conference openly called China's Taiwan Province "The Republic of China" and requested the U.S. Government not to "pay any attention to Peking's one China policy." It voiced opposition to "Red China" and support for "free China." It opposed the Shanghai Communique and any change by the U.S. Government of its policy of long-term supply of weapons to Taiwan. An end to the arms sales to Taiwan would mean desertion of "old friends" and sell-out of Taiwan, it stated.

The press conference was sponsored by Gary Jarmin, national director of the American Council for a Free Asia, with over a dozen of representatives from other conservative organizations standing at the back row. They seemed to be trying to build up a certain momentum. On July 2, 14 organizations, which are actually made up by the same persons, sent a letter to President Ronald Reagan, asking him "not to abandon the Republic of China." Still earlier, Republican Senator Barry Morris Goldwater went to Taiwan last June to promote goodwill with what he called "the Republic of China". When he was back from Taiwan, he went on a canvassing tour to persuade the government to continue to sell arms to Taiwan. He insisted that the amount could only increase and not decrease.

However, these conservative organizations and their representatives are small in number and their supporters are not many. On the other hand, a great number of people in the United States despise them. Only a small number of people attended the press conference. There was nothing new in their assertions, which were full of confusions and in violation of the norms of international relations and none of which held water.

When this correspondent asked the chairman of the press conference if he knew that all countries including four U.S. administrations recognize there is only one China, namely, the People's Republic of China, and Taiwan is part of China, the gentleman expressed his consent. Then, this correspondent asked him if the United States is interfering in China's internal affairs by continuing to sell arms to Taiwan. He replied that could not be counted as interference because Beijing does not "exercise sovereignty" over Taiwan. The obstinate division of China's integral state sovereignty into Beijing's sovereignty and Taiwan's sovereignty is in essence a reproduction of "two Chinas". His reply was a self-contradictory quibble. With no justifications to support their argument, these diehards resorted to that "Taiwan Relations Act" which is in violation of the principles concerning the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations. It seems as if U.S. laws have force all over the world. In their eyes, there is no sovereignty of other countries but only U.S. hegemonism.

Retired Admiral Mark Hill was frank to say that the United States must possess bases abroad so as to "control sea routes." Without certain military bases in Southeast Asia, he said, the United States would not have held out in the Vietnam war. "The same thing would be true with Taiwan in a similar situation," he added. So, the real objective of these people is to control and occupy Taiwan and continue to make it an unsinkable aircraft carrier.

It is by no means accidental that this adverse current against China appeared at the time when the U.S. and Chinese Governments are negotiating the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, an issue which means an interference in the internal affairs of China by the United States. First, these conservative organizations have been nursing a grievance against the developing Sino-American relations. They attempt to exploit the opportunity when top officials of the U.S. State Department are changing hands to advocate their anti-China doctrine, so as to worsen the Sino-American relations.

Second, they want to take advantage of the mid-term congressional elections in autumn to openly exert pressure on President Reagan. They threatened that if President Reagan makes a decision which does not conform with their requests, they will bring into a split the "conservative coalition" formed in the last general elections to help Reagan win the election.

Third, they declared that they do not care [about] the downgrading of the bilateral relations, claiming that a break in the Sino-American relations will benefit the United States. They even said that if the relations did deteriorate because of the U.S. stubborness on the arms sales to Taiwan, "we see no harm in this outcome." On the contrary, it will "help to restore a more realistic and balanced China policy," they added.

It seems that they have seized on the change and raised a hubbub to exert pressure on the government in a bid to shatter the on-going negotiations on the arms sales issue between Beijing and Washington, thus bringing U.S.-China ties into retrogression.

In a joint communique, the representatives of these conservative organizations said haughtily that they would never accept the policy of "abandoning Taiwan." If someone would think that their attitude can be "mollified," he is "living in fantasyland." In fact, it is these ultra-rightists cherishing the memory of their "gunboat" policy, who are actually living in fantasyland. They can never represent the majority of the American people. But their dangerous proposal may possibly do great harm to the American people. This is a point worthy of people's vigilance.

U.S. AMITY GROUP OPPOSES ARMS SALES TO TAIWAN

[Text] Washington, July 9 (XINHUA) -- The Midwest region of the U.S.-China People's Friendship Association (USCPFA) has called on the U.S. Government "to reaffirm its commitment to the advancement of U.S.-China relations" based on the principles laid down in the Shanghai Communique and the joint communique on the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations.

At the Midwest regional conference of the USCPFA held in Detroit, Michigan, on June 6, a resolution on U.S.-China relations was adopted, which stresses that "the only way for Sino-American relations to advance and not retrogress is by the cessation of U.S. arms sales to China's province of Taiwan." "We also recognize that the reunification of China is an internal affair of the Chinese nation," it adds.

The resolution pledges "to work towards presenting to the American people a clear understanding of the issues involved in the continued developments of U.S.-China relations."

HEILONGJIANG RIBAO VIEWS HAIG'S RESIGNATION

[Text] On the afternoon of 25 June, in the press room of the White House, U.S. President Reagan kept a straight face and announced in a TV speech consisting of merely 200 words: Haig has resigned as the secretary of state and the post will be taken over by George Shultz, a former treasury secretary of the Nixon administration.

People might feel puzzled and ask: Why did this favorite housekeeper of the White House suddenly resign?

In less than 2 hours after Reagan announced that he had accepted this unexpected resignation, Haig met the press in the assembly hall of the State Department. He read a letter allegedly presented to the President at a certain hour of the same day. In this letter, Haig explained the reasons for his resignation: In these few months, he had clearly seen that foreign policy jointly formulated by Reagan and himself was deviating from its original orientation. Therefore, he could not but resign.

The dispute between Haig and the White House was longstanding. According to initial analyses made by foreign news agencies on Haig's resignation, Haig and White House staff members and other members of the Reagan administration repeatedly plotted against each other and this led to Haig's resignation. He frequently quarreled with Defense Secretary Weinberger, particularly on the present problems of the Middle East. Very often Weinberger adopted an uncompromising stand toward Israel. However, Haig maintained that Israel was a "strategic asset" and that it should not be excessively criticized. Haig also held that the United States should build closer relations with Europe and that Reagan's recent decision to place an embargo on U.S. facilities for building a natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Western Europe would sabotage U.S.-West European relations. Reagan made the above-quoted decision when Haig was not in Washington. William Clarke, a close friend of Weinberger and Reagan and national security advisor, supported Reagan in making such a decision.

During the early period after Haig took office in the Reagan administration, his work style of seeking the limelight was conspicuous. This frequently offended White House staff members. At the time when Haig was concentrating his efforts on coping with guerrillas in El Salvador, other White House staff members hoped that the focus of public attention would be concentrated on economic problems.

Reagan was shot on 30 March last year. Not long after that, Haig delivered an emotionally stirring TV speech in the White House press release room. He said in a quivering voice: "I am now in charge in the White House...." He was severely criticized because of this.

On 2 April of this year, the Malvinas Islands crisis occurred and Haig carried out his shuttle diplomacy between London and Buenos Aires without any success. He made cynical remarks in his office that he had become an "agent" in an administration led by a President without any diplomatic experience. In addition, he liked to be in the limelight everywhere, used strange wording and pursued a work style characterized by exaggeration. All this quickly turned him into a controversial figure.

In a word, Haig's resignation was a result of the internal bickering and rivalries of the Reagan ruling clique.

OW110922 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1315 GMT 9 Jul 82

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jul (XINHUA) -- Report from Washington: The U.S. Retailers and Importers Textile Consultative Committee at a meeting in Washington in late June criticized the U.S. Government's violation of the U.S.-China textile agreement and demanded that the U.S. Government lift the restriction on imports of Chinese textiles.

It is reported that the U.S. Government recently decided to impose import quotas on women's sportswear, men's, women's and children's garments, various kinds of long and short pants and other cotton textile products made in China.

(Peter Handel), chairman of the textile and garment branch of the U.S. Exporters and Importers Association, in a letter to the U.S. Government last month pointed out that, as stipulated by the U.S.-China textile agreement, only when the market is or may be undermined will extra quotas be imposed. However, the U.S. Government has imposed restrictions on Chinese textiles without the needed material proof showing whether the domestic market may be hurt. This is intended as a "strategic show of force" before negotiating with China on the extension of the U.S.-China textile agreement.

In his speech, He Zhangming said that the conclusion of the Sino-Korean treaty "has further consolidated the great friendship cultivated in blood by the Chinese and Korean people during their common revolutionary struggle in the past. The fraternal militant alliance between China and Korea is not only a guarantee for the security of our two countries but also plays a positive role in safeguarding peace in Asia and the rest of the world."

Ho Tam said that in the past 21 years since the conclusion of the treaty "the Korean and Chinese people have strengthened their traditional friendship and unity and increased their ties of cooperation and mutual assistance in various fields. This has helped promote revolution and construction in both countries."

He said that in the present situation, "deeper militant friendship and closer unity between the parties, governments and people of the two countries constitutes an important guarantee against the danger of war and for the defence of peace and security in Asia."

SPOKESMAN CONDEMNS SRV PARTIAL WITHDRAWAL 'TRICK'

OW091358 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 9 Jul 82

[Text] A spokesman of the Information Department of our Ministry of Foreign Affairs today issued a statement on the Vietnamese authorities' so-called pledge to withdraw part of their troops from Kampucha. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1525 GMT on 9 July carries a report on this statement which adds the following sentence: "He pointed out that the announcement made by the Vietnamese authorities on 'partial withdrawal of their troops' is a trick played by them to deceive people."]

The statement points out: The Vietnamese authorities asserted on 7 July that they would conditionally withdraw part of their troops from Kampuchea. This is obviously a trick played by them to deceive people at a time when the Kampuchean people have united to make new progress in their struggle against Vietnam. In so doing, the Vietnamese authorities are attempting to avoid implementing the relevant UN resolutions, to continue their forcible occupation of Kampuchea, to control Indochina and to later expand into Southeast Asia. The Vietnamese authorities have wantonly attacked China and Thailand and have put forward various unreasonable demands. All this is nothing but an attempt to cook up a pretext for pursuing their regional hegemonism. If the Vietnamese authorities really have the sincerity to solve the Kampuchea issue, then they should immediately and unconditionally withdraw all their aggressor troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the relevant UN resolutions.

RENMIN RIBAO ON VIETNAMESE 'PARTIAL WITHDRAWAL'

[Commentator's article: "'Partial Withdrawal' Is a Fraud"]

[Text] The so-called "foreign ministers conference" of Vietnam, Laos, and the Phnom Penh puppets, a meeting directed by the Vietnamese authorities, announced its conclusion on 7 July. The meeting's communique declared that, beginning this month, the Vietnamese authorities would withdraw "part" of their aggressor troops from Kampuchea. This is a bait proferred by the Vietnamese authorities in order to accomplish the "reconciliation and peaceful coexistence with ASEAN" and "restoration of peace in Southeast Asia" that they have recently been clamoring about.

As everyone knows, there is nothing at all new about the Vietnamese authorities' so-called "partial withdrawal." Back in September 1980, at the 35th UN General Assembly, the Vietnamese authorities stated that they were "prepared to withdraw part of their forces from Kampuchea." However, this trick, which was an attempt to overturn the UN General Assembly resolution calling for troop withdrawals, was immediately seen through by the international community. Now the Vietnamese authorities have come up with a new "partial withdrawal" decision just when the Vietnamese aggressor troops' dry-season offensive in Kampuchea has encountered total defeat and the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea have signed a declaration on setting up a joint government; moreover, they have tried to use the term "beginning this month" in order to lure ASEAN into giving up its support for the democratic forces in Kampuchea and instead hold a "dialogue" with Vietnam to discuss a so-called "peaceful solution" of the Kampuchea issue. It is plain to everyone that this is a conspiracy of the Vietnamese authorities to attempt in vain to get out of their predicament at a time when the situation is getting worse and worse for them.

The Vietnamese authorities think that so long as they announce a "partial troop withdrawal" beginning this month, the ASEAN countries will be overjoyed and vie with each other to shake hands and hail them. In this way, Vietnam could be perfectly justified in permanently stationing troops in Kampuchea, the UN General Assembly resolution calling for troop withdrawal would turn into a scrap of paper, the Phnom Penh puppets could pass through the hall into the inner chamber and be recognized by the ASEAN countries, while the patriotic forces in Kampuchea would collapse of their own accord and disappear from the scene, and the Vietnamese authorities' hegemonistic rule in Indochina would be firmly consolidated. However, the ASEAN countries and the peoples of Southeast Asia are not as simple as Vietnam imagines.

It is plain to everyone that the so-called "partial troop withdrawal" beginning this month has no practical significance whatsoever. In fact, the Vietnamese aggressor army has suffered heavy casualties due to the continuous attacks by the patriotic army and people in Kampuchea, and there are also difficulties in logistics supplies, and epidemics and so on, and so portions of its forces are constantly coming into or leaving Kampuchea. Even if a part of the aggressor army is withdrawn, this would have no effect on Hanoi's control of the Phnom Penh puppets, and still less does it change the basic fact of Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea. The Vietnamese authorities' current loud clamors about withdrawing a "part" of their aggressor army from Kampuchea in order to boast of their "sincerety" in seeking a peaceful solution of the Kampuchea problem only proves that they obstinately reject the UN General Assembly resolutions, refuse to unconditionally withdraw all their aggressors troops from Kampuchea, and persist in their policy of aggression and expansion, and that their so-called wish for reconciliation and peaceful coexistence with the ASEAN states and restoration of peace and stability in Southeast Asia is a sheer lie. The Vietnamese authorities' utterances about a "partial withdrawal" had only just come out when they were exposed and denounced by the countries and peoples of Southeast Asia. This shows that the peoples can see through their tricks.

Of course, there is nothing accidental in the move of the Vietnamese authorities to produce afresh, with a little embellishment, their rotten junk of "partial troop withdrawal." At present there is indeed an international trend to attempt to appease the aggressors and seek a compromise with the Vietnamese authorities over the Kampuchea issue. Some people hold that Vietnam's appetite is not very big, and so long as Laos and Kampuchea are given to Vietnam, it will be satisfied and proceed to live in peace. There are also people who hold that Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea was carried out for reasons of its own "security," and proceed to publicly propose "giving Vietnam security guarantees." Some people hold that an Indochina under Vietnamese control could become a protective screen for Southeast Asia to guard that region from Chinese "aggression." All these are dangerous notions that can be used by the Vietnamese authorities.

The essence of the Kampuchean problem is that the Vietnamese authorities are trying to establish an Indochina federation bossed by themselves and to use this as a base for aggression and expansion and pursuit of regional hegemonism in Southeast Asia in service to the Soviet southward drive in global hegemonism. Hence, the Vietnamese authorities will certainly not stop at invading and occupying Kampuchea; instead, their desires will become insatiable and their appetite ever greater. At present there is no threat whatsoever to Vietnam's security. On the contrary, it is Vietnam that has committed aggression against its neighbors and threatened their security. The threat from China that the Vietnamese authorities have fabricated is sheer fantasy. China is a socialist country that pursues an independent foreign policy of peace. It has no ambitions whatsoever regarding Vietnam and Southeast Asia, and poses no threat to them at all. The Vietnamese authorities' fabrications are aimed at creating a pretext for their invasion of Kampuchea and also at sabotaging, for their own benefit, the friendly ties between China and the countries of Southeast Asia. Experience tells us that we must resolutely struggle against aggressors whose greed is insatiable; they regard any compromise or concession as weakness. The only way to settle the Kampuchean problem is to strictly implement the relevant UN resolutions and force the Vietnamese authorities to immediately and unconditionally withdraw their occupation troops from Kampuchea. No matter what the pretext, to sacrifice the interests of the Kampuchean people and weaken the morale and combat strength of the Kampuchean people in their present fight against the Vietnamese aggressors is to support Vietnamese aggression and Soviet expansionist strategy, and this would not only be of no assistance in rationally solving the Kampuchean problem but would also cause grave consequences for peace and stability in Southeast Asia and the Asian-Pacific region. Every clear-headed person can understand this.

China has consistently supported the just struggle of the Vietnamese people to preserve their national sovereignty and territorial integrity, and sincerely hopes that the Kampuchea of the future will be an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned state. Proceeding from the overall situation in opposing hegemonism and preserving peace in Asia and the world, China is willing to work together with all peace-loving countries that uphold justice to pursue a fair and rational solution to the Kampuchean problem.

QUARTERLY JOURNAL ON SOLUTION OF KAMPUCHEA ISSUE

[Text] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- The recently published issue No 3 of the quarterly GUOJI WENTI YANJIU [INTERNATIONAL STUDIES] carries a contributing commentator's article entitled "The Kampuchea Issue Must Be Correctly Solved," excerpts of which follow:

While forcibly occupying Kampuchean territory and slaughtering the patriotic Kampuchean people, Vietnam has redoubled its efforts in resorting to political and propaganda tactics to stir up a trend of appeasement in order to extricate itself from its predicament and finally achieve its purpose of conquering Kampuchea. Meanwhile, the views and actions of some countries and people on the Kampuchea issue have for some time given Vietnam an opportunity that can be exploited to its advantage.

The Vietnamese armed aggression against Kampuchea constitutes a grave act in violation of international law. An illegal act cannot produce any legal results -- this is a basic principle of international law as well as all other laws. Negation of this principle is a negation of law itself. If this principle were allowed to be willfully violated, there would be no justice or order to speak of in the international community.

To force the Vietnamese aggressors to withdraw from the Kampuchean territory it has forcibly occupied and to overthrow the Kampuchean puppet regime propped up by them depends mainly on the victorious development of the armed struggle against Vietnam in Kampuchea. In this situation, all countries that stand against aggression are obliged to render powerful assistance to the Kampuchean patriotic forces, or at least should not do anything to weaken these forces.

Although the Democratic Kampuchean Government has in the past made some errors in domestic policy, it has adopted measures to correct them. For the past 3 years or more, it has persisted in its struggle under extremely difficult conditions and has achieved many combat successes. This shows that the Democratic Kampuchean Government is gaining growing support from the Kampuchean people. The reason why other countries are giving assistance to Democratic Kampuchea is that without such a force fighting against the outside aggressors, Vietnam might well have annexed Kampuchea by now. Obviously, as long as one proceeds from the overall situation of the struggle against aggression, it will be easy to understand the importance and necessity of giving assistance to the various groups of Kampuchean patriotic forces, including Democratic Kampuchea.

Internationally, some people consider it feasible to take a "flexible" attitude toward Vietnam and give it some assistance to enable it to "have another choice than to depend on the Soviet Union," thus "luring Vietnam into freeing itself from Soviet influence" and "not driving Vietnam to the wall and to complete dependence on the Soviet Union."

If the Vietnamese authorities should, as certain persons have hoped, gradually dissociate themselves from their dependence on the Soviet Union, that would certainly be a good thing. But how can this be achieved? It can be done only by exerting further pressures on Vietnam, by adding more difficulties to it from all sides so that it will ultimately find profitless its pursuit of regional hegemonism by relying on the Soviet Union and only find itself involved in worsened internal crises and subjected to increased Soviet control. Only then will Vietnam begin to consider whether or not it should change its course.

On the contrary, if Vietnam is treated "more moderately," and if pressures on it are relieved and its difficulties are lessened, it would feel it can carry on as usual and gain advantages from both sides, and therefore never change its course. It also should be pointed out that to compromise with the Vietnamese aggressors would mean helping them to maintain at least part of the "fruits" of aggression, that is, to allow the aggressors to benefit from their pursuit of regional hegemonism with Soviet backing. This would throw Vietnam further into the lap of the Soviet Union.

The situation of the anti-aggression struggle on the Kampuchean battlefield is now good. As long as all groups of the Kampuchean patriotic forces strengthen their unity and persist in their struggle, as long as the international community continues to uphold the norms of international relations and exert greater pressure on the aggressor to increase his difficulties, then it will be eventually possible to force Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and to correctly solve the Kampuchea issue.

SIHANOUK INSPECTS DK'S PHNUM MALAI AREA

[Excerpt] Phnum Malai, Democratic Kampuchea, July 9 (XINHUA correspondent Yang Mu) -- At noontime of July 8, just after a shower was over, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, appeared at the bridge leading into Phum Thmei village in the Phnum Malai liberated area.

At this moment, Khieu Samphan, vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea, who had been awaiting his arrival, trotted forward and greeted him with an embrace in the middle of the bridge. Then Sihanouk hugged Ieng Sary, Son Sen and others.

"We haven't seen each other since 1979. More than three years have passed; what a tremendous change!" said Sihanouk to Son Sen. With these words, the quiet place buried deep in forests and mountains became suddenly enlivened.

President Sihanouk reviewed a guard of honor of the Democratic Kampuchean National Army in the accompaniment of Khieu Samphan and to the strains of a drum band.

With open arms he smiled all the way at the welcoming crowd who flanked the trail in their holiday best. At one point or another, he shook hands with and embraced an old acquaintance whom he picked out among the welcomers. Madame Sihanouk, Monique, lifted a little child into her arms and kissed him.

There were some 2,000 people lining the trail leading to the thatched bamboo guest house breezy with banana fragrance from nearby wet groves. Pointing to the scene, Vice-President Khieu Samphan told this correspondent: "Samdech Sihanouk is back in his capacity as the newly elected president of the state of Democratic Kampuchea. This is the symbol of the great unity of the Kampuchean nation in their resistance war against Vietnam."

Inside the guest house, President Sihanouk told reporters: "I am back on the soil of my motherland again to join my compatriots. I'm deeply impressed by their stable life here and their spiritedness, and I am moved by the big welcome they gave me today. I'm glad to see that there are many children in the villages. This indicates that the future of our country is promising and the Kampuchean nation can never be eliminated." Hearing this remark, the room was ringing with approving laughs and applause.

Sihanouk went on to say that the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea is a disciplined force which is in a good position to combat. They are fighting "in a spirit of bravery which defies sacrifices." He added: "I am convinced that we are able to eliminate colonialism in Kampuchea and rebuild our country into a neutral, peace-loving and independent one."

Then followed two hours of political talks. When the meeting was over, the restful atmosphere became animated again. The "anti-Vietnam art troupe" played music for the ensuing banquet given by Khieu Samphan in honor of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and his party. And this was followed by national dances "staged" on the yard before the dining shack. In one of the items, the dancers formed a design resembling the Angkor Wat, apparently to the delight of Sihanouk. He exclaimed in joy, "this is our Angkor Wat. This is real national dance."

At the end of the performance, Sihanouk had this to say: "Our country will have a bright future if it has a strong and powerful army, carries out the economic work well, and develops a national culture."

Hern, a 24-year-old soldier, said: "The visit by Samdech Sihanouk implies that we have now a national organization for joint fighting against Vietnam. I am sure we will be in a much better position to defeat Vietnam, as long as all of us persevere in the anti-Vietnamese struggle."

ZHAO ZIYANG SENDS REPLY LETTER TO PLO'S 'ARAFAT

[Text] Beijing, July 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang reiterated yesterday in a reply letter to Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization Yasir 'Arafat: "The Chinese Government and people will, as always, support the just struggle waged by the Palestinian and other Arab people against Israeli expansionism."

Zhao Ziyang pointed out that with the connivance and blessing of the United States, the Begin authorities of Israel did not hesitate to use Israeli youth as cannon fodder to launch an inhuman aggressive war in disregard of the principles of international law. The Chinese Government and people are greatly incensed at and strongly condemn Israel's savage aggression and express deep admiration for the bravery shown by the Palestinian guerrillas and people in their resistance against aggressors under the leadership of the PLO.

Zhao Ziyang said in the letter: "You are not isolated in the struggle and the cause you are fighting for is just. You have made tremendous sacrifice. However, we are fully confident that so long as you uphold principles, persist in the struggle, strengthen unity, pursue correct military and political policies and tactics and win the sympathy and support of the people all over the world, you will surely overcome difficulties, defeat the ferocious enemy and finally obtain the holy rights of the Palestinian people."

Premier Zhao said: "The Chinese Government has always held that an all-round and just solution to the Middle East issue can be achieved only on the basis of restoring the Palestinian national rights and respecting the state sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Arab countries. It will make unremitting efforts in accordance with its consistent principled stand and, together with governments upholding justice and cherishing peace, to check the Israeli aggression and support the Palestinian and other Arab people in their just struggle."

In a letter to the Chinese premier, 'Arafat gave an account of the grave situation arising from the Israeli invasion and the besieging of Beirut and thanked the Chinese Communist Party, government and people for their vigorous support for the resistance to the Israeli aggression put up by the Palestinian army and people.

In the past month, he pointed out, Israel has used the most sophisticated destructive weapons of the ground, naval and air forces supplied by U.S. imperialism to launch a despicable aggression against Lebanon and declared that it would destroy the Palestine Liberation Organization. The Israeli aggressors have inflicted heavy losses upon the life and property of the Lebanese and the Palestinian people, he added.

'Arafat said in face of Israel's superiority in troops and new types of weapons and equipment, the Palestinian fighters have fought bravely, mauling enemy troops heavily. They have enabled the whole world to see that the Palestinian cause is just, the fighters are brave and the people of Lebanon and Palestine are persisting in their struggle in defence of freedom and independence.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SUPERPOWERS' RIVALRY IN MIDEAST

[Text] Under the wanton and indiscriminate bombardment by the Israeli invading troops, Lebanon has become the testing ground for the two superpowers' new-model weapons.

In the sky, the American-made F-16 and F-15 fighter-bombers have already had several skirmishes with the Soviet-made MIG-23 jet fighters. On the ground, the American-made M-60 tanks have repeatedly engaged in fighting against the Soviet-made T-72 tanks. As reported, Moscow has so far appeared to be inferior to its rival in this "dual meet" between the American and the Soviet new-model weapons. Washington just felt so complacent that it even "highly appreciated" Lebanon's being "the test ground for American weapons." As Moscow did not want to be outdone, it immediately sent a large and comprehensive military delegation, consisting of various types of military specialists and headed by the deputy commander of the air defense forces, to the spot to carry out inspection and investigation, so as to determine countermeasures to deal with the American-made new-model weapons. Therefore, the meaning of this performance competition of new-model weapons between the United States and the Soviet Union to the peace of the Middle East and even the whole world seems self-evident.

The grassland always suffers disaster when the elephants fight against each other. Similarly, the Third World countries always suffer first when the two superpowers combat for hegemony. Kampuchea and Afghanistan are good illustrations, and now Lebanon is another. All the Third World countries must unite to stop the superpowers from making them testing grounds for new-model weapons.

U.S. OFFICIAL LEAVES SYRIA AFTER TALKS ON PLO

According to informed sources here, Khaddam told Draper that the main issue in Lebanon was not the evacuation of Palestinian fighters but the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Syria refused to take in the PLO fighters who will withdraw from besieged west Beirut. An official spokesman said yesterday: "Under the present circumstance, there is no place in Syria for the Palestinian fighters who intend to withdraw from Beirut."

AGREEMENT ON PLO WITHDRAWAL 'TO BE FINALIZED'

["Agreement on PLO Withdrawal From Beirut To Be Finalized" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] London, July 9 (XINHUA) -- An agreement on the withdrawal of the Palestinian Armed Forces from Beirut could be finalized within 24 hours, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO) Political Department Faruq Qaddumi told newsmen here today.

Qaddumi said that the PLO had decided to withdraw from Beirut in order to avoid destruction of the Lebanese capital and an expected massacre of civilians by the invading Israeli forces. Meanwhile, he stressed that the Palestinian Armed Forces now stationed in west Beirut should be allowed to leave by road to Syria with all their weapons. A United Nations force should be deployed in Beirut to cover the Palestinian withdrawal, he added.

Qaddumi is visiting London as a member of the Arab League delegation. In his talks with British Foreign Minister of state Doublas Hurd yesterday, Qaddumi said that the PLO had envisaged a five-stage withdrawal process: the maintenance of a ceasefire, disengagement of forces, deployment of an international peace-keeping force, an Israeli withdrawal to between five and seven kilometers (three to four miles) outside Beirut, and withdrawal of Palestinian forces from Beirut. He said that 70 percent of a package agreement was completed. The unresolved problems were: whether or not the Palestinian forces are allowed to bring with them heavy weapons when they withdraw, the composition of the international peace-keeping force and the establishment of the PLO political and information institutes in Lebanon. The PLO would like to see that some non-aligned, European, Arab and Islamic countries take part in the proposed international peace-keeping force. He pointed out that an agreement on PLO withdrawal could be applied only to the Beirut area rather than other areas in Lebanon.

EGYPT REAFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR PALESTINIAN CAUSE

[Text] Nairobi, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali has reaffirmed his country's support for the Palestinian cause and Arab solidarity. In an interview with the SUNDAY NATION of Kenya published today, Ghali said: "The relation between Egypt and Palestinians has always been significant and during the last five years there has been a bureau of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Cairo. We have in Cairo 17,000 Palestinian students and many Palestinians living in Egypt."

"Maybe we have disagreed with certain Arab 'rejectionist' countries about the methodology we have adopted to obtain the realization of legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, but we have the same aim to help the Palestinian people exercise their rights to self-determination," he said. Referring to Egypt's draft resolution to the U.N. Security Council, he said: "Our resolution is wide-based and includes the recognition of the right to self-determination by the Palestinian people."

He stated that Egypt will not attend the forthcoming O.A.U. ministerial council meeting and the 19th O.A.U. summit in Tripoli, in view of the bilateral relations between Egypt and Libya. He said that a compromise should be found on the issue of Western Sahara. "We believe that Africa must be united and speak with one voice," he said. "Intra-African divisions and disputes must be solved inside an African framework and avoid foreign intervention," he stressed.

"We have three million Egyptian experts working in the Arab world" and "we believe that sooner or later Arab solidarity will prevail," he added.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ISRAELI-SOUTH AFRICAN TIES

[Article by Le Shan [2867 1472]: "Israel Is Stepping Up Its Military Collaboration With South Africa"]

[Text] Two years ago a pro-Israeli lobby group in the South African Parliament declared that frequent contacts between South Africa and Israel were aimed at strengthening the "strategic unity" between them.

People have noted that recently the "strategic" collaboration between Israel and South Africa has been markedly intensified.

According to JEUNE AFRIQUE published in Paris, in the four black puppet states (Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei) created by South Africa, there have recently appeared a number of overweening and arrogant Israelis. They are nominally "technical personnel" engaged by the South African Government, but they are in fact South African military advisers sent there to take charge of organizing the security work for the "heads of state" of the four puppet states. This is just an episode in the military collaboration between the Israeli and South African authorities.

The Lebanese AL-HAWADITH reported some time ago that a few Israeli writers close to the government and the army said in a book entitled "Two Minutes Over the Sky of Baghdad" that Israel, South Africa and others had set up a combined enterprise for the production of neutron bombs, tactical atomic bombs and a kind of ground-to-ground missile. These ground-to-ground missiles are capable of hitting any target in the Arab world if they are fired from Israeli territory. At the same time, Israel and South Africa recently have also strengthened their "cooperation" in the field of conventional weapons. According to informed British sources, the Israeli military industry is undertaking the transhipment of propellants for the conventional, long-range and heavy-caliber guns produced by South Africa while the latter holds the license for manufacturing artillery shells for the Israeli Armed Forces.

It should be pointed out that the strategic collaboration between Israel and South Africa is long-standing. As far back as 1948, in the early days after the founding of Israel, South Africa dispatched to Israel a number of officers, army doctors and military experts. When Israel launched the third Middle East war in 1967 and during the fourth Middle East war in 1973, South Africa provided Israel with large amounts of military and economic aid. After this, Israeli aid to South Africa also markedly increased. The plan for intrusion into southern Angola by South African Armed Forces in 1975 was drawn up by 20 Israeli staff officers and experts. In 1976, the ringleader of the South African apartheid regime, B.J. Voster, paid a visit to Israel. Both parties signed cooperation agreements on military affairs, economy and science and technology. In 1977, in total disregard of the UN embargo placed on South Africa, Israel supplied South Africa with weapons and military technology on a large scale. Israel also dispatched a large number of military advisers and armed personnel to South Africa. At the same time, leading Israeli high-ranking military officers visited the South African capital, Pretoria, in succession.

It is common knowledge that South Africa is Israel's biggest arms customer. Israel has built 6 missile-carrying warships for South Africa and has supplied 20 Lion Cub fighter bombers. The (Ta-di-lan) [1044 6611 5696] Electronics Industry, Inc of Israel also set up a military equipment factory in South Africa. On the night of 22 September 1979 the U.S. satellite "Vela," used for detecting nuclear detonation in the atmosphere, recorded two flashes of light. ARTICLE DESCRIBES POLITICAL, ECONOMIC REFORM

[Article by Yan Jiaqi [0917 1367 0366]: "On Reform"]

[Text] During the more than 30 years since the founding of the PRC, under the leadership of the CCP we have established the socialist public ownership of the means of production, eliminated the system of exploitation, carried out socialist construction in a planned manner and achieved unprecedentedly great development in our economic and cultural cause. However, our country's socialist political and economic systems are not perfect enough and we have undergone many setbacks in the course of the modernization of our country. The Chinese people deeply realize that in order to build up their country into a powerful, modern, highly democratic and highly civilized socialist one, they must carry out deep and persistent reforms in all the structures ranging from government structure to enterprise structure, and in all the systems ranging from economic system to political system, under the leadership of the CCP.

The General Law of the Reforms

The occurrence of a reform is never the outcome of the personal will of a few outstanding people. The basic premise for the success of any reform is the urgent demand for the reform in society. This is the objective condition for the success of a reform. However, history has proved that the success of a reform depends not only on objective conditions, but also on whether the leadership of the reform is strong enough and whether the policies, plans, measures and methods of the reform are suited to the objective reality. Therefore, in order for a reform to succeed, there must also be various subjective conditions.

First, in order to carry out a reform, one must rely on the strength of the state power and the reform must be carried out under strong leadership. A reform differs from all the spontaneous political movements in that it is an action initiated by the class, political party or people in power from a higher level to a lower level to change the system or tradition by the strength of the state power.

Second, a reform must proceed from reality, and, in order to carry out feasible goals, programs or schemes should be formulated. Any reform is to be carried out under its specific historical and practical conditions; even though the goal of the reform does not run counter to the trend of history, a reform may still fail if the plan of the reform itself is divorced from reality or the national conditions of the country and is the mechanical copy of a successful foreign reform. Moreover, a measure that was effective during a certain period may be completely infeasible in another period. That is why all reforms must proceed from the actual conditions. In the course of an actual reform, especially a reform that has wide involvement, the reform of a certain aspect inevitably has repercussions on other aspects of social, political and economic life. Therefore, we must make a deep study of the sources that have given rise to the malpractices in social, political and economic life and sum up historical experiences and lessons. On the basis of this study and these historical experiences and lessons and according to the goal of the reform, we will formulate the general tentative plan and the general scheme of the reform. Otherwise, the success of the reform in the specific situation will often be offset by difficulties and setbacks that could arise in other situations.

Third, in order to ensure the implementation of the program and scheme of the reform, we should carry out a series of concrete reform measures step by step in a planned manner. When we begin to carry out a reform, we should conscientiously analyze the conditions for the reform, make clear the reform measures, adopt a series of concrete measures and vigorously and soundly make efforts to successfully carry out the reform.

Fourth, we should promptly solve the problems that crop up during the reform. The reform of human society differs from experiments in natural sciences. No matter how well-conceived and perfect the scheme of reform is intended to be, many unforeseen new problems and new contradictions may crop up in the course of the reform. If we do not solve these new problems and contradictions in a timely manner, the reform will end in failure. There have been many such lessons in history.

Viewed in a historical materialist viewpoint, the success of a reform after all lies in whether it conforms to the orientation of the development of the society and whether it can promote the development of the productive force. That is why only those reforms that can finally promote the development of social productive force and economic development will succeed. However, if there is no strong leadership, feasible goal or scientific plan, measures and methods, or, if the problems that crop up during a reform cannot be promptly solved, a reform will not automatically succeed even if it conforms to the trend of history.

Reform Is the Urgent Demand of the People

The founding of the PRC and the establishment of the socialist system is the most profound political and social reform in our country's history. Because the people have taken state power into their hands and become the masters of the country and society and because the socialist public ownership of the means of production has been established, the system of exploitation of men by men has been eliminated and the principle of "from each according to his abilities and to each according to his labor" has been implemented, the establishment of the socialist system has opened up broad prospects for the prosperity of the motherland and the happiness of the people.

However, it is impossible to eliminate all the malpractices left by the old society as soon as the socialist system is established. Moreover, as the socialist cause is a completely new cause in our country, it is unavoidable that some defects will emerge and some mistakes will be committed in the leading of such a great cause. That is why since the founding of our country, despite the great results we have achieved, there have still been various malpractices in some aspects in our political, economic and social life.

Regarding our political life, we have not established a perfect system of socialist democracy. The system of the people's congresses is the basic political system of our country, but it was seriously destroyed during the decade of turmoil. The thinking style of some leaders of the party and the state was, of course, one reason, but the most important reason was in the system. Why did the "leftist" mistakes last for so many years and why were they not corrected in a timely manner? Why did such a disaster as the "Great Cultural Revolution" occur in a socialist land? Why did the broad ranks of party members and the broad masses of the people not stop the spread and development of this disaster by normal means? Comrade Deng Xiaoping profoundly said that the reform and perfection of the system was more basic, more stable and more long-standing in nature and was concerned to a great extent with the whole situation rather than the thinking, work style and responsibility of individuals. Under the situation of the existence of lifelong tenure of the highest leadership posts of the party and the state, the principle of collective leadership and democratic centralism will be destroyed with the emergence and development of the practice of individualism. As the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" says: "Gradually building up a highly democratic socialist political system is one of the fundamental tasks of the socialist revolution." Since the founding of our country, we have failed to pay attention to this task and this became one of the important factors that gave rise to the "Great Cultural Revolution." In other aspects of our political life, because we have not set up a series of systems related to the structure and cadres of our organizations to meet the needs of the socialist modernization, our organizations have long since been overstaffed and they have long since overlapped one another in terms of responsibility and duties. As a result, there have been serious practices of shifting responsibility and the efficiency of these organizations is very low. In some areas and departments, the correct policies of the party and the government cannot be fully carried out, bureaucracy has run rampant and many problems related to the people's livelihood cannot be solved in a timely manner.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, under the guidance of the policy of readjusting, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, we have carried out some initial reforms in the agricultural, industrial, financial and commercial fields and have achieved some remarkable results while conscientiously correcting the previous "leftist" mistakes and readjusting the national economy.

However, as yet we have not enough time to formulate a scientific and well-conceived general plan for the reform of the economic system and structure. We have not yet been able to effectively eliminate the large number of malpractices in the economic life of our country and our economic work has fallen very short of the demand as a result of building up a powerful modern socialist country.

In the face of various problems in the political and economic fields of our country, the carrying out of the reform has become the urgent demand of the people all over the country. The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee was a great turning point of profound and far-reaching significance in the history of our party since the founding of our country. This plenary session put an end to the stagnant situation of the progress of the work of the party that had emerged since October 1976, began to comprehensively and conscientiously correct the "leftist" mistakes that were committed during and before the "Great Cultural Revolution" and to carry out a series of partial reforms in political, economic and other fields; for example, the restoration and consolidation of democratic centralism in the leading organizations at all levels, the strengthening of collective leadership and the combating and overcoming of the practice of the arbitration of individuals. Regarding the system of the leadership of the party and the state, the practice of confusing the party with the government, replacing the government with the party, and the overcentralization of power has been corrected. Regarding the cadre system, the abolishment of the de facto lifelong tenure of leading posts has been put forward and certain principles and regulations have been formulated to prevent and correct the unhealthy practices, such as bureaucracy and privilege, among the cadres. Regarding the election system, the system of a relative majority has been adopted and the scope of direct election has been expanded to include the election of the deputies of county people's congresses. Regarding the structure of the state organs, the central level organs have begun to put an end to the phenomena of overstaffing and overlapping, reducing the excessive number of deputy posts, improving work style and raising work efficiency. Regarding the economic structure and system, the power of local governments has increased, the decision-making power of enterprises, including rural production teams, has been expanded and various forms of the production responsibility system have been established. Regarding external economic relations, the previous practice of closing the country to international exchanges has been ended and the policy of opening up to the outside world has been implemented. All these reforms have given play to the initiative and creativeness of the broad masses of people and vigorously promoted the development of the socialist modernization of our country. The achievements that have been scored in the reforms since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee show that in order to more satisfactorily eliminate the various malpractices in the political and economic fields in our country, in order to remove the obstacles to our progress and in order to further perfect the socialist political and economic systems, it is necessary to continuously forge ahead in reforms.

The Party Is Surely Able To Lead the People To Complete the Great Cause of Reform

The reforms that we have been engaged in today are diametrically different from the reforms in the countries under the rule of the exploiting classes. In a country where the exploiting class has state power, reforms, after all, serve to consolidate the rule of the exploiting class over the masses of the people, even though some of them have objectively strengthened the force of the state. Our reform today, after all, is aimed at consolidating the state power of the people and seeking happiness for the people.

In order to ensure the smooth progress and the success of the reforms, the reforms must be carried out under firm leadership. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, our party has reestablished the Marxist ideological, political and organizational lines and the party Central Committee is the top headquarters of our reforms. More than 60 years of history since the founding of the CCP has proved that the CCP has not only successfully led the Chinese people in overthrowing the three great mountains and in scoring tremendous achievements in socialist revolution and construction, but is surely able to lead the reforms and achieve all-round victory in the reforms.

In order to ensure the smooth progress and success in the reforms, we must proceed from our national conditions, make careful study and formulate feasible goals of the reforms and the general and specific plans, measures and methods of the reforms. Regarding the reform of the political structure and system, the new constitution will become the most important part of this reform and it will point out the orientation of the reform of the structure of the state. For example, in the future structure of the state, we will expand the power of office of the NPC Standing Committee, set up the post of the chairman of the state and the Cental Military Commission, establish the responsibility system of ministers in the State Council and the limited tenure system of the top leading posts of the state, and definitely acknowledge the broad power of the masses of the people in running the state and the society. The process of formulating the new constitution can be said to be the process of carrying out the general design of the reform of the state structure. As for the reform of the political system and stucture, we have yet to formulate concrete reform plans related to our legislation, judiciary, national defense, cadres, the relationships between the central and local organizations, and the relationships between the party and the government. As for the reform of the economic structure, we should also carry out the general plan of the reform. At the same time, we must carry out relevant studies and formulate the concrete reform plans related to planning statistics finance, taxation, pricing, banks, commerce, materials, foreign trade and labor wages. Of course, the reforms of both the political and economic structures and systems are historical processes. In carrying them out we should not only formulate well-conceived plans, but should also invent concrete measures for reform in light of the actual conditions. These measures should be tested at selected points and the experience of these tests should be continuously summed up and gradually popularized.

In order to ensure the smooth progress and the success of the reform, we must, furthermore, promptly find and solve the various problems that will crop up in the process of the reform. At the same time, we should make relevant studies and formulate concrete reform plans related to planning, statistics, finance, taxation, pricing, banks, commerce, materials, foreign trade and labor wages. When we encounter difficulties and setbacks in carrying out reforms, we should conscientiously analyze the causes for the difficulties and setbacks and adopt feasible measures to satisfactorily solve, in a timely manner, the problems that have cropped up in the course of reform.

In order to achieve outstanding results in reforms, we should, while adhering to the four basic principles, continue to emancipate our minds and theoretically eliminate the various one-sided and erroneous ideas and prejudicies. For a long time, we denied that the socialist political and economic structures and systems should be continuously perfected. This idea, in fact, blocks reform and regards socialism as a thing that will never change. In the same way, when we correctly stressed democratic centralism and the principle of collective leadership, we denied the necessity of establishing the "responsibility system of the chief officials" in order to raise the work efficiency of the administrative organizations. When we stressed the historical role of the leaders of the proletariat, we denied the necessity for establishing the system of limited tenure for top leading posts of the state in a socialist country. When we correctly held that the socialist economy was a publicly-owned economy, we denied the necessity for allowing diversified economic factors to exist under the conditions of maintaining the power of public ownership. All this one-sided and even erroneous understanding about the socialism political and ecomomic strutures and systems has for a long time been the obstacle to the further development of our country's socialist cause. Therefore, "emancipating the mind, using our brains, seeking truth from facts and being united to look forward" should also be one of the important principles that guides reform work.

In order to achieve prominent results in the reforms, we must mobilize the masses of the people and make them plunge into the socialist cause of reform. The support or rejection by the people determines the prospects and the success or failure of the reform. Whether the plans, measures and methods of a reform are scientific in nature depends on whether the reform itself really conforms to the trend and the people's desire. Only by uniting the people of all nationalities throughout the country and giving full play to the initiative and creativeness of the masses of the people under the leadership of the party can we achieve success in the reforms.

The reforms are a great cause that our country will carry out during the 1980's for the purpose of building a powerful modern socialist country. Because the reforms will inevitably involve changes in the organization's structures, systems and work style and will inevitably shake up the out-of-date and backward things, the reform's will not be smoothly implemented and they will surely run into difficulties and resistance. Moreover, unexpected problems may crop up. However, today, as long as we adhere to the socialist road under the leadership of the party, as long as we conscientiously and prudently carry out the reforms in a planned and orderly manner, and as long as we are presistent and indomitable in doing this, the great cause of the reforms of the structures and systems in China will surely succeed and China will surely stand as a tower of socialist power in the Far East.

STATE FARM-COMMUNE CONTRADICTIONS VIEWED

[Article by XINHUA commentator: "An Important Way To Solve the Contradiction Between State Farms and Communes"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- In the past few years, there have been rather salient contradictions and disputes between state farms and communes and production brigades in some places. Cases of peasants plundering state farms' properties have occurred repeatedly. This not only directly disrupts production order and economic contruction but corrodes people's minds, corrupts the social atmosphere and party style and affects stability and unity.

Although this unhealthy trend of plundering the state farms' properties is attributable to the influence of the beating, smashing and looting, and anarchism during the "Cultural Revolution," more importantly, it is closely related to the laxity and weakness, unhealthy tendencies and one-sided mass viewpoint of some of the grassroots cadres and organizations. In fact, many unlawful acts were committed with the connivance and support, even under the leadership, of some country, commune and brigade cadres. It is imperative to adopt measures to firmly check this unhealthy trend. It is necessary to educate grassroots rural cadres and the peasant masses to love the state and socialism and to enforce party discipline and state law on the small number of people who violate law and discipline. This is one aspect of the problem.

On the other hand, we should see that to thoroughly solve the problem, we must correctly and reasonable handle the contradiction between the state farms and the communes. The reasons that have caused the contradictions between the state farms and the communes are complicated and many-sided. There are problems of the unclear definition of rights and jurisdictions and the unequal interests between the two sides left over from history. There are also problems caused by shortcomings and mistakes in the work of party and government departments. To properly handle the contradictions between state farms and communes, we should rely on party committees and governments at various levels to strengthen leadership, to educate all concerned parties to put the general interest first and to each do more self-criticism in the spirit of unity and looking forward, and to do more ideological and educational work among the broad masses so that they will help and accommodate one another on a reasonable and legal basis. The state farms should support the communes and brigades so that both will develop and prosper. The XINHUA item transmitted today on the state farm and land reclamation systems in Yunnan Province, which have supported rural communes and production brigades in many ways to develop production, resulting in mutual help, unity and harmony between state farms and communes, is a success story in this area.

Most of the state farms in Hunnan Province are located in the border areas inhabited by minority nationalties, living together with more than 10 nationalities. In the early days of the establishment of the state farms, the fraternal nationalities helped the farms make a start, and the farms gave help to local construction. The state farm workers and staff members an the commune members of minority nationalities were like brothers and members of one family, and they played an important role in developing production and bringing prosperity to the border areas. During the 10 years of turmoil, because of interference and disruption by the ultraleftist line, the relations between state farms and communes and brigades became rather tense, and, as the contradiction sharpened, there were even fights. The interests of both sides suffered. In the past few years, the state farms in Yunnan Province have examined the implementation of the party's policies on nationalities, solved problems left over from history in a realistic way, supported nearby communes and production brigades to develop production in many ways, showed concern about the wellbeing of the masses of commune members and further improved relations between the two sides.

The practice of the state farms and land reclamation systems in Yunnan Province has enhanced improvement of relations between the state, the collective and the individual commune members, between the Han nationality and the other fraternal nationalities, and between the party and the masses, and has played a positive role in accelerating the four modernizations and consolidating the socialist system. Their experience is worthy to be used as a reference by units concerned in other places.

RENMIN RIBAO REVIEWS CURRENT MARKET CONDITIONS

[Reporter's review: "Market Commodity Supplies Now Relatively Abundant; Stable Situation of 'Saving Money and Buying Selectively' Starts To Emerge"]

[Text] The urban and rural markets in China have been relatively prosperous this year, with a relative abundance of commodities. Total volume of retail sales from January to May was 9.2 percent greater than in the same period last year. Thanks to basic price stability and relatively ample commodity supplies, the previous common sight in the markets of "carrying money around and rushing to buy" is not seen much now. Instead, consumers are carefully choosing and repeatedly comparing the commodiites, and some are waiting for prices to fall. When people cannot find the commodity they want at the time, the universal method is to "save money and buy selectively." National savings deposits at the end of May were 6.543 billion yuan higher that at the beginning of the year and showed an increase of 13.135 billion yuan over the same period last year. This fully shows that the longstanding situation of rather serious market shortages has started to move toward stability.

In the wake of the gradual rise in purchasing power, there have been very great changes in consumption structure. This is mainly shown in the following respects: People are very keen to buy brand products, and many people save up for and wait to buy them; sales of medium and high-grade consumer goods have increased; people demand that products be attractive and of greater variety, while demand for certain products is light and stocks are low; since there are more and more only children, sales of children's products have increased and higher demands are placed on their quality; there is a high sales volume of marriage articles; and more and more people are stressing furnishings as housing conditions improve. These market trends and information compel attention.

Since the production responsibility systems were instituted in the rural areas, there has been a big increase in the peasants' requirements for medium and small farms tools. They are in urgent need of building materials, while their demands on quantity and quality of food, clothing and utensils are higher than before.

In the past, the peasants generally only had money to buy things after distribution, and commerce was divided into slack and busy seasons, but things have changed now, and they need to buy things all the time; the slack season is no longer slack, and the busy season is even busier than before. The commercial departments must apply various means to rural areas and rapidly launch a sales drive aimed at the 800 million peasants.

The changes in China's urban and rural markets express in a concentrated way the tremendous power of the principles and policies laid down by the third plenary session. They show the greater rationalization of industrial structure and product mix as a result of the readjustments in the national economy, and also demonstrate that our markets have started to change from sellers' to buyers' markets -- service attitude and quality in the shops, which was of no account for a long time, is now very important indeed. Now, different economic components and circulation channels exist side by side, and competition has started to emerge in the markets. Hence, transforming the bureaucratic style of business and improving service quality is a problem that urgently needs to be solved in state-owned commerce.

CONSUMER GOODS PRODUCTION INCREASE REPORTED

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- China's light industrial production has steadily increased since 1978, resulting in a marked improvement in urban and rural supply of commodities, according to reports from central authorities.

People no longer have to obtain coupons to buy a variety of goods previously in short supply, such as wrist watches, and people are now seldom seen queuing for beer as in the past. Supply of bicycles -- the chief means of short-distance trips for the people -- is ample throughout China, but it is still difficult to buy bicycles of famous brands produced in Shanghai and Tianjin.

People's purchasing power has been increasing. Authorities have repeatedly called attention to the fact that people no longer buy whatever they can get on the market but would rather wait until designs they like best are available. To meet their demands, efforts should continue to improve the quality of consumer goods, increase their variety and raise the output of famous-brand products which are in short supply, according to economic departments.

China's food industry increased its output during the 1979-81 period at an annual rate of more than ten percent. The country produced in the first half of this year 2,326,000 tons of sugar, 66 percent more than in the same 1978 period. Its output of beer in the first six months of this year was 515,000 tons, equivalent to the 1979 annual output, according to the Ministry of Light Industry.

Increases were even greater for durable consumer goods in great demand. In the first six months of this year, China achieved increases ranging from 120 percent to 160 percent in the output of bicycles, wrist watches and sewing machines compared with the same 1978 period.

The output of television sets in the first half of this year was 2,757,000, or five times the annual output of 1978. The corresponding figure for washing machines was 1,176,000, as against a few hundred for the whold of 1978. Television sets and electric fans are making their way into more and more urban residents' homes and even some of the better-off peasant families.

The variety of light industrial products has increased. Between 1979 and 1981, according to the Ministry of Light Industry, and average of 30,000 new designs and varieties of textiles were put into production a year. In addition, the Chinese people now have a larger choice of clothing styles.

Supply of heavy-duty bicycles, low-price wrist watches and furniture to the countryside has increased since the beginning of the this year, now that peasants have more money at their disposal under the policy of encouraging them to achieve prosperity through collective and individual efforts. The rural housing construction boom has resulted in a marked increase in the sale of cement and metal articles for household use.

Ministry of Light Industry officials attibuted the growth of the policy of giving prominence to the development of consumer goods industries. Under this policy, the textile industry added 3.31 million spindles from 1979 to 1981.

State investment in the construction of light industry projects accounted for 10.4 per cent of national investment in capital construction in 1981 while the proportion was 6.1 per cent in 1978.

ENTERPRISE CONSOLIDATION FORUM OPENS IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- With the approval of the State Council, a national forum on enterprise consolidation opened in Beijing today. In his speech, Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister of the State Economic Commission, said: The consolidation of existing enterprises is very important for raising economic results, increasing state revenue and radically improving the national economy. We must be resolved to do this work successfully.

For many years much work has been done in various areas and departments to consolidate enterprises in accordance with the guidelines outlined in the documents issued by the party Central Committee and the State Council. Judging from what has been done, the majority of the leaderships of the various areas and departments have attached fairly great importance to this work and have done it fairly well. Proceeding from reality, they have achieved initial results in consolidating enterprises by tackling their principal contradictions, nevertheless, the work has just begun and has been developing unevenly. The forum's principal objective is to sum up the results of the work of consolidating enterprises on a trial basis in the past years, exchange experiences gained in this work, discuss new situations and solutions to new problems in this work, and draw up a plan for continuing this work in the next 6 months.

After reviewing China's current economic situation, Zhang Jingfu said: Our future work of consolidating enterprises should continue to be done in line with the general guidelines outlined in the documents of the party Central Committee and the State Council. It is necessary to consolidate leading bodies, labor organizations, labor discipline and financial and economic discipline; improve the economic responsibility system; draw up a plan for training staff members and workers; strengthen ideological and political work; and successfully build a spiritual civilization. He said that the enterprise consolidation should go hand in hand with enterprise readjustment. Moreover, it is necessary to readjust the organization and structure of enterprises and their product mix, with the emphasis placed on raising economic results and conserving energy. Thus some enterprises must be shut down, suspend operation, merge with other enterprises or switch to the manufacture of other products.

Zhang Jingfu siad that the consolidation of enterprises should be carried out in conjunction with the reform and restructuring of industry. He noted that certain reforms are necessary while other reforms may be carried out on a trial basis.

Today's opening ceremony was presided over by Yuan Baohua, head of the leading group for enterprise consolidation throughout the country and vice minister of the State Economic Commission. Attending the forum were more than 1,900 people including responsible persons in charge of enterprises in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and in some municipalities under the direct jurisdiction of a province, leading cadres of the State Council's 52 ministries and commissions and government functionaries.

Energy Conservation Stressed

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- At today's opening session of the national forum on enterprise reform, Comrade Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of State Economic Commission, issued a call for waging a sustained war to conserve energy.

He said there has been an acute shortage of energy since the beginning of this year. The waste has been great, and the gap between supply and demand is very big, especially in the northeast and east China and the Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan area. To ease the energy shortage in the long run it is necessary to step up the development of energy resources and increase new production capacity. But at present it is necessary to adopt effective measures to conserve energy.

He said: The failure of the energy industry to advance does not necessarily mean that our overall industrial production will remain as it is. The effect of energy on our economy will depend on our determination to conserve energy, the measures adopted and the achievement is made. We must rely on energy conservation in developing our economy. Our economy cannot expect to advance if we do otherwise.

Zhang Jingfu said: We must lay a good foundation in the next 10 years for the development of our economy in the subsequent period. To do so, in addition to developing energy resources within our capacity, we must devote our main efforts to conservation. We must further cut down the amount of petroleum used as fuel. At the same time, we must promote the comprehensive use of low-grade coal. We must take a giant step in renovating boilers, transformers, blowers, pumps and other equipment which consume large amounts of energy. We must extensively install electricity, water and gas meters to enforce the system of collecting fees according to the amount of consumption. The system of charging a consumer a fixed amount of money in disregard of his consumption should be stopped immediately.

Zhang Jingfu also said: It is necessary to continue to carry out enterprise reform. Those enterprises which continue to lag behind in production technology, consume unreasonably high amounts of energy, show poor economic performance and compete with advanced enterprises for raw materials even after reform should be closed down, merged with other enterprises, or suspended for a charge of its production line. Commune- and brigade-run enterprises should also be guided in this spirit. In short, we must extensively and profoundly carry out energy conservation and gradually set up an economic structure of high performance and low energy consumption.

MEETING DISCUSSES SPEEDING ANHUI COAL PROJECT

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- A group of scientists headed by Professor Hua Luogeng, noted Chinese mathmatician, after three months' on-the-spot investigation and study, put forward proposals for accelerating construction of the Anhui coal center at a meeting expounding their findings which closed here today.

The Anhui coal center, generally known as the Huainan and Huaibei coalfields, is located in east China, the country's most developed area. The gross industrial and agricultural output value of the six provinces and Shanghai in that area accounts for over one-third of the national total. Demand for energy supply is high and supply falls far short of demand.

According to the Ministry of Coal Industry, the coal mining center has more than 22,000 million tons of reserves, of which three-fourths are still not tapped. The ministry plans to build a number of large and medium sized mines in the Huainan and Huaibei coal mining areas while expanding rail and water transport capabilities accordingly.

Minister of Coal Industry Gao Yangwen last March wrote to Professor Hua Luogeng asking for advice on the program for developing the coalfields in northern Anhui over the next 15 years. The professor is also general advisor of the consulting service of the China Association for Science and Technology.

A study group was formed by more than 20 scientists from seven societies under the association including the overall planning method and optional seeking method, coal, electrical machinery, railway, navigation, communications and energy. Led by Professor Hua, the group twice visited Huainan between April and June to conduct investigation there. The scientists made a report on the development of coal in the area and the construction of related projects and charted an overall plan.

Through detailed study of several mines and by using the method of overall planning, the scientists suggested a series of measures for shortening the time for construction. By adopting the effective new way of management, the time required for construction of each pair of coal shafts may be shortened by two years.

According to Minister Gao Yangwen, it is important to base planning and policy decision on a scientific foundation in order to achieve speed in construction and good economic results.

Attending the three-day meeting were also Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission; Gao Yangwen, minister, and Liu Hui, vice-minister, of coal industry; Yang Jike and Kang Zhijie, vice-governors of Anhui Province.

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- Zheng Siyuan, deputy head of the census leading group of the State Council, said this evening at a national census telephone conference: The national census registration will basically end today, but arduous tasks remain to be done in various aspects henceforth. The census leading groups under the people's governments of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should continue to strengthen their leadership, exert themselves and ensure a good end following the good start to make the census a complete success.

Zheng Siyuan said: With the active support of the borad masses of people, the census registration has been carried out smoothly in past 10 days. They include sample quality checks on the census registration, manual tabulation of major census figures, encoding of census registration tabulations, computer data entry and processing and compilation and printing of material.

PLA NAVAL ACADEMY STUDIES FALKLANDS BATTLE

[Text] According to JIEFANGJUN BAO, teaching and research personnel of the PLA Naval Academy have achieved initial results in the study of the battle of the Malvinas to find out the answer of how to defeat a stronger enemy with an inferior force in a sea battle under modern conditions. As of 30 June, more than 30 research papers had been prepared by various military teaching and research sections. The research papers contained some good ideas on China's naval building and tactical thinking and warfare. They also set forth new tasks for the reform of education, which is being carried out at present.

Teaching and research personnel of the Naval Academy began to extensively collect tactical and technical data and conduct research and discussion of the Malvinas battle as soon as it started. The military teaching and research sections of the academy studied the battle from different angles with special reference to the reality of our armed forces. They studied the question of naval building in the 1980's and the scale of sea battle, the guiding military thinking, the form and characteristics of sea battles and the control of the air and mastery of the seas in future wars against aggression. Such study has greatly expanded the vision of the Naval Academy in its educational reform. The teaching and research personnel sought to discover the weak links in their teaching in order to satisty the needs of modern sea battles. They have also made suggestions to improve their teaching. The Naval Academy is making a comprehensive study of their suggestions and plans to gradually adopt them in teaching.

JIEFANGJUN BAO adds an editor's note to this report. It points out: Closely watching the battles in today's world to find out the laws of modern warfare and presenting new ideas and tasks on strengthening teaching and training with reference to the reality of our armed forces is a very convenient and economical way of doing things. This method can be used not only by various military academies at various levels but also by various PLA units and arms and services. This is what we call learning warfare from war.

PLA IMPLEMENTS PARTY POLICY ON INTELLECTUALS

[Text] Beijing, 8 Jul (XINHUA) -- Recently various PLA units have earnestly checked into the work concerning intellectuals. They laid stress on further eradicating the influence of "leftist" ideas and on promoting the enthusism of the broad masses of intellectuals to actively contribute to building a modern and regular revolutionary army.

In order to grasp this work well, the General Political Department issued a circular to all major units of the PLA on examining their attitude toward intellectuals. The circular asked the party committees, political organs and related departments of units of corps and higher levels to conscientiously study the directives issued by the party Central Committee on implementing the party's policy toward intellectuals and fully understand that intellectuals are an indispensable and important force in building a modern and regular revolutionary army. The circular asked the party committees of various units of corps and higher levels and party committees of some divisions with a relatively greater concentration of intellectuals to conduct investigation and study in a thoroughgoing manner. While fully affirming their achievements in implementing the party's policy toward intellectuals, the circular said that it is necessary to pay attention to checking the influence of "leftist" ideas, the prejudicial practice of despising intellectuals and the actual problems in their work. The circular asked the party committees to conscientiously sum up their experience and lessons and adopt measures for making improvements.

After receiving the circular, the various PLA units have promptly responded to it. Many leading comrades of units of corps and higher levels personally led inspection teams to various schools, scientific research units and hospitals where there are relatively more intellectuals and held talks with intellectuals to solicit their opinions. By so doing they gained a direct understanding of the work of intellectuals and of actual problems. Various PLA units made improvements while conducting investigation and thus further promoted the party's policy toward intellectuals.

Since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, various PLA units have seriously implemented the related directives issued by the party Central Committee and the Central Committee's Military Commission and adopted a series of measures to earnestly eradicate the influence of "leftist" ideas and correct prejudicial practices toward intellectuals. Various PLA units have educated the broad masses of cadres and fighters and helped them understand that intellectuals are a part of the working class and a backbone force in promoting the modernization of national defense. The cadres and fighters have thus enhanced their awareness of implementing the party's policy toward intellectuals.

A large number of qualified intellectuals have been absorbed into the party. The broad masses of intellectuals have thus experienced the warmth of the party. Many outstanding intellectuals have been promoted to leading posts at divisional and regimental levels and assumed important tasks. According to an investigation of 30 basic-level units in the Beijing area, more than 200 middle-level technical staff members have been promoted to leading posts at regimental levels and above. Professors and assistant professors account for more than half of the leading members of various departments and higher units at the National Defense Science and Technology University.

In order to meet the need of developing science and technoloby, various PLA units have made efforts to create favorable conditions and strengthened the training of intellectuals to raise their technical level in their respective specialized fields.

In accordance with the state's unified regulations, all PLA units have made evaluations, conferred job titles on large numbers of technical cadres and appropriately increased their wages. At the same time, various PLA units have made efforts to improve intellectuals' working and living conditions. With the approval of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, the General Political Department issued a "Provisional Regulation Governing the Political and Material Treatment of Scientific and Technological, Literary and Art, and sports cadres of the Army." The regulation prescribes housing, the use of motor vehicles, the reading of documents and other matters for intellectuals and thus solved a number of practical problems. Various PLA units have also paid attention to running well factories operated by dependents and running well kindergartens, childcare centers and "service centers for daily life," helping dependents of intellectuals find jobs and reducing the intellectuals' worries.

Owing to the proper implementation of the party's policy toward intellectuals, various PLA units have whipped up the enthusiasm of the broad masses of intellectuals for making contributions to the modernization of national defense. Many intellectuals have made outstanding achievements in scientific research, teaching and medical work. Army medical workers have won 451 third class and higher merits for their medical achievements. A large number of intellectuals have won prizes and honors in various fields and many have been named "outstanding party members," "advanced producers" and "pace setters in promoting spiritual civilization."

The PLA units have in the course of inspection also discovered a number of problems. In the light of these problems, the various PLA units have adopted measures to solve them.

PLA NAVY HOLDS MEETING ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK

OW110020 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0249 GMT 6 Jul 82

[Text] Beijing, 6 Jul (XINHUA) -- The PLA Navy recently held a meeting on political work research achievements to conscientiously sum up and exchange experiences gained by naval units in strengthening ideological and political work during the new period, according to reports by XINHUA correspondents Chu Zhongwei and Wang Jinzhong.

Fifty-eight papers presented to the meeting expounded on the question of how to intensify education in fundamental Marxist theory. They pointed out that only when education in fundamental theories is stressed in political work to enable the commanders and fighters to understand that capitalism is bound to vanish and that communism is bound to triumph, can the commanders and fighters be helped to firmly establish the scientific communist world outlook and lofty ideals, steel their communist conviction and be aware of the need to fight for communism.

While probing into the naval units' education in fundamental theories, many papers expounded from different angles the question of studying Mao Zedong's works. Wang Xiaohan, deputy director of the Political Department of the Beihai Fleet, presented a paper entitled "A Preliminary Exploration of How To Develop in Depth Grassroots Units' Study of Mao Zedong's Works." The paper, which Wang Xiaohan wrote after an investigation of the naval units' progress in studying Mao Zedong's works, was highly valued by the comrades present because of his new approaches to the problems arising from the units which need an urgent solution. His paper pointed out that a long-term task of ideological construction among cadres and fighters is to organize them to study Mao Zedong's works. Since the party Central Committee fulfilled the historic task of bringing order out of chaos in our guiding ideology and restoring the true features of Mao Zedong Thought, we can only use the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic" as our guide to initiating study of Mao Zedong's works among the units while taking the actual conditions of the units into consideration. Only thus can we ensure that the study program develops along a healthy path and gains a new momentum.

Wu Huayang and Zhou Yadong, political work cadres from grassroots units, presented to the meeting their joint paper "An Exploration of Strengthening the Systematic Concept and Improving the Grassroots Units' Political Work Efficiency." The paper has opened the eyes of many by attempting to use some achievements in natural sciences to raise the results of ideological and political work and to ensure the hours to be given to education in fundamental theories. Using theories of the science of systematic engineering, the paper classified the various tasks of political work planned by the paper authors' superiors and the scopes of such tasks into three categories known as "points" [dian 7820], "lines" [xian 4848] and "areas" [mian 7240], thereby establishing an order of precedence for the complex and manifold tasks. This will enable political cadres to use their strength properly in developing work and attain the best overall results, thus strengthening the systematic and scientific nature of political work in a planned way.

A paper presented by the political department of an antiaircraft artillery regiment under a certain aviation unit of the navy was entitled: "A Probing Into How To Train Instructors and Improve Their Quality During the New Period." It says that to train political work cadres during the new period, it is necessary first of all to improve their theoretical levels. This is of practical and guiding significance in improving education of fundamental theories, the paper says.

The achievements of the meeting summed up the experiences of the party committees and political organs at all levels in the navy in stepping up the modernization and regularization of the navy. Given the leadership by cadres at various levels, the political organs and other departments of the PLA Navy have, in the past year, taken up political work as a science. They have carried out political work research activities in a deep-going manner according to the special characteristics of the navy. More than 144 leading cadres at the divisional level have written 167 research papers and investigative reports.

EDUCATION ON PATRIOTISM ON ARMY DAY URGED

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jul (XINHUA) — Recently, in relaying a "proposal regarding activities to mark the 55th anniversary of the founding of the PLA" made by the PLA General Political Department, the CCP Central Committee called for efforts to carry out education on patriotism during this year's Army Day among armymen and civilians throughout the country, particularly among young people, to encourage them to cherish the CCP, the socialist motherland and the People's Army.

The CCP Central Committee pointed out: Since its founding 55 years ago, the great Chinese People's Liberation Army has made tremendous contributions to the Chinese people's revolution and construction under the leadership of the CCP. Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi, Zhu De and other proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation performed immortal deeds for the founding and development of the People's Army. During this year's Army Day, the various localities may carry out activities to mark Army Day and to promote education on patriotism among armymen and civilians throughout the nation, particularly among young people, encouraging them to cherish the CCP, the socialist motherland and the People's Army. The army should educate cadres and fighters to support the government, cherish and protect the people and become a Great Wall of steel in safeguarding the socialist motherland and glorious pace setters in developing socialist spiritual civilization. Through the various activities to mark Army Day, we must make the people in the country and the broad masses of commanders and fighters work hard with revolutionary zeal, further strengthen unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people, combat and resist corrosion by bourgeois ideas, wage a resolute struggle against various illegal and criminal activities in the economic sphere, do a good job in developing socialist material and spiritual civilization, and contribute to building our army into a modern and regular force, safeguarding world peace and realizing the sacred cause of national reunification.

In its proposal on activities to celebrate the 55th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese PLA, the General Political Department said: Since the smashing of the "gang of four," particularly since Comrade Deng Xiaoping took charge of the work of the Military Commission, new major progress has been made in all the work in the army. To celebrate the 1 August Army Day, we must continue to assiduously study the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" and conscientiously study, understand and implement the "Decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on Dealing Blows at Serious Criminal Activities in the Economic Sphere" as well as the documents of the central authorities on strengthening the struggle against corruption in the ideological sphere. We must pay attention to the development of socialist spiritual civilization by regarding efforts to foster lofty ideals, raise moral standards and observe discipline as the central theme. We must resolutely strike at the serious criminal activities in the economic sphere and help the broad masses of cadres and fighters bring into full play the glorious tradition of arduous struggle, enhance capabilities in combating corruption by bourgeois ideas, work hard with revolutionary zeal, carry out work on a solid basis and strengthen the building of basic-level units.

The proposal of the General Political Department called on the party committees and political organs at all levels in the army to conscientiously grasp education during Army Day, organize the broad masses of commanders and fighters to study our army's magnificent history and glorious traditions, and propagate the tremendous achievements of the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation. They must help the cadres and fighters understand the army's place, role and glorious mission in the Chinese people's revolution and construction, conscientiously adhere to the four basic principles, earnestly implement the party's line, principles and policies, strive to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, vie with one another to become glorious pace setters in developing socialist spiritual civilization, and contribute to building our army into a modern, regular revolutionary army and to safeguarding and developing the four modernizations program.

The proposal of the General Political Department urged the whole army to do a good job in supporting the government and cherishing the people, and to carry out varoius activities of performing good deeds for the people in a planned and organized manner. It is necessary to use the typical examples set by the people in supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to military dependents to educate cadres and fighters. The leading and political organs at all levels must extensively and sincerely solicity the opinions of local party and government organs and of the masses regarding the army, and conscientiously check how PLA units implement policy and enforce discipline. PLA units in the border and coastal regions must strengthen their unity with militiamen and the masses, and further improve army-people joint defense. PLA units in areas inhabited by people of minority nationalities must conscientiously check how the party's nationality policy is implemented so as to further strengthen unity among all nationalities.

The General Political Department's proposal also suggested that local party and government organs at all levels, in the light of local conditions, may organize report meetings and invite army or local veteran comrades, heroes and models to introduce the army's history and glorious traditions.

LIAOWANG COMMENTATOR DENOUNCES ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

[Text] On 13 April, the CCP Central Committee and the State Council adopted the "Decision on Cracking on Criminals Who Seriously Undermine the Economy." This decision explicitly points out the harmfulness of serious criminal activities in the economic field in the past few years, stipulates guiding principles and policies for dealing blows at economic criminal activities and expounds the nature and significance of this struggle. It calls on all comrades of the party, government and army, and leading organs at all levels in particular, to resolve to carry this struggle forward to the end. The "decision" also stresses that in this struggle, Communist Party members should take a clear-cut and firm stand. If anyone takes a passive attitude or recoils in fear in this struggle and connives at or shields criminal elements, this means that his party spirit is impure and that he is not qualified to be a Communist Party member, especially a Communist Party member holding a leading post.

This decision made by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council can be regarded as an appeal for resisting corrosion and an official denunciation of economic criminal elements.

After reading this official denunciation, it reminds me of Han Yu and his article "Elegiac Address to the Crocodiles."

Everyone knows that Han Yu was a great writer of the Tang Dynasty. Howev er, not all of us know his contribution to government affairs when he was an official. We can perhaps get a hint of it from the above-quoted article.

During the reign of the Emperor Xian Zong of the Tang Dynasty, Han Yu was demoted to be a prefectural governor of Chaozhou. At that time, the areas of Lingnan and Chaozhou were "10,000 li from the capital." They were underdeveloped areas where crocodiles "propagate rapidly." After assuming office, Han Yu found out that crocodiles "fatten themselves on villagers' cattle and other animals such as bears, hogs, deer and river deer and produce abundant offspring" and that they were a local scourge. He was filled with indignation and wrote his article "Elegiac Address to the Crocodiles," seriously warning them not to "get together with the prefectural governor of the area." He solemnly declared that as the head of the prefecture, he was responsible for "safeguarding the territory and governing the people." How could he "bow to crocodiles...in order to drag out an ignoble existence?" Therefore, he issued an ultimatum to the crocodiles and forced them to "move southward to the sea with other ugly animals within a specified time." They had to leave in 3 to 5 days. If they could not leave in 5 days, they had to do so in 7 days whatever happened. If they failed to leave within 7 days, that meant they "continued to put up a stiff resistance" and had turned a deaf ear to the warning. Han Yu maintained that the only way to cope with these diehard evil creatures was to "recruit strong soldiers to shoot poisonous arrows at them" and "eliminate them completely."

This elegiac address to the crocodiles was written in an incisive style and was filled with the force of justice. It fully showed Han Yu's spirit of being absolutely irreconcilable with the evil creatures -- crocodiles!

In the past 2 or 3 years, criminal activities in the economic field such as smuggling, illegal business, corruption, accepting bribes, speculation, fraud, embezzlement of state and collective property and so on, have spread unchecked. They are more furious and harmful than the crocodiles and a number of people have become involved in them. It is not exaggerating to regard serious economic criminal elements as "crocodiles." To deal with them, we should follow the methods adopted by Han Yu in the days when he drove away the "crocodiles." We should "shoot poisonous arrows" at them and never let them "fatten on villagers' cattle and other animals such as bears, hogs, deer and river deer." Furthermore, on no account should we let them "multiply" and "reproduce their offspring" in our socialist territory. Otherwise, it will be difficult for our party to "safeguard the territory and govern the people" and ensure the smooth progress of socialist modernization. Our party and state will face the danger of "peaceful evolution." In this sense, the "Decision on Cracking Down on Criminals Who Seriously Undermine the Economy" is an "Elegiac Address to the Crocodiles" of modern times.

At present, the thing that merits our attention is that some people in our ranks are getting together with the "crocodiles." Some of them have been dragged into the mire by the "crocodiles" and have fallen into the quagmire of economic crimes or "bowed to the crocodiles" and "dragged out an ignoble existence." They turn a blind eye to serious criminal activities in the economic field or make everything convenient for the "crocodiles" to "multiply." They even connive at, shield and support economic criminal elements. This is a great danger. From the economic criminal cases which have been cracked, we can clearly discern this dangerous signal!

-- From the case of the "car magnate" in Anyang who resold cars for an enormous profit, we discovered 95 state cadres and 78 Communist Party members who had violated party discipline and state law.

-- In the fraud case of Yu Tianzhang who committed crimes from Heilongjiang to Guangdong, 23 cadres were involved and 2 of them were cadres at prefectural and division level and 5 of them were cadres at county and regiment level.

-- In the criminal activities of Ma Xiguang who was a profiteer and swindler, 113 people in the Tiefa Mining Bureau took bribes. Among them, 33 were cadres at administrative level and 45 were Communist Party members.

An enormous amount of facts has shown that some serious economic criminal activities are being carried out by a handful of people in our ranks who are collaborating with the lawless elements in society. A number of important and severe cases are very often carried out with the connivance and support of certain administrative organs and leading cadres. They take bribes, are derelict in their duty and pervert justice for a bribe. They provide criminal elements with funds and transportation facilities and issue clearances and certificates. After the criminal elements have been ferretted out, some of them still make excuses and plead for mercy on their behalf in order to shield them. This shows how severely our cadre ranks have been corroded by capitalist ideas!

The struggle between corrosion and efforts to resist corrosion is an important manifestation of class struggle in our country under the new historical conditions. Since the implementation of the correct open-door policy and the practice of enlivening the domestic economy, we have more contacts with capitalists from foreign countries and Hong Kong and Macao. The influence of the bourgeoisie has increased. This is an external condition leading to the corrosion of some people. However, things get wormeaten after they become rotten. Those who are corrupted by capitalist ideology have their own unmentionable diseases and viruses and severe capitalist individualism and selfish ideology. Some of them are remnants of the exploiting class. Under certain external conditions, they are prone to be corrupted by the capitalist decadent ideology and way of life, influenced by "fragrance" and stench and hit by "sugar-coated bullets." Therefore, they do various things which violate law and discipline. This is bound to lead to the struggle between corrosion and the efforts to resist the corrosion under the new historical conditions.

We should persist in implementing the open-door policy and pursuing the practice of enlivening the domestic economy. In the meantime, we should persist in carrying out the struggle to resist capitalist ideology. We should master the skills of allying ourselves with and struggling against the bourgeoisie under the new historical conditions. We should preserve the purity of Communist Party members and the spirit of not getting together with "crocodiles."

If we get together with "crocodiles," we will be bitten by them. We should guard against this!

DEMOCRATIC PARTIES HOLD FIRST JOINT MEETING

OW101624 Beijing XINHUA in English 1527 GMT 10 Jul 82

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- More than 1,400 former capitalists, returned Overseas Chinese, Taiwan compatriots and well known intellectuals in Beijing from China's eight democratic parties gathered at the worker's club today to exchange experiences.

The city organizations of these parties sponsored this first ever meeting at a time when the role of the democratic parties in socialist construction is receiving growing recognition from the public.

Presiding at the meeting, Lei Jieqiong, vice-chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, urged all members of the democratic parties to help promote each other in contributing their knowledge and experience to the country's four modernization program. The woman social activist is also a vice mayor of Beijing.

Among the audience to hear the eight speakers' reports on their work were Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Communist Party municipal committee, and a number of vice mayors.

Associate Professor Chen Zhongyi of Qinghua University, who went to the U.S. from Taiwan in 1948 for university education and returned to the mainland in 1951, stated at the meeting that now he was having the busiest period in and out of school since his return. "This is also my happiest period," said Chen. He was told to leave teaching for eight years during the Cultural Revolution. He told the meeting today of his recent effort to update a course in civil engineering, and his extra work which he said he was only too willing to take: helping young teachers, translating technical data, finalizing articles for the university journal as well as taking part in activities in the Chinese Civil Engineering Society. He has been honored as a model teacher by the university.

Yan Mingyi, the wife of former Kuomintang diplomat, told how she set up the Great Wall Arts and Crafts Workshop. She serves as the unpaid director of the shop for 140 girls making art sewing kits, purses and wallets.

Yan Mingyi, in her 70's, said she had never made any sewing kits herself before establishing the shop and was surprised that her first dozen were purchased by foreign tourists. The girls earn 60 to 70 yuan a month now, some more than 100 yuan, she said. Yan attributed her success to the support from various organizations. Her husband, whose work is to examine manuscripts of memoirs related to major events in modern Chinese history, also helped her receiving visitors and taking telephone messages.

Other speakers included a lecturer at the Central Conservatory of Music, a former owner of a grindwheel factory, a college administrator and a medical professor.

Also speaking was Gao Ge, head of the united front department of the Communist Party municipal committee. He praised the strong desire of the democratic party members to work for the well-being of the people. He said that more than one-third of the 780 former industrialists and commericalists in the city have been cited as advanced workers while 730 others, now in retirement, have helped local governments to set up small factories to employ mre than 6,000 jobless youths.

Nationwide, the eight democratic parties have approximately 500 members who have been elected deputies to the National People's Congress, China's highest organ of state power, or are members of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference since 1978 when the parties resumed their activities.

LIAONING JOURNAL CITED ON JUVENILE DELIQUENCY

[Article from Liaoning SHEHUI KEXUE DONGTAI [SOCIAL SCIENCE TRENDS] No 6: "New Trends in Juvenile Delinquency" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] What are the characteristics of the present situation of juvenile delinquency? Liu Dixin has summed them up as follows: THERE IS A TREND OF CONTINUOUS GROWTH. In 1980, juvenile delinquents accounted for 75.9 percent of the criminal offenders in Shenyang, and in 1981, they accounted for 77.7 percent.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ARE BECOMING YOUNGER AND YOUNGER. According to an investigation in Huanggu District, Shenyang, of 64 juvenile delinquents who are under the age of 14, 16 are from 8 to 10, another 16 are from 11 to 12, and 32 are 13 to 14. The main criminal offences they have committed are rape, robbery and theft.

THE NUMBER OF NEW CRIMINALS IS INCREASING. In Haicheng [County], new juvenile delinquents in a reformatory under the house of correction for juvenile delinquents account for slightly more than 32 percent, and the number of juvenile delinquents who are locked up in this reformatory is double that of 1980.

A NEW TYPE OF JUVENILE DELINQUENT IS APPEARING, WHO COMMITS CRIMES MERELY TO PLAY MISCHIEVOUS TRICKS. Most families of the juvenile delinquents who have committed crimes concerning money and goods have no economic difficulties. The purpose of some delinquents was merely to help their confederates and "brothers," and that of some others was to show off their abilities. Most of the rapists thought that it was a pleasure to make love with girls and some of them did it merely out of curiosity. There are even some delinquents who hurt others with air guns or lime powder, or tie others up with ropes merely to play mischievous tricks. All this shows that some young people have not acquired a correct outlook on life and do not have good moral character, ideals and spiritual ballast. Hence the mischievous type of delinquents.

According to an investigation in Shenyang and Fushun, of the number of juvenile delinquents, that of students ranked first in the past. But now it is the number of young workers which ranks first. And that of the young people waiting for jobs accounts for 23 to 24 percent.

WANG RENZHONG, DENG LIQUN AT EDUCATION FORUM

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee on 6 July held a forum at Zhongnanhai on ideological and moral education among youngsters and children, calling on the people throughout the country to be concerned about the growth of youngsters and children.

Among those who spoke at the forum were Wang Renzhong, member of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee; and Director Deng Liqun and Deputy Director Wang Huide of the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee. Attending were responsible persons of 30 departments concerned of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the journalists, literary and art, and publishing circles in the capital.

Wang Huide presided over the forum. He said: It is a cardinal matter to carry out ideological education among the youngsters and children because the country now has 140 million primary school students. If the preschool-age children and junior middle school students are also included, the total number will come to 350 million. This is a tremendous contingent. After 10 years or so and by the end of this century, these people will become a new force on all fronts shouldering the heavy responsibilities of socialist construction.

Vice Minister of Education, Peng Peiyun gave a briefing on how ideological and moral education was conducted in the primary schools in the past year. Rong Gaotang, advisor to the National Children's and Youths' Work Coordination Committee; Sun Jingxiu, noted youths' and children's educator; Lin Mohan, advisor to the Ministry of Culture; Wu Lengxi, minister of radio and television; He Dongchang, minister of education; Zhou Pengcheng, secretary of the CYL Central Committee; and Kang Keqing, chairman of the All-China Women's Federation, spoke at the forum. They resolutely endorsed and supported the call put forth by the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee on grasping ideological and moral education among young people and children and, in light of actual prevailing conditions, put forth specific views and measures for carrying out ideological and moral education among the youngsters and children at present and in the future.

Comrade Wang Renzhong made an important speech. He said the party Central Committee has attached great importance to the work with young people and children because the quality of this work has a bearing on the rise or decline of the nation. All of you have taken a very positive attitude toward this matter and presented many good ideas. He pointed out: We have accumulated much experience in promoting ideological and moral education among the youngsters and children and the key to success lies in popularizing the experience.

He said: The party committees, people's governments, women's federations, CYL organizations, federations of trade unions and other organizations at all levels must attach importance to and strengthen this work. Organs in the field of propaganda, literary and art circles, radio and television stations, troupes of popular entertainment and other literary and art organizations must truly provide children and youngsters with nourishment for their minds and for the healthy development of their moral character. They must strengthen ideological education among the children and youngsters. Since the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee is in charge of this affair, it must carry out such work through to the end.

Wang Renzhong said that to grasp well the ideological and moral education among youngsters and children, we should first start with the adults. If grandparents, parents and teachers are bad in thinking and style, they will create a very bad influence in the eyes of young children. Those who educate others must first of all give themselves an education, set a good example and be models to youngsters and children.

Wang Renzhong emphasized that ideological and moral education among youngsters and children must center around communist ideology. He pointed out: The saying that "communist ideals are unattainable" and that "they are something belonging to the future" is wrong. He said: During the period of new democratic revolution, we communists made use of such communist ideals to educate people, and we fought for this cause. Now we are engaged in socialist construction, and we are marching step by step towards this magnificent goal! The work in socialist construction which each of us in various fields of endeavor does everyday is a part of the cause for communism. That means that we are step by step realizing communist ideals.

He pointed out: In order to carry out ideological and moral education in primary schools, teachers should have teaching materials -- nationally unified basic teaching materials. They may also have supplementary teaching materials from one's own region. The contents of such teaching materials must be vivid and lively. When they expound the lessons, they must make such lessons interesting. They must be good at carrying out ideological education just like Li Yanjie, lecturer of the Beijing Teachers College. We must train a group of teachers who are good at teaching children and youngsters lessons in ideological and moral education.

Wang Renzhong said: We should have two demands on our children, that they grow up in good physical health as well as mental health. It is necessary to broaden their knowledge under the condition that they grow up in good physical health and mental health. When teachers and parents educate children, they must be good at inspiring and guiding them and educating them with a scientific approach.

Comrade Deng Liqun also spoke at the forum. He said GUANGMING RIBAO sponsored a discussion on ideological and moral education among primary school students with the hope that everyone would express his view to supplement or revise the outline of ideological and moral education. GUANGMING RIBAO wanted to engage in this task; other newspapers and periodicals and propaganda departments should also follow suit and do some news gathering so as to report, recommend and introduce those units and advanced personalities doing well in this area, together with good deeds and good experiences in order to make this discussion more comprehensive, with more solid content.

Also attending this forum were Deputy Directors Yu Wen and Zeng Delin of the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee, and responsible persons of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the China Educational Union, the Research Department of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee, party committees of organs directly under the CCP Central Committee, the Propaganda Department of the Chinese PLA General Political Department, the National Scientific Association, the Musicians Association, the Artists Association, RENMIN RIBAO, GUANGMING RIBAO, the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, the Childrens' Film Studio, the Arts Publishing House, the People's Literature Publishing House, the Chinese young journal agency, the FUDAOYUAN magazine, the People's Educational Publishing House and the Youths' and Children's Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

[Excerpts] The Standing Committee of the Fifth Fujian Provincial People's Congress held its 16th Session on 23 June. After listening to a report by Vice Chairman Cai Li, who transmitted the guidelines laid down by the 23d Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, the deputies studied the draft of the revised constitution.

On 24 June, the session listened to and reviewed the report given by Fu Deyi, president of the provincial higher people's court, and Sun Weiguan, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, on the activities to strike at serious economic crimes and discussed the report submitted to the NPC Standing Committee by the standing committee of the provincial people's congress on how the "Decision on Dealing Blows at Serious Criminal Activities in the Economic Field" was being implemented. The deputies maintained: Our situation in carrying out various activities to strike at various serious economic crimes, is fine. From the date of publication of the "Decision" of the NPC Standing Committee to the end of May 1982, 1,703 economic criminal offenders have surrendered. More than 1.4 million yuan of illicit money and a number of stolen goods have been returned. Some of the offenders have been educated and redeemed, and some of the major cases have been promptly solved. However, we must also soberly realize that this situation is not evenly developed. A considerable number of unsolved cases, particularly major cases, remain. Smuggling activities on the high seas have not been completely stopped. Some of the smugglers have changed their tactics and continue to commit crimes. In this regard, we must never lower our guard. Also attending the session were Chairman Xiang Nan and Vice Chairmen Cai Li, Wang Zhi, Jia Jiumin, He Minxue, Fu Bocui, Cai Liangcheng and Ren Manjun of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress.

FUJIAN COMPLETES GENERAL SURVEY OF PLACE-NAMES

[Excerpts] Fuzhou, 23 Jun (XINHUA) -- Fujian began a general survey of place-names more than 2 years ago. It has now basically completed the survey. It surveyed a total of 180,000 place-names, filled out 127,776 cards, wrote 2,121 pieces of reference material, and corrected some 5,000 place-names which had been arbitrarily changed and which failed to conform with the principle of standardization and normalization of place-names. A general survey of place-names is an important task involving politics, policy and science. It is closely related to the nation's four modernizations program and the people's livelihood. This general survey of place-names in Fujian started in September 1979. Nearly 70,000 cadres, people and vocational people participated in it. During the general survey, the offices in charge of place-names at all levels throughout the province acted upon the principle of cherishing local customs, paying attention to history, adhering to standards and norms and adopting names which are easy to read and remember. They restored and corrected those names which had been arbitrarily changed during the 10 chaotic years and also changed, according to the principle of standaridization and normalization of place-names, those names which were repetitive or had unhealthy meanings. The general survey work has also promoted the study of toponymy. The Fujian Provincial Research Society of Toponymy was established in June 1980. In March 1981 the society held its first forum on the study of place-names in the province, and received more than 70 theses.

[Excerpts] Recently the Jiangsu Provincial CCP Committee held a meeting attended by responsible persons of all provincial level departments, committees and offices to review the progress in the struggle to crack down on serious economic crimes in provincial organs. JIANGXI HOLDS MEETING ON RURAL ENTERPRISES

[Excerpts] The 8-day work conference on commune- and brigade-run enterprises and village and township construction successfully closed on 23 June. The conference was sponsored by the Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee and the Jiangxi Provincial People's government. Those who attended included Fu Yutian, secretary of the provincial party committee; Liu Zhonghou, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee; Wang Zhaorong, Standing Committee member of the provincial party committee and vice governor; and Zhang Guozhen and Fang Qian, vice governors. Those who spoke included Comrades Fu Yutian and Wang Zhaorong and (Zhang Qili), vice chairman of the provincial Capital Construction Committee. The conference made arrangements and set demands for energetically developing commune- and brigade-run enterprises and stepping up village and township construction in Jiangxi Province. The conference held that commune- and brigade-run enterprises were very necessary and must be run well.

The conference pointed out: It is an important task of the party committees and governments at all levels to gradually build comparatively backward villages and townships into new, modern and highly civilized socialist ones. For many years we have paid attention only to industrial and agricultural production and urban construction and have overlooked rural construction. In particular, the counties, in the past, did not have any agencies in charge of rural construction. In many localities, rural housing construction faced a laissez-faire situation, causing a general and serious problem in that peasants built houses wherever they wanted and misused cropland. In the coming winter and next spring, all localities should conduct a general investigation into the misuse of cropland in housing construction in the rural areas and resolutely stop this malpractice.

The conference emphatically pointed out: To develop commune-and brigade-run enterprises and step up village and township construction is an important part of socialist construction. It concerns the production and livelihood of the hundreds of millions of peasants. The party committees and governments at all levels should firmly strengthen their leadership over it. All departments concerned should closely coordinate with each other to make overall plans and arrangements for steadily developing commune- and brigade-run enterprises and village and township construction.

DAZHONG RIBAO COMMENTARY ON OUTLOOK ON LIFE

["Ideological Commentary" by Jiang Chunyun [1203 2504 7189]: "A Discourse on How To Write Personal History Well"]

[Text] How should a person spend his life? How should he write his own history? These are questions which no one can avoid. Today, our party and country are at an important juncture in history, when we are carrying forward the revolutionary cause pioneered by our predecessors and forging ahead into the future. To answer these questions with real actions in completing the present task of building socialist material and spiritual civilization is of very practical and far-reaching significance for all members of our society, in particular CCP members, CYL members, and the vast number of cadres, staff and workers.

A Correct Outlook on Life Must Be Developed

Consciously or unconsciously, one is writing one's own personal history at every moment, and determining what path to take. A person's every word and act are determined by his own thinking, and his outlook on life is the "supreme command" and main switch deciding what path he is to take during his life. In order to write personal history well, the most important thing is to make clear the meaning and value of life, and to develop a correct outlook on life. For what is a person living in the world? What is the real meaning and value of life? The views on and the understanding of these questions are varied depending on which class and stratum a respondent belongs to and what experience he has obtained.

Some people persist in the view that man is "selfish" by nature, and lives "for himself." They preach the philosophy "everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost"; during their entire lives they pursue the so-called extremely extravagant way of life of "overlords." In order to fulfill such a goal in life, they dare to do all evil things by which they harm others in order to benefit themselves, being intent on nothing but profit. This is the reactionary and degenerate philosophy of life of all exploiting classes. Such a philosophy of life dominates the old society where man exploits man. Even after the exploiters, as a class, have been eliminated, this philosophy of life, of which the influence cannot be thoroughtly cleared away in a short period, still will inevitably be worshiped by certain people, such as those criminals in the economic field at present.

Another type of people, being very selfish, believe that "ideal is equal to personal interests and one's future depends on one's fortune." Such people consider money as everything instead of taking a forward-looking attitude toward the revolutionary cause. In order to pursue fame, power and interests, they attempt very hard to enter by the back door and make every effort to befriend all people who might benefit them. Apart from the above-mentioned people, there is another type of people who consider themselves as "being disillusioned with the mortal world." Holding themselves aloof from the world, they pay attention only to their own easy life and show no concern for the weal and woe of the people. They declare that "keeping on the right side of everyone and shifting responsibility onto others in all cases is the highest guiding principle of behavior." Therefore, they never try to win merit but seek only to avoid blame. The philosophy of life followed by these people is not a proletarian one either.

Completely different from all those people mentioned above, those who take serving the people wholeheartedly as their purpose in life have truly developed a correct outlook on life. In their eyes, the real meaning and value of life is closely related to the progress of the whole society and the happiness of the people. The greater the contributions a person has made in working for the interests of society and the people, the greater the meaning and the higher the value his life will carry. Otherwise, his life will be meaningless and without value. Our great revolutionary pioneers and many heroes have, in theory and in practice, set brilliant examples for us.

Marx siad: "If we choose a profession which enables us to work for the interests of mankind to the best of our ability, we will not be overstrained by the workload, because we are sacrificing ourselves for the whole of mankind.

We will then share the happiness which belongs to hundreds of thousands of people instead of a mere bit of joy which is obtained from selfishness and is not worth mentioning. Our cause, though not illustrious, will be everlasting...." This is a marvelous condensation of the proletarian outlook on life, a lofty goal which Marx himself strove for in practice with all the energies of his lifetime. The great communist fighter Lei Feng said: "We live so that others may lead a better life. I must invest my limited life in the unlimited cause of serving the people." What a simple but penetrating statement this is! All of us are familiar with Lei Feng's brilliant deeds.

One's outlook on life is determined by one's world outlook. As Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "The change in world outlook is a fundamental one...." In order to take a correct road in life and write our personal history well, the most important thing for all of us is to transform our world outlook, solve the problem of for whom to study, labor and work, firmly establish the idea of wholeheartedly serving the people, and try to be a nobleminded and pure man, a man of moral integrity and above vulgar interests, and a man who is of value to the people.

To Integrate One's Own Job With the Lofty Goal

If we want to be of value to the people, we must first be clear on the following questions: What is the people's greatest interest? What should and could be done in the course of our struggle? How should be complete these tasks? According to the laws of social development, the capitalist society will inevitably be replaced successively by the socialist and the communist societies. In this process, we, mankind, will eliminate the exploiting system which has existed for several thousand years; turn the private ownership of means of production into the public ownership; vigorously promote social productive forces; gradually eliminate the distinctions between town and country, industry and agriculture, and physical and mental labor; and eventually build up a high degree of material and spiritual civilization, which will enable all members of society to lead a most beautiful and happy life. These are the greatest and most fundamental interests of the broad masses of the people, and this is also the lofty ideal which all our party members, cadres and revolutionaries should strive for with all the energies of their lifetime. If we want to be of value to the people, we must closely integrate our own jobs with the present work of socialist construction and the lofty goal of building communism in the future, and wholeheartedly play the roles of rustproof screws in the vast machinery of revolution.

As we know, the human community is all-embracing, and the interests and demands of the people are manifold and concrete. Tens of thousands of tasks have to be completed in building socialism and communism. Each individual can only be engaged in a certain specific job on a certain position, and make his own contributions to the great cause of socialism and communism. If each of us can work with a high sense of responsibility, always keep on improving our work and do our best to score good results, our construction of the four modernizations will be greatly speeded up and the people's livelihood will be improved step by step. Therefore, no matter what kind of jobs we are undertaking, agriculture, industry, commerce, scientific research, or others, no one should underestimate the importance of his own labor or work, but cherish it as part of the people's interests. Unfortunately, not everyone can conduct himself in this way. For example, it is quite common that some of our comrades always like to rank the posts they are holding according to their standards of superiority or inferiority. Those who regard their jobs as inferior are always dispirited and lose their enthusiasm for work. Such an attitude is entirely wrong. Without a doubt, there is a difference between jobs in a socialist society. The purposes, the objects of service, working conditions, and remuneration of different posts and different professions in different trades are really different. But they are no different in the degree of superiority, because all jobs, mental labor or manual labor, administrative work or concrete labor, productive trades or service trades, are needed by society and the people. There is only difference in terms of the division of work and duty. Degree of superiority is out of the question, since everyone is equal politically.

In socialist society, every profession produces its own leading authority. Anyone can win the people's respect and praise if he achieves great successes. On the contrary, if a person does not fulfill his duty, or even promotes evil practices, he will be denounced and opposed by the people no matter who he is, senior cadre or well-known figure. Loving our own work, conscientiously carrying it out, and thus making our due contributions to society and the people -- this is the only correct attitude, which everyone should take.

We Must Have Persistent, Dauntless and Indomitable Determination and Willpower

A person who has made up his mind to work for the interests of society and the people has to cultivate a persistent, dauntless and indomitable determination and willpower. Just as Marx pointed out: "There is no smooth, wide road in the field of science. Only those who think nothing of hardship in climbing up the mountain by rugged paths have a chance to reach the magnificent summit." We must follow the example of "those who think nothing of hardship in climbing up the mountain by rugged paths," if we want to achieve something great for the people and write our personal history well. To achieve this, we must at least stand the following three tests:

First, we must fear no hardship, and stand the test of various difficultics. In the modern revolutionary history of our country, in order to arouse the masses of people to overthrow the Qing Dynasty, the great revolutionary forerunner Sun Yat-sen worked hard and overcame numerous difficulties for 40 years. In order to save the Chinese revolution, the Chinese Workers and Peasants Red Army climbed over snow-covered mountains, crossed natural barriers, underwent numerous dangers and hazards, and eventually completed the world-famous 25,000-li Long March. The anti-Japanese war and the liberation war that followed and the socialist construction after the founding of the PRC were also successfully carried out by our peoples overcoming numerous difficulties under the leadership of the party. Here we have talked from the scope of the whole revolutionary cause. Now, let us expound from the angle of an individual. The spirit of fearing neither difficulties nor hardship also is indispensable for the achievement of true success. Can anyone deny that the moving deeds of those heroes and model figures were the results of arduous manual and mental labor? It is by enduring hardship and through tenacious fighting that our country's women's volleyball team won the world championship. Who among those laborers working against time in industrial and mining enterprises are not true men who enjoy hard work and advance despite difficulties?

Second, we must guard against arrogance and rashness, and should not be dizzy with success. For quite a few people, success is an obstacle on their path. When being commended for some success in his work, one can easily get swollen with pride. This type of person will inevitably suffer setbacks. All clear-headed and farsighted revolutionaries always despise arrogance and complacency. In their eyes, conceit, being an obstacle on the road ahead, must be removed; after all, any success achieved by an individual can only be regarded as a small step in the long march of revolution. "Modesty helps one advance, whereas conceit makes one lag behind. This is a truth we must always bear in mind."

Third, we must not be afaid of failure and should be strong in the face of setbacks. It is unlikely that we will encounter successes and victories every step of our lives. Inevitably, we may encounter setbacks and failures from time to time, There are two different attitudes toward setbacks and failure. First, some people are scared by setbacks and failures, and become dispirited and pessimistic. As a result, they will achieve nothing. They take such an attitude because they are not clear about the complex nature of objective matters and are not mentally prepared for setbacks and failures, or because, being excessively vain, they are afraid of losing face. Second, some people firmly believe that "failure is the mother of success." Fearing no setback or failure, they are adept at drawing lessons from failures. They try their best to handle things according to objective laws and continue to advance. Consequently, they are able to turn failure into success and bad things into good ones. The latter attitude is the correct one which we should take toward setbacks and failures.

Engels said: "For a man with normal intelligence, judgment of a person should naturally be based on his behavior, not on his words; in other words, on what he has done and what he actually is, not on what he claims to be."

In judging what road a person has taken and how well he has written his personal history, we can only proceed from his behavior, and from what he has done in his life, not from his own statements and claims. Let us get rid of all empty words and lies, and do more good work and seek the interests of the people in a down-to-earth manner.

Li Manchang immediately rushed to the spot and, by taking resolute measures, succeeded in preventing the riot and in speedily restoring normal production and livelihood.

After the incident, the leading comrades of the prefectural CCP Committee and administrative office, including Deng Youzhi, Chang Shengshi and Xiong Dingen, again called the principal responsible members of the county and mine CCP committees to exchange views, study measures for consolidating the state of affairs and thoroughly resolve the dispute. It was decided that the leaders of the Jiangyong CCP Committee should organize a strong work team to be stationed in Xiajiang production brigade to carry out organizational rectification with the focal point placed on the rectification of the CCP branch and the militia organization. Xiajiang production brigade and Tongshanlin nonferrous metal mine conducted education in observing discipline and the laws, loving the commune and mine, strengthening unity and fraternity, and engaging in active production among the cadres and masses. Through rectification, each party asked for the opinions of the other party of their own accord and made criticism and self-criticism, thus strengthening the unity and the relationship between workers and peasants.

[Station commentary: "Leaders Should Personally Solve Disputes"]

[Text] In recent years, disputes between workers and peasants, and disputes concerning boundaries, hills and forests have occurred from time to time. These incidents have seriously affected stability and unity and industrial and agricultural production and have caused losses of people's lives and of state and collective properties.

The solution to the contradictions and disputes depend to a great extent on the importance the leaders at various levels attach to the problems, especially the prompt and effective measures they adopt at the time they notice the symptoms of disputes, in order to prevent the situation from deteriorating and appropriately solve the existing contradictions.

The speedy solution of the dispute between workers and peasants and the prevention of mass riots with weapons in Jiangyong County, Lingling Prefecture, was a vivid case in point. With respect to these disputes involving many people, it is necessary for the CCP committees, governments and relevant departments at various levels to adopt a positive attitude using the spirit of being highly responsible to the state and the people, and conscientiously and promptly handle them. The leading cadres of both parties to the dispute should take the interests of the whole into consideration, pay attention to unity, understand and accommodate each other and emphasize making self-criticism. If the leading cadres at various levels conscientiously deal with the disputes in the same manner as the principal leading comrades of Jiangyong County in Lingling Prefecture, it will be possible to greatly reduce various disputes involving many people throughout the province. Even if they do occur, it is possible to promptly and appropriately deal with them so as to reduce losses to the minimum. In this way we can be regarded as having done a good deed for the people.

LI XUEZHI SPEAKS AT NINGXIA ACTIVISTS CONGRESS

HK090200 Yingchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 19 Jun 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts of speech by regional CCP committee First Secretary Li Xuezhi at opening of regional congress of progressive collectives and activists in building socialist spiritual civilization: "Strive To Cultivate New Socialist People With Ideals, Morals, Culture and Discipline"]

[Text] Comrades:

The Ningxia Hui Autonomous Regional Congress of progressive collectives and activists in building socialist spiritual civilization has solemnly opened today. This is the first time we have convened such a congress in our region. Holding this congress well will produce a positive impact in cultivating people of various nationalities in our region to be new people with ideals, morals, culture and discipline and in promoting the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization in our region.

I. Satisfactory Results Have Been Achieved in Building Socialist Material and Spiritual Civilization in the Region

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee has redefined for us the Marxist ideological, political and organizational lines and resolutely made a strategic decision of shifting the work focus to socialist modernization. After that, the CCP Central Committee formulated a series of important guiding principles and strategic decision on upholding the four basic principles, strengthening the building of the party, improving the party work style, strengthening ideological and political work and effectively building socialist spiritual civilization. Over the past 3 years, party organizations at all levels in our region have led the broad masses of cadres and masses to resolutely implement the line and a series of guiding principles and policies adopted by the CCP Central Committee and to do a great deal of work and exert strenuous efforts and have achieved encouraging results in building material and spiritual civilization.

With regard to economic construction, we have achieved the most remarkable results in agriculture. For the last 3 years running, we have reaped a rich harvest of grain. The total agricultural output value has steadily increased and peasants' incomes have been increasing year by year. The highest level in history was attained last year in these three respects. I think that I should point out two things here: Why was agriculture able to improve so rapidly? Increasing purchase prices for agricultural products and making more investment in agriculture are reasons contributing to the improvement of agriculture. However, the most important and fundamental reason is that we have established various production responsibility system in our region according to the instructions issued by the CCP Central Committee. Establishing various responsibility systems in production was an important reform in the party's efforts to lead agriculture. Under the prerequisite of socialist public ownership of the agricultural basic means of production (land, large agricultural means of production, production facilities and various common accumulations and so forth), we have abandoned the erroneous actions of sharing out of the big pot — where it made no difference whether one worked well or ineffectively. In so doing, we have aroused the peasants' enthusiasm and zeal for production. The responsibility system in agricultural production has manifested its exuberant vitality and will continue to play its tremendous role. The second reason is that after the readjustment of the inner structure of the agriculture in our region and gradual coordination, we have embarked on the path of fully promoting the development of farming, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery and developing the diversified economy. Although it is only a beginning, it is a matter of profound significance. In these few years, our region encountered enormous difficulties in industrial production.

However, thanks to the support of the central authorities and the efforts exerted by various quarters, we have initially succeeded in readjusting the service orientation of heavy industry and developing light industry. The situation of our industrial production took a favorable turn as of May last year and began to pick up as of September last year. From last January to May this year, our total industrial output value was 12.7 percent higher than the same period last year. Over the past few years, we have considerably reduced the scale of capital construction, adjusted investment orientation and achieved better results in investment. This is also the case with our financial and trade work. On the basis of developing production, the living standard of the people in urban and rural areas has improved to varying degrees.

There is a new development in education, science, culture, art, public health and physical culture and sports in our region. We have increased investment in them and strengthened our work. We have developed institutions of higher learning and technical secondary schools to a certain extent and reformed the structure of secondary school education. In the meantime, we have also attached importance to and strengthened education for minority nationalities. We have set up 72 middle and primary schools for the Hui nationality throughout the region. In recent years, about 19,000 staff members and workers have attended various kinds of sparetime schools and several thousand people have attended courses provided by the television university. Our scientific and technical ranks have been growing continuously and our science and technology have been further integrated with economic construction. We have achieved some results in scientific research. Some of these results have been of advanced domestic level and have been popularized and applied to production. Our literature and art have also considerably developed. Since the third plenary session, more than 20 literary and art works created by our region have won prizes awarded in national comparisons and appraisals of literary and art work. At present, there are 24 professional theater troupes and more than 1,100 film projection units throughout the region and most of our municipalities and counties have set up cultural halls. There are 81 staff members' clubs and cultural halls, 343 libraries (or reading rooms) and 66 sparetime literary and art organizations in factories, mines and enterprises throughout the region. About half of our communes have set up cultural centers and even some production brigades have their own cultural rooms. Our public health departments have done a lot in enhancing the quality of medical service, preventing and curing diseases and improving the general level of the people's health. The incidence of some infectious diseases and endemic diseases has dropped to varying degrees. We have achieved better success in physical culture and sports.

In recent years, we have also done a lot and achieved fairly good results in the work of strengthening the party's ideological and organizational construction and promoting ideological and political education as well as in discipline inspection and legal system work. Last year, we spent 6 months on propagating the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" adopted by the 6th plenary session of the 11th CCP Central Committee to unify our ideological understanding. This is an important aspect of the building of our socialist spiritual civilization and a guarantee for the promotion of the socialist modernization in our region. Since the 3d plenary session, according to the instructions issued by the CCP Central Committee, party organizations at all levels in our region have carried out readjustment, filling out and consolidation. The lax and weak leadership in some units has been markedly improved. We have done a fairly good job in making cadre ranks at all levels revolutionized, younger, more educated and professional. Party organizations at all levels have paid attention to strengthening political and ideological education for staff members and the masses and to generally providing party members with education on upholding the party line and the four basic principles and on party spirit, regulations and discipline.

They have also enforced party discipline, corrected party work style and severely handled cases of seriously violating discipline. Thus, the work style of our party has improved and its prestige has been enhanced. Various localities have strengthened education on democracy and the legal system, amplified judicial and public security organs, carried out the activities of straightening out and bringing under control social order in the urban and rural areas and severely and promptly dealt blows at those criminal elements who seriously violated social order. Our present social order is better than that in the past. Since last year, various localities and units have conscientiously carried out the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" and regarded them as an important component part of building socialist spiritual civilization and provided the broad masses of people, youngsters in particular, with education on communist ideology and moral character. Last March, the broad masses of people throughout the region answered the call of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council to actively take part in the activities of "all-people decorum and courtesy month," made a breakthrough in improving environmental sanitation and devoted their major efforts to solving the problem of "dirtiness, chaos, disorder and ineffectiveness." They set to work together and did their work truly and effectively and have achieved outstanding results. What is particularly gratifying is that we have built closer relations between the party and the masses, between cadres and the masses, between the army and the people and between various nationalities. People's mental outlook has markedly changed and good personalities and good deeds such as not keeping money which is found, helping the poor to overcome difficulties, finding it a pleasure to help others and doing boldly what is righteous have abundantly come to the fore. CYL members and youngsters in a number of localities and units have promoted the activities of learning from Lei Feng, helping others and establishing service teams. They are praised by the people. According to incomplete statistics, various fields in various localities have chosen through public appraisal more than 10,000 shock workers of the new Long March, 8 March Red-Banner pacesetters, outstanding CYL members and Communist Party members, advanced producers (workers), three-good students, red-flower youngsters, exemplary persons in supporting the army (or cherishing the people) and so forth. This is a vivid sign that our region has scored encouraging success in building socialist spiritual civilization. Through the activities of the "all-people decorum and courtesy month," people have more faith and determination in improving party work style, the general mood of society and social order. Such tremendous spiritual force will exert profound influence on socialist construction in our region.

Here, I would like to talk about the problem of dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. In a period of more than 5 months from the beginning of this year to the present, we have achieved initial success in the struggle between the corrosion of capitalism and the socialist efforts to resist this corrosion. Due to the deterrent force of law and under the influence of party policy, 104 criminal elements and those who had serious economic problems have reported themselves to the police, confessed their crimes and returned loot and booty amounting to 290,000 yuan. The struggle is gradually developing in depth.

The practice of our work over the past 3 years has proved that our CCP Central Committee is correct and a series of lines, guiding principles and policies formulated by the CCP Central Committee and the guiding ideology of simultaneously grasping the building of material and spiritual civilization put forth by the CCP Central Committee is completely correct and that the people of various nationalities in our region have high aspiration. Every success scored in various fields of our region results from the correct leadership of the CCP Central Committee and common efforts and hard struggles of the people of various nationalities, including all comrades present.

II. We Should Fully Realize the Great Significance of Building Socialist Spiritual Civilization

The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee pointed out: "The objective of our party's struggle in the new historical period is to turn China step by step into a powerful socialist country with modern agriculture, industry, national defense and science and technology and with a high level of democracy and culture." Leading comrades of the CCP Central Committee have repeatedly reminded us that we should not forget the two great objectives of our struggle: The building of high levels of material civilization and spiritual civilization. These are the two great strategic tasks in the new historical period. We will spend 20 years on the four modernization and also spend another 20 year stage on the building of spiritual civilization.

Leading comrades of the central authorities have repeatedly talked about the contents of spiritual civilization. The scope of spiritual civilization is very wide and its contents should include the following two aspects: First, in the scale and level of development of education, science, culture, art, public health, physical culture and sports. This shows whether a society is civilized and the level of civilization. All societies should develop spiritual civilization in this respect. The socialist system has demanded that we develop spiritual civilization in this respect more widely and rapidly. Second, in the orientation and level of development of the social political ideology and ethics. This has been determined by the nature of the social system and also strongly reacts to the nature of the social system. Due to complicated historical and practical reasons, we should particularly grasp the work of ideology and morality.

With regard to the objective of building socialist spiritual civilization, Comrade Deng Xiaoping has recently summarized it as follows: We should have ideals, morals, culture and discipline. In other words, we should train people of various nationalities throughout the country to be people with ideals, morals, culture and discipline. Here, I would like to talk about my preliminary understanding of the "four haves" proposed by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. I can't guarantee that my view is perfectly correct and it is only for your reference. Ideals mean communist ideals. In other words, we should firmly believe that socialist system will be gradually improved and that the bright communist society will be gradually realized with the development and maturity of the socialist society. We should exert earnest and unswerving efforts to realize our ideals. We should adopt correct attitudes toward the difficulties and seamy side in actual life. We should neither cherish illusion nor take a pessimistic view. Morals mean communist morals. In other words, we should establish comradely relations in the people's social life and contacts characterized by mutual respect, mutual concern, unity, mutual help and close cooperation, do our work well, serve the people, be responsible to the people, conscientiously keep our words and deeds within the norms and standard generally acknowledged by the society and undertake our own responsibilities and obligations. Culture means that we should acquire knowledge -- the knowledge of languages, science and other things and the capability needed by the four modernizations. Discipline means that we should consciously foster the spirit of observing the law and a high level of sense of organization and discipline and consciously abide by political discipline, organizational regulations and labor discipline and maintain normal order in work, society and teaching. This is a strategic objective and a strenuous task, all comrades and citizens should make great efforts to attain such an objective.

Material civilization and spiritual civilization can never be separated from each other. They are interdependent and promote each other. Material civilization is the basis of spiritual civilization and decisively acts on it. The central task of building socialism is to effectively promote the building of socialist material civilization. The promotion of economic construction, the further development of socialist productive forces, the further increase of social material wealth and the improvement of people's livelihood will promote and ensure constant development and improvement of the mental attitude and the state of mind of the masses of people in our country. There is no doubt about that. Unlike Lin Biao and the "gang of four," we should never set the role of spirit against material production nor absurdly exaggerate the role of spirit.

However, we should not neglect the role and influence of spiritual civilization over material civilization. The development of spiritual civilization will greatly promote the development of material civilization and will ensure the correct orientation of the building of material civilization. Only by building our spiritual civilization effectively can we train our people to be people of ideals, morals, culture and discipline. In so doing, our socialist four modernizations will be fully guaranteed.

However, do our comrades have a clear understanding of the great significance of the building of socialist spiritual civilization? The answer is no. Judging from the practical reality in our region, we know that some comrades have muddled ideas and erroneous views. These should be clarified through study and discussions.

Some comrades wrongly think that economic construction is our central task and we have encountered a great number of problems in production so how do we have time to carry out the building of spiritual civilization? They also think that spiritual civilization is the affair of the political, propaganda and educational departments and that they have nothing to do with it. They actually set the two civilizations against each other or separate them from each other. Actually, we are all clear that we rely on people to carry out economic construction and some other work. People's mental outlook and their state of minds have a direct bearing on the success of failure of our production, construction and work. Without carrying out ideological and political work and raising people's socialist consciousness, can we do well in our production, construction and work? Of course, it takes time and energy to carry out the building of spiritual civilization and ideological as well as political work. However, as long as we adopt flexible and varied forms and make proper arrangements around the central task of economic construction, our economic construction will not be affected. On the contrary, this will promote and give impetus to the smooth progress of the building of material civilization.

Some comrades have wrongly come to the conclusion that because some capitalist countries are economically more advanced than our country and their science and technology are more advanced than ours, our spiritual civilization is inferior to the spiritual civilization of capitalism. Such a view is obviously wrong. This is because these comrades have forgotten the essential differences between socialist spiritual civilization and capitalist spiritual civilization. We should admit that with regard to the level of education and science -- the contents of the first aspect of spiritual civilization -- we are inferior to developed capitalist countries. However, judging from the orientation of development and level of social political thought and moral principles which represent the essence of spiritual civilization, our socialist spiritual civilization is infinitely better than capitalist spiritual civilization. We all know that capitalism is a social system characterized by exploitation and oppression of man by man and that moral concepts of the bourgeoisie are the undisguised relationship of interest and money. The moral standard of capitalism is "Each one for himself and God for all." In capitalist countries, decadent social phenomenon such as homicide, robbery, fraud, drug taking, prostitution and so forth can be found everywhere. People lack mental ballast and are dispirited. Even government officials of some capitalist countries cannot but admit this. Some of them have said: "Ours is a welfare state and we lack nothing except a philosophy which can heal people's souls."

Some people think that ours is an economically backward country which is poor in material conditions and that the development of our education, sciences and culture are greatly limited. Therefore, they lack confidence in whether we can do well in building socialist spiritual civilization. Their view is, of course, wrong. We maintain that the development of spiritual civilization is based on the development of material civilization. However, spiritual civilization has its own relatively independent character and law of development. Let us put aside this theoretical issue for the time being. Our modern revolutionary history can explain everything. During the period of the war of resistance against Japan, the material conditions in Yanan were poor. However, this gave rise to the "spirit of Yanan." Our cadres and the broad masses of people and their own lofty political ideals, lofty moral values, revolutionary spirit of struggling hard and revolutionary friendly feelings of fraternal unity. They were highly praised by people of the whole country and foreign friendly personages. After nationwide liberation, material conditions in our country were comparatively poor during the 1950 and early 1960's. However, at that time people's ideological consciousness, mental outlook, morality and social practices were very good. This fully shows even under fairly poor and backward material, economic and cultural conditions, people may have good social political ideology and morality. Our present material and economic conditions are infinitely better than those days and we should be more confident that we will effectively build our socialist spiritual civilization.

At present, we have gradually shifted our work focus to economic construction. It is completely right for us to do so. However, when we are concentrating our energies and adopting down-to-earth attitudes to firmly grasp economic work, we should realize that due to the sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" and others, there are still problems in our political ideology and moral concept and so forth. They are conspicuously facing us. It is our pressing task to build socialist spiritual civilization. Since the third plenary session, although we have done a lot, our party work style, general mood of the society and social order have not yet completely improved. To ensure the smooth progress of economic construction and the healthy development of our socialist material civilization along the correct orientation, we should truly grasp the building of socialist spiritual civilization and regard it as our urgent task. Of course, we are now stressing socialist spiritual civilization. But this does not mean that the building of socialist material civilization is no longer important and that our work focus has changed again. Building socialist material civilization has been regarded as our party's central task. We will persist in doing so till the end of this century as long as large-scale war does not break out. There is no doubt about that. Now what we should do is to grasp the building of the two civilizations simultaneously so that they will promote and give impetus to each other and develop together.

III. We Should Further Mobilize the Masses To Promote the Building of Socialist Spiritual Civilization in Our Region

To promote the building of socialist spiritual civilization in our region and train people with ideals, morals, culture and discipline, we should do the following work well:

1. We should conscientiously consolidate the party ranks, correct the party work style, and strengthen and improve the party leadership.

The ideological level and work style of our party have a direct bearing on ideology and moral and social practices and the success or failure of the building of the two civilizations and even on the destiny and future of our party and country. Therefore, raising the party's ideological level and completely improving its work style is the key to the success of our socialist spiritual civilizaton. Here, I am not going to talk about the work of our party's building. I only wish to point out the following:

First, we should provide cadres and party members with systematic education on Marxist theories. Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought is the theoretical basis guiding our ideology and actions, and the guide for our party in formulating its guiding principles and policies and an ideological weapon which all cadres and party members should master. However, some comrades think that Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought has become obsolete. Such a view is obviously wrong. In the past, we scored success in our revolution and construction because we persisted in following Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and we suffered setbacks and made mistakes in our work because we violated the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Since the third plenary session, the CCP Central Committee has brought order out of chaos and reaffirmed the Marxist ideological, political and organizational line. Under the guidance of the party line, we have scored brilliant success in various work. In particular, since our country has entered the new period of socialist modernization, we have been confronted with many new conditions and questions which should be studied and answered in accordance with the Marxist theories. It is a pressing task for us to use the new practical theories and conclusions to enrich and develop Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. How can we say that it has become obsolete? We need it more imperatively. It is our urgent task to organize cadres and party members to systematically study it.

Second, we should provide party members with education in party spirit, work style and discipline so that all of our party members will seriously observe the party's constitution and its principle of political life. We should extensively cite good party organizations and outstanding party members and severely criticize bad people, bad deeds and bad behavior. We should severely punish a handful of party members who abuse their power for private interests, violate the law and discipline and harm the party's prestige. We should on no account yield to them.

Third, we should provide party members and cadres with education on combating capitalist ideological corrosion and attaining communist purity. Dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is one of the most practical and effective measures for party consolidation. While carrying out this struggle, we should organize people to study again the relevant expositions of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong. We should solemnly and resolutely maintain the nature of our party as the vanguard of the working class and keep the purity of Communist Party members. None of the party members is allowed to lower their ideological level and political consciousness and degenerate. All party members should faithfully fulfill the solemn oath they took when they were admitted to the party and bear in mind that the party's basic principle is to serve the people wholeheartedly and that the realization of the lofty ideal of communism is our party's final objective. They should strive for communism all their lives.

2. We should unswervingly carry out patriotic, collective and communist ideological education and profoundly and persistently promote the activities of "five stresses and four beauties."

First, patriotic education. Today, we are advocating patriotism. In other words, we should love our socialist motherland and socialist system. We should educate the masses, youngsters in particular, so that they will intrinsically differentiate between the frenzied sabotage of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the "10 chaotic years" and the shortcomings and mistakes in our past work. We should on no account attribute these defects to the socialist system itself. We should be good at analyzing the nature of the capitalist system and truly realizing the incomparable superiority and the great vitality of the socialist system and the prospects and hope of our great motherland. We should resolutely oppose the shameful ideas and conduct of worshipping and having blind faith in things foreign, servile dependence on foreigners and losing personality. We should love the motherland. At the same time, we should also love Ningxia and our work. We should do our bit in contributing to our socialist motherland by the practical act of carrying out production and work effectively.

Second, we should provide people with education on collectivism. Collectivism is an ideological system based on the socialist system of public ownership and a converging manifestation of the communist ideology. We should advocate the ideas of selflessness, putting others before oneself and correctly handling the relations between the state, the collective and the individual. We should truly subordinate individual interests to collective interests, local interests to overall interests and immediate interests to long-term interests. We should unite as one and closely cooperate with each other in our labor, work and life and rely on collective wisdom and strength to overcome all difficulties on our road of advance.

Third, we should provide people with education on being the masters of their own affairs. Since our country is still poor, we should rely on ourselves to create and strive for the bright future of socialism and a happy life. This requires that we adopt an attitude of being the masters of our own affairs in carrying out our labor and work and that we carry forward the revolutionary spirit of hard struggle and self-reliance. We should give play to our initiative, enthusiasm and creativity. We should oppose and overcome the hired-hand mentality and other erroneous ideas and acts such as working purely for remuneration, putting profit-making first, gaining extra advantage from the state by unfair means and battening on the state, and so forth.

Fourth, we should provide people with education on the revolutionary tradition and work style. We should carry forward our communist ideals which we have fostered in the protracted revolutionary struggle, the conviction that the revolution will certainly win, the spirit of wholeheartedly serving the people, staunch discipline, the party's three important styles of work and a series of excellent traditions and work styles.

Fifth, we should provide people with education on communist morality. While handling various relations among the people, we should greatly advocate the practice of taking the interests of the whole into consideration, attaching importance to principle, mutual respect, unity, mutual aid, impartiality, trustworthiness, serving the people and being responsible for them. Through education on social morality, professional morality, marriage and family morality, and so forth, we should encourage people to conscientiously act in accordance with the generally recognized standards and criteria which they have established in their social public life and integrate their rights and duties.

While carrying out education on patriotism, collectivism and communist ideology and morality, we should stick to the principle of proceeding from reality and following in order and advancing step by step. We should do so in a manner suitable to local conditions, time and particular individuals. At present, we should concentrate our efforts on carrying out education among workers on the historical mission and fine tradition of the working class so that they will strengthen their sense of being the masters of their own affairs, bring their vanguard role into full play in the building of the two civilizations and do their best to overcome all sorts of backward ideology which is not worthy of the advanced nature of the working class. We should carry out education among peasants on "one uphold, two no-changes and three integrations" and encourage them to love the country and the collective, put public interest before self-interest, get rich through labor and help the poor and peasant households with material difficulties. We should devote our main efforts to educating our youngsters so that they will love the motherland, the party and socialism. We should also help them foster a correct outlook on life and world outlook. We should also strengthen our education for women so that they will have ideals, high aspirations and self-confidence and strive for the communist cause and the emancipation of women. By providing them with more education, we should also help them "surmount three passes" (correcting handling of love affairs, marriage affairs and the problems of their families and children.)

All trades and services should respectively formulate and amplify their civilized pledge and rules and regulations to be observed by staff members, workers, students and villagers in light of their education on communist ideology, morality and their particular conditions. We should inspect diligently the results of observing these rules and regulations and persist in doing so for a long time. In so doing, people will gradually and conscientiously form good habits and promote healthy prevailing customs.

We should continue to be persistent in carrying out the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" in a thoroughgoing way. By carrying out these activities, we use simple and easy language of the masses to integrate the basic tasks of the communists to reform society and transform social traditions and the settlement of the present practical problems in our country's social life and general mood of the society. This is a new creation of the party's mass ideological and political work under the present specific conditions. It has enabled us to devise good methods for educating, bringing up and training in practice socialist people of the new generation. The activities of "five stresses and four beauties" are closely connected with and cannot be separated from the realization of the long-term historical task of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. During the second half of this year, we should further carry out on a grand scale some activities with our main efforts devoted to the settlement of the problems of "dirt, chaos and low efficiency." We should persist in carrying out the activities of youth service teams, groups of learning from Lei Feng, street cleaning by the Young Pioneers, voluntary labor, assisting the poor and helping people in difficulty, respecting the old and taking good care of the young and "five-good families," and so forth. We should avoid acting in the manner of a passing wind and paying attention to formality alone. We should constantly fill these activities with new content and enhance their quality. It all depends on people's efforts to carry out effectively the activities of "five stresses and four beauties." Conscientiousness and persistency are the key to the success of these activities. We should gradually make it our system to constantly carry out these activities.

3. We should profoundly carry out struggles to oppose capitalist ideological corrosion and dealing blows at criminal activities in the economic field.

The struggle of dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is a matter of primary importance in the building of socialist spiritual civilization. We should fully realize the seriousness, harm and danger of the criminal activities in the economic field and the corrosion of the capitalist ideology. We should realize the profound significance of this struggle from the high place of the life and death of our party and the prosperity and decline of our country. We should continue to study the relevant documents issued by the central authorities and grasp their spirit, enhance our understanding, free our minds of apprehensions, remove interference and clear away obstructions. We should stick to the practice of seeking truth from facts and laying stress on the weight of evidence and not taking confessions on trust. As long as leaders and the masses can unify their ideological understanding on the basis of the "resolution," unify their thinking and actions, unite as one and take part in this struggle with full confidence, all criminal elements in the economic field who severely violate the law will have no place to hide and we will certainly be victorious in our struggle. In light of the progress of the struggle, we should adopt various means and use both positive and negative models to provide party members, cadres and the masses with ideological education so that they will raise their socialist consciousness, enhance their powers of discernment, resist and oppose the influence and corrosion of bourgeois decadent ideology, feudal ideological remnants and other decaying and rotten ideology. We should fully realize the harm and seriousness of the capitalist ideology and its way of life.

We should continue to firmly grasp the work of banning and confiscating reactionary and obscene video tapes, audio tapes, books, journals and propaganda materials. While fighting against the corrosion of capitalist ideology, we should continue to oppose evil trends, such as feudal superstition, gambling and arranged and mercenary marriages and criminal activities of abducting women. We should resolutely ban witches and sorcerers and occupy the ideological and cultural front by carrying out recreational and sports activities which are beneficial to the bodies and minds of the masses.

4. We should strengthen the legal system and straighten out social order.

It is also an important task of spiritual civilization to punish criminal elements according to law so as to maintain normal social order and political stability and unity. We should formulate necessary administrative rules and regulations so that people will act according to law and regulations. We should bring into full play the role of neighborhood committees, public security groups and people's mediatory committees in towns and cities. We should resolutely deal blows at criminals who jeopardize social morality, undermine social order, disturb public security and adversely affect stability and unity according to law.

5. We should strengthen nationality unity and further develop socialist relations among nationalities.

To do well in providing people with education on nationality unity is an important part of the building of socialist spiritual civilization in our region. Ours is a Hui autonomous region. Of the 3.8 million population of the whole region, 1/3 are of Hui nationality and 2/3 are of Han nationality. As far as population is concerned, the Han nationality composes the majority. With regard to the main nationality, in this national autonomous region, the Hui nationality is the main nationality. We should not pay too much attention to the majority at the expense of the main nationality in our region or vice versa. Of course, we should also pay attention to the 4,000-strong population of other nationalities, who account for 0.1 percent of the total population of the region. It is wrong to neglect them. Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: The Han nationality cannot be separated from other minority nationalities and vice versa. They cannot be separated from each other. This is a very important view. We should stick to the principle of nationality equality and strengthen nationality unity. People of various nationalities should respect, trust, support and help each other. Only thus can we promote the four modernizations in our region. Ours is one of the five autonomous regions of the whole country. To do the work in our region well is a matter of vital significance to consolidating the unification of our motherland and the realization of the four modernizations. We should persist in providing people with reeducation on the policy toward minority nationalities and further develop socialist nationality relations of equality, unity and mutual aid.

To promote nationality unity, we should correctly handle the problem of religion. Our constitution has explicitly stipulated freedom of religious belief. This is also our party's consistent policy. To put it briefly, we should respect the masses' freedom of religious belief and protect their normal religious activities. However, we never allow people to use religion to carry out propaganda for opposing Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. We never allow religion to interfere in the state administration, judicature, school education and public education of the society. The masses enjoy freedom to believe in religion and freedom not to believe in religion. Even in the same religion, people also enjoy the freedom to believe in this or that religious sect. Those who did not believe in religion may now enjoy freedom to believe in religion and those who believed in religion may also enjoy freedom not to believe in any religion now. All of us should respect each other, strengthen unity and carry out the four modernizations with one heart and one mind.

6. We should extensively develop education, science, culture, art, public health, physical culture and sports in our region.

Education, science, culture, public health, and so on, in our region are still backward compared with other fraternal provinces and regions. This has already severely hampered the development of our material and spiritual civilization. Therefore, we should resolve to develop them by every possible means. The idea of paying more attention to industrial and agricultural production than to education and cultural establishments or neglecting education and cultural establishments during the period of economic readjustment is devoid of foresight and wrong. Proceeding from reality, we should seek truth from facts and employ various methods. To develop education and cultural establishments, we should walk on two legs and rely on the efforts of the state, the collective and the individuals. Of course, we should act according to our capability and pay attention not to excessively increase the burdens of the masses. After the implementation of various responsibility systems in rural areas, some new situations and problems have occurred in culture, education, popularization of science and cooperative medical service. Students' school enrollment and attendance rates have dropped and the number of illiterate persons has increased. It is difficult to obtain medical attention and broadcasting services have stopped. Complaints about difficulties in reading newspapers (?have reached) us. We should study these problems effectively and solve them as quickly as possible.

Here, I would like to particularly emphasize the problem of planned parenthood. Planned parenthood is a matter of great importance to the interests of the people and future of our nation. It is also an important aspect in changing prevailing habits and customs and building socialist spiritual civilization. Over the past few years, our region has achieved good results in planned parenthood work. However, if we take the overall situation of the whole country into consideration, we realize that the natural population growth rate in our region is still the highest and a pattern of further increases exists. We should understand the severity of this problem. During the period shortly after liberation, the population of Ningxia was only 1.2 million, but now our population has increased to 3.8 million. By the end of this century, it is expected that our population will reach 5.5 million. The blind growth of population will inevitably hinder the progress of the four modernizations. We should truly attach importance to the work of planned parenthood, carry out propaganda and education in a deep-going way and implement the party's policy on planned parenthood. Religion is not allowed to interfere in marriage affairs. Marriage without registration and under the legal age is unlawful. We should pay attention to the new situation and new problems arising in planned parenthood after the implementation of various responsibility systems in the rural areas. We should support the masses of minority nationalities who demand that planned parenthood be followed.

The key to promoting socialist spiritual civilization lies in the party's leadership. Party organizations at all levels, basic-level party organizations in particular, should regard the building of socialist spiritual civilization as their day-to-day work. They should go deep into the realities of life and the masses, carry out investigations, diligently inspect the results of their work, expeditiously sum up experiences, do a solid job and avoid formalist methods and doing things perfunctorily so as to achieve more marked results. We should bring the role of trade unions, CYL organization and women's associations into full play in the building of spiritual civilization. Party organizations at all levels should enhance their political sense of responsibility and take a clear-cut stand to support advanced figures and extensively propagate their advanced ideology and experience. They should forcefully criticize erroneous ideas and acts which satirize, isolate, make things difficult for and attack advanced units or individuals. Those who commit serious mistakes in this respect should be severely punished.

We should whip up public opinion for establishing a general mood in society of regarding the act of becoming and learning from the advanced as glorious. Comrades, you are the advanced members in the building of socialist spiritual civilization in our region and you have reflected the spirit of our times and are models of people of various nationalities in our region. The regional CCP committee and people's government sincerely hope that you will consolidate and carry forward your present achievements, persist in applying the law that "one divides into two," be more modest and prudent, study hard, maintain close link with the masses, advance together with the masses and do your best to make greater contributions to the building of the two civilizations in our region.

It is a great historical task entrusted to us by the new socialist era to build a high level of material and spiritual civilization. Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that material can be turned into spirit and vice versa. We should respond to the call of the CCP Central Committee to lay a solid foundation for the development of spiritual civilization with our success in material civilization so as to promote rapid progress in the building of material civilization. Let us unite as one and train people of various nationalities in our region to be new socialist people with ideals, morals, culture and discipline. Let us strive to build Ningxia into an autonomous region of fraternal unity, prosperity and abundance!

COMMENT ON U.S. POLICY ON ARMS SALES TO TAIWAN

OW110104 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 10 Jul 82

[Text] Reports from Washington say President Reagan will be asked by the State Department to review the arms sales to the Republic of China and possibly to eliminate them entirely. This proposal is intended to appease the Chinese Communists who have been insisting that this is a concomitance of the U.S.-Red Chinese exchange of diplomatic recognition. The United States made no such agreement. When President Carter exchanged the recognition with the Chinese Communists, he told them that the United States intended to preserve and protect the free Chinese. He did not hand Taiwan over to the communists. He merely followed Richard Nixon in acknowledging that the communists claim title to Taiwan. He did not put the U.S. stamp of approval on this claim. When the Congress of the United States considered enabling legislation, it decided that free China should have the necessary defensive weapons to protect itself. This was written into the Taiwan Relations Act and signed by President Carter. It is the law of the United States and superior to the Shanghai Communique with Richard Nixon and the recognition agreement with Jimmy Carter.

The Taiwan Relations Act provides that the United States will supply the defensive weapons and regard aggression against the island as a breach of the Asian peace. Any agreement not to give weapons to the Republic of China would be a violation of the Taiwan Relations Act. So the rumored revision of the Shanghai Communique and elimination of U.S. weapons sales to the Republic of China will be a violation of American law.

Two points are involved: First, any such change will require the approval of President Ronald Reagan. Mr Reagan has always been a friend of free China. When President Carter derecognized the Republic of China, Mr Reagan said he had made a serious mistake and mistreated an old and loyal friend. During the 1980 election campaign, Mr Reagan said he hoped to upgrade the relations between the United States and the Republic of China. Since the election, he has expressed a renewed allegiance to the Taiwan Relations Act. Throughout a long career in politics, Mr Reagan has always kept his word. He is an honorable man; he has never liked the communists or their performance. Since becoming President, he has renewed his anticommunist stand. Communism, he has said, is doomed by failure to perform. Nikita Khrushchev once said that communism would bury capitalism. Ronald Reagan has said many times that capitalism will bury communism. All the evidence is in his favor. It is inconceivable that President Reagan would become a party to the destruction of freedom in the Republic of China and the communization of Taiwan. That would be a contradiction of everything he has always stood for. Aside from his anticommunism, Ronald Reagan is an idealist. He knows the American history and the long record of the U.S. support of freedom and democracy. To think that President Reagan could support the Chinese Communists against the Republic of China is to presume that he would opt for evil over good and to reverse the course of American history. He is not going to do anything like that and there is no realistic reason he should.

The Chinese Communists are pulling the wool over American eyes, or trying to. They have no card to play against the Soviet Union. There is nothing that they can do to hurt the United States regardless of what Americans do to help the Republic of China. Red China is a failure. In 32 years, it has brought the people of the Chinese mainland only agony and tyranny. The Chinese Communists cannot provide a stable and prosperous society of their own to say nothing of providing an obstacle to Soviet aggression and hegemonistic intentions. It is correct to say that Red China needs the United States. That is the reason for table tennis diplomacy and the subsequent acceptance of normalized relations. It is wrong to say that the United States needs the Chinese Communists. For what? Red China cannot hold its own militarily against either Vietnam or the Republic of China. Of what use is it against the might of the Soviet Union? President Reagan has every reason to tell the Chinese Communists to buzz off. The United States doesn't need them.

UN DISARMAMENT SESSION ENDS, VIEWED AS FAILURE

PRC Envoy's Address

[Text] United Nations, July 10 (XINHUA) -- The states possessing the largest arsenals were accused today of raising extraneous issues to obstruct the reaching of a necessary common agreement on disarmament by Kang Maozhao, deputy leader of the Chinese Government delegation to the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament.

Addressing the closed meeting of the special session, Kang Maozhao said: "Though we have held many plenary and committee sessions, it is regrettable that we have failed to produce a minimum comprehensive disarmament program acceptable to all. We have even failed to reach a consensus in our review of the implementation of the final document of the first special session of disarmament."

He noted: "A clear trend has emerged in the course of the general debate and extensive consultations in the working groups during the current session, and that is, an increasing number of countries have underscored more than ever before the point that states possessing the largest military arsenals bear a special responsibility for disarmament and should assume an obligation to take the lead in substantially reducing their armaments. Contrary to this, however, one has seen that the states possessing the largest arsenals had resorted to every means in and outside the conference to dodge their responsibility and had raised extraneous issues to obstruct the reaching of a necessary common agreement."

"Some people are clearly engaged in an arms race of unprecedented proportions. Yet they try to convince us that this is necessary and justified. Some people are extremely sensitive to words like aggression, intervention and occupation, and would not like any reference to them in the document, notwithstanding their inability to deny their actual deeds. In order to cover up their misdeeds, they have even tried hard to skip certain points and wordings in the document which they had accepted in previous documents. This, therefore, is the underlying cause why disarmament could make no headway and the current session has failed to achieve any substantive result," he said.

"The outcome of the current session," he went on, "has once again proved that disarmament and international security are inseparable. Since the first special session on disarmament, the arms race has been intensified, the international situation has deteriorated and the danger of nuclear war has increased. Several wars of aggression by conventional arms have taken place. This change in the international situation certainly has an impact on and creates resistance to disarmament. In the past few years, we often heard the debate as to whether disarmament enhances international security or international security promotes disarmament, much like the debate of whether the chicken or the egg came first. It should be clear by now that progress can hardly be achieved in disarmament under the circumstances in which international security is constantly breached, and the hegemonists and aggressors refuse to renounce their designs."

He stated: "We are a nuclear state but we declared as far back as 18 years ago that China will never be the first to use nuclear weapons and will not use nuclear weapons against nonnuclear states under any circumstances. We hold that the states possessing the biggest nuclear arsenals should take the lead in reducing their nuclear weapons. We are ready to assume appropriate obligations together with other nuclear states through negotiations."

"China's intention and position regarding disarmament are consistent, irrespective of the results of the international disarmament conferences. Although the task of disarmament is an arduous one, we are willing to work unceasingly towards this end with other countries and people of the world," he added.

Review of Session

["Feature: New Developments in Disarmament" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] United Nations, July 10 (XINHUA) -- The second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament ended today after over a month's general debate and group discussions. The delegates of many countries told XINHUA that the current special session showed certain new developments in the width and depth of world disarmament as compared with the first special session. A prominent feature was the combination of demand for disarmament voiced by the great majority of small and medium-sized countries at the session with the large-scale mass movement against the arms race outside the United Nations which has exerted great pressure upon the two superpowers.

The over-three-week long general debate was addressed by delegates from 131 member nations including 19 heads of state or government and 54 vice-presidents, vice-premiers or ministers. In addition, representatives from 74 non-governmental international organizations spoke during the debate. The number of countries and representatives taking part in the general debate has by far surpassed that at the first special session. This indicates the great concern for disarmament shown by the countries the world over. Particularly noticeable is the fact that a great number of Third and Second World countries issued the common call for disarmament. They formed the overwhelming majority standing for arms control, placing the two superpowers in a more isolated position.

The emergence of such a situation is nothing accidental. In the four years between the two special sessions, the U.S.-Soviet contention had intensified, the world was in turmoil, crises arose and wars broke out. Immediately after the final document of the first special session on disarmament was signed, the Soviet-backed Vietnamese launched an armed aggression against Kampuchea in February 1978 and the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan one year later. During the last four years, Israel and the South African racist regime launched aggression on many occasions against the Arab countries and southern African nations. It was during the current special session that Israel committed a monstrous crime by its massive aggression against Lebanon.

Disarmament has made no headway. As special session President Ismail Kittani has said: "Not a single weapon has been destroyed over the past four years as a result of a disarmament agreement," and "it is a sorry record of failure." The total military spending of the world was 400 billion U.S. dollars in 1978 and went up drastically to 650 billion dollars in 1982. Today, the world possesses a destructive capacity equivalent to more than one million Hiroshima bombs.

A delegate from Western Europe told XINHUA that the contention and arms race between the superpowers constitutes a grave threat to world security. The great majority of Third World countries are the first to be affected, and the security of West European countries is also challenged. Although the West European countries differ much in their views on disarmament, they are working for a check on the arms race and to save peace.

Many people stressed the reduction of nuclear weapons but few people talked about the reduction of conventional weapons at the first U.N. special session on disarmament. The current special session was highlighted by the demand for a reduction of both nuclear and conventional weapons . Nuclear disarmament was, of course, the centre of attention at the current session. But more than half of the participants stood for the reduction of conventional weapons, stressing that the conventional war is a terrible reality. According to estimates, some ten million people have died of the 140 wars in the world since the end of World War II, and these wars were fought with conventional weapons. The Panamanian and Sri Lanka delegates shared the view that the Third World countries are the principal victims of the conventional arms race. In face of the threat of Soviet conventional weapons, West European nations called strongly for universal attention to the reduction of conventional weapons.

One third of the delegates urged the Soviet Union and the United States to be the first to reduce their armament, both nuclear and conventional. The Zimbabwean delegate stressed that the nuclear arms talks can be of real significance only when the two superpowers take the first steps. The Surinam delegate pointed out that the key figures for the disarmament are the two superpowers. Both Romania and Indonesia proposed that the United States and the Soviet Union first of all reduce 50 per cent of their armament, while Iraq and Madagascar proposed a one-third reduction of the two superpowers' armament as a first step for disarmament. Many Third World countries urged the nuclear powers to declare not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, conclude a convention of renunciation of the use of nuclear arms and guarantee not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear countries. In addition, the voice for the establishment of non-nuclear zones and peace zones was louder than ever before.

The struggle on disarmament in the U.N. headquarters was in concert with the mass demonstrations against nuclear weapons in New York streets, giving fresh impetus to the world movement for disarmament. The mass movement against nuclear weapons, starting from Western Europe and extending through Japan to the United States, reached its high tide at the present U.N. General Assembly session. Mass movements against nuclear weapons have surged ahead in New York streets, particularly around the U.N. headquarters. The largest one was the mass demonstration in the New York streets and the rally in the Central Park on June 12 with 750,000 people taking part. The big mass movement was strongly responded in the present special session. Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua in his speech in clear-cut terms expressed full understanding and sympathy for the movement. Uganda and Panama and other Third World countries highly evaluated this surging mass movement. They considered the rising movement against the arms race as an encouraging sign in the drive for armament reduction.

Confronted with the increasingly strong appeal for disarmament by most of the small and medium-sized countries attending the session and in face of the anti-nuclear movement outside the assembly hall, the two superpowers have been trying hard to snatch the banners of peace and disarmament as a garb to dress themselves up as "peace champion" or "standard-bearer of disarmament." Meanwhile, they attacked each other, each trying to throw the responsibility on to the other. While talking about maintaining military "balance", each, in fact, aims to weaken and destroy the superiority of the other and keep and develop its own superior force. This can be seen clearly from the Soviet proposal announced at the session of "not to use nuclear weapons first."

It was pointed out here that the Soviet proposal was announced under the circumstances in which the Soviet Union has a superiority in conventional weapons. This is obviously directed against the U.S. and Western Europe's nuclear deterrent strategy. For once this strategy of the West was destroyed, the West would be quite helpless in face of the superiority of Soviet conventional weapons.

The Soviet proposal not only caters to the anti-nuclear mass movement in Western Europe and the anti-arms expansion forces within both the U.S. and Europe, thus obstructing the United States from deploying nuclear weapons in Europe, it also drives a wedge into the relationship between the U.S. and Europe and brings pressure to bear on the U.S. leaders, thus guaranteeing the Soviet's own development of military superiority. The Soviet proposal was therefore regarded by the West as a mere propaganda stance. The United States, Britain, France and Japan all see the Soviet proposal as "empty promises," and they say they need "deeds" and ask the Soviet Union to show "secured guarantees."

The Soviet Union and the United States wrestled even harder against each other in group discussions for the drafting of documents during the latter part of the session. They opposed all that was not to their liking to be included in the documents of the session, and each tried to set a trap for the other, thus making the documents very slow in coming. As a result of the obstructions and sabotage by the two superpowers, no agreement was concluded at the session on the "comprehensive program of disarmament" which sets the objectives, principles and measures for the disarment.

SUSPENSION OF OPEC OIL MINISTERS MEETING NOTED

[Excerpts] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries yesterday suspended the 65th extraordinary meeting indefinitely with the 13 members unable to agree on how to reassign individual output quotas, according to reports from Vienna. This was announced in a communique after two days of talks in the Austrian capital to try to rescue a production-sharing agreement reached in March to defend a reference price of 34 dollars a barrel in the face of a glut.

The ministers failed to accommodate the insistence of Iran and Libya that they should be allowed higher individual quotas within the ceiling than assigned to them on March 20. Iran demanded a quota of three million barrels daily rather than the assigned quota of 1.2 million and actual current output just above two million. This would have required Saudi Arabia to make room for Tehran in the market. But the Saudis insisted that they could not bear the burden alone. Oil market analysts have said the price could come under new pressure in the event of OPEC's failure to rescue its production-sharing agreement.

'Abd al-Aziz at-Turki, Saudi deputy oil minister and head of the Saudi delegation, announced today that the kingdom, the world largest oil exporter, would no longer recognize the ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day and was no longer bound by the OPEC reference price of 34 dollars a barrel for Arabian light crude. He said his country would be free "to defend Arabian light as it feels necessary."

OPEC Secretary-General Marc Nguema of Gabon told a news conference yesterday that until OPEC reassembles next time, its four-man market monitoring committee would review the ceiling and the quotas.

TEXT OF ARTICLE ON U.S. POLICY TOWARD TAIWAN

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- The JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES in its No. 3 issue published on July 1 carried a signed article entitled "A Historical Test -- U.S. Policy Towards Taiwan Shortly Before and After the Birth of New China".

The article, written by Zi Zhongyun, reviews U.S. policy-makers' considerations over the question of Taiwan during the period between the end of 1948 and the first half of 1950 when the Chinese revolution was advancing victoriously. It says that "the fact that there still remains a 'Taiwan issue' in the relations between China and the United States is the consequence of the imperialistic expansionist policy on the part of the United States" which has been discredited. It points out, "how will Sino-U.S. relations develop in the future depends on whether U.S. policy-makers will awaken to the irresistible law by learning from historical experience, throw off their heavy burden and catch with the tide of the times." The article reads as follows:

Ever since the earth-shaking changes took place on the age-old territory of China, giving birth to a new People's Republic, U.S. policy towards China's Taiwan Province has become one of the major issues impeding the normalization of the Sino-U.S. relationship. With the advance of history and the change of the situation in the last 30 years, China and the United States have established diplomatic relations. However, the U.S. attitude towards Taiwan remains a hidden rock on the navigation route of Sino-U.S. relations which presents the ship with the danger of running aground at any time. Given these circumstances, a review of U.S. policy-makers' considerations over the question of Taiwan during the period between the end of 1948 and the first half of 1950 when the Chinese revolution was advancing victoriously may be of greater significance than just to provide lovers of history with some interesting materials.

A Brief Retrospect

After the opium war in 1840, the United States, under the slogan of "equal participation" in advantages, entered China following Britain's gunboats and progressively gained the same privileges in China as those enjoyed by other powers. After the conclusion of its first unequal treaty with China, the treaty of Wanghia (Wangxia), the United States began to covet Taiwan because the island had rich coal mines and its location on the route between California and Xiamen could serve as an ideal transfer station and supply depot for U.S. merchant ships. In the 1850's, some U.S. merchants and officials in the Far East urged the U.S. Government to seize Taiwan by means of forced purchase or military occupation, or to force the Qing government to open a number of trading ports (note 1) [see below at end of item] in Taiwan. But at that time the United States was too busy expanding and consolidating its spheres of influence on the American Continent to give much attention to the western Pacific. Nevertheless, it still engaged in illegal trade at a few ports on Taiwan island by taking advantage of the opportunity when the corrupt and decrepit Qing government was engaged in suppressing the peasant uprisings of the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom.

In 1858, British-French allied forces invaded China and forced the Qing government to conclude the Treaty of Tientsin (Tianjin). As a result, a few more trading ports were opened, including Taiwanfu (Tainan) and Danshui on Taiwan island. The United States again obtained its advantage through "equal participation."

After the Civil War, capitalism developed rapidly in the United States and its overseas expansion gained momentum. As Lenin pointed out, the last 30-plus years of the 19th century was a period of transition to the new era of imperialism. During this period, the imperialist powers were locked in a fierce struggle for domination of the Pacific islands. And the United States began to harbour a growing ambition for the Far Eastern region. The United States, Britain and Japan contended against and colluded with each other over Taiwan. During the 1860's, the U.S. Consul General Legendre in Xiamen, taking the opportunity of a U.S. merchant ship running aground near Taiwan, went deep into Taiwan island to carry out an investigation. He subsequently wrote a report urging the U.S. State Department to take action over Taiwan. U.S. Consul General Issac Allen in Xianggang (Hong Kong) frankly admitted that his main point of departure was the "acquisition of this great island by our government." (note 2) During the 1870's, Legendre assisted Japan in its attack against Taiwan and in invading and occupying the Ryukyu Islands. (note 3) Particularly after the outbreak of the unprecedented economic crises that swept Europe and America in the early 1890's, many wealthy U.S. merchants and politicians cried out in alarm: "New markets and new opportunities for investment must be found ... if the entire fabric of the present economic order is not to be shaken by a social revolution." (note 4) Since then, the United States started actively developing its naval forces and vigorously expanding into the western Pacific. It occupied Hawaii in 1893, unleashed the U.S.-Spanish war and captured the Philippines in 1898. It formally put forward the "open-door" policy towards China in 1899 and thus joined the other imperialist powers in the struggle for the division of China. But in 1895, Taiwan was exclusively occupied by Japan. As a result, U.S. and Japanese forces began to experience conflicting interests in the Pacific.

After the Pearl Harbor incident in 1941, Japan used Taiwan as a base from which to attack U.S. possessions in the Pacific. This posed a grave threat to the United States. It was against this background that the Cairo conference was held in 1943 among China, the United States and Britain. At the conference, the United States expressed the view that Taiwan belonged to China. The famous Cairo declaration jointly published by the three countries stipulated that Chinese territory, including northeast China, Taiwan and the Pengmu Islands under Japanese occupation, should be returned to China. The Roosevelt administration then intended to establish military bases in Taiwan after World War II. (note 5)

As the United States conceived it, most of China's territory, Taiwan included, which were under the Kuomintang rule, would come within the U.S. sphere of influence after the war, and China could be a "buffer zone" containing the Soviet Union and a potential market for U.S. commodities and capital as well as an important raw material base. Therefore, while it hoped that China would remain a superficially independent big nation with relative political and economic stability, it did not wish to see China truly independent and strong enough to free itself from dependence on the United States.

The U.S. proposal for returning Taiwan to China enabled it to assume the posture of respecting China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, deprive Japan of an important stronghold, thereby eliminating Japan's influence and make Taiwan serve U.S. strategic and economic interests. It was an idea that could kill three birds with one stone, why not go ahead with it?

However, China's realities were independent of U.S. will. After World War II, the people's revolution led by the Chinese Communist Party dashed the wishful calculations of the United States. Therefore, the aim of U.S. postwar policy towards China was to give all-out support to the Chiang Kai-shek regime and prevent the Chinese revolution from winning victory. For this the United States has paid a heavy price.

Failure Followed by New Efforts

After Japan's surrender, the United States first gave the Kuomintang great help in order that the latter "might bet to them (strategic points) ahead of the communists" (note 6) and "establish its authority over as wide areas of China as possible" (note 7). After sending General Marshall to carry out a biased "mediation," (note 8) it went all out to supply Chiang Kai-shek with money, guns and advisers to fight the civil war and spared no effort to prop up the Kuomintang rule. But as Dean Acheson put it: "Nothing that this country did or has done within the reasonable limits of its capabilities could have changed the result (of the Chinese civil war)." (note 9) From the latter half of 1948, the Chinese People's Liberation Army began a strategic counter offensive and the Kuomintang suffered one defeat after another. Early in 1949, Chiang Kai-shek performed an act of abdicating his seat to Li Zongren and at the same time transferred a huge quantity of gold, foreign exchange and munitions to Taiwan. He evidently intended to entrench himself in Taiwan and hold on with U.S. assistance, without giving up, of course, his slogan of "staging a comeback to the mainland."

At that point, those within the U.S. Government with a sense of reality noted that U.S. policy designed to prevent the Chinese Communist Party from winning victory was already bankrupt so far as China's mainland is concerned. Many a U.S. diplomat in China pointed out that the downfall of the Kuomintang was determined by its corrupt system and that if the United States continued its aid to Chiang Kai-shek, it would lose prestige and inevitably be accused of "strengthening a decadent feudalistic regime and thus meddling in China's internal affairs," (note 10) and of "prolonging the agony of the civil war and of pursuing imperialistic ends in defiance of the clearly expressed wishes of the Chinese people." (note 11) They vehemently stated that "it would be immoral to foist a rotten, unpopular government on the Chinese people; it would be worse than a crime, it would be stupid, to pursue our present aid policy." (note 12) Given these circumstances, the United States had no alternative but to start adopting a policy of "disengagement" from the civil war on China's mainland and to refrain from committing itself to a "losing cause" so as to maintain its initiative and flexibility of action in the future. Regarding recognition of the new Chinese Government, the United States was in a state of uncertainty and adopted a wait-and-see attitude. As a much-quoted saying by Acheson goes, the policy was "wait until the dust settles." (note 13) But its attitude towards Taiwan was quite another thing. It was from that time on that the United States sought to divide Taiwan from China's mainland.

Between December 1948 and March 1949, U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, the State Department, the White House National Security Council and other policy-making organs repeatedly studied and discussed policy towards Taiwan. Their consensus was that Taiwan was of great importance to U.S. strategy in the western Pacific because: (1) loss to the United States of availability of strategically valuable areas of China would enhance the strategical position of Taiwan and the Penghu Islands which could be used as wartime bases for strategic air operations when necessary and for the control of adjacent shipping routes; (2) "unfriendly" control of these islands would result, in case of war, in an "enemy capability" of dominating the sea routes between Japan and the Malay area and of extending its control to the Ryukyu Islands and the Philippines; (3) Taiwan was the primary source of supplies of food and other materials to Japan; if this source was cut off, Japan would prove to be more of a liability than an asset to the United States. Therefore, "the basic aim of the U.S. should be to deny Formosa and the Pescadores to the communists. The most practical means for accomplishing this at the present time is by isolating those islands from the mainland of China." (note 14) (emphasis is the author's, the same below).

In implementing this policy, the first problem facing the United States was that it had signed the solemn international agreements -- the Cairo declaration and the Potsdam proclamation — and had committed itself to the return of Taiwan to China. Now if it broke its promise, how could it justify itself legally and morally? For this, the United States came out with the following thesis: Because no peace treaty had been signed with Japan, Taiwan was still legally part of the Japanese empire. The policy which the U.S. had followed since V-J Day was one of recognizing Chinese de facto control over the islands. Now the situation had changed; the Kuomintang government which previously exercised "perfunctory" sovereignty over the island proved itself to be incapable of continuing its rule and unqualified to hold power. Therefore, the question concerning the status of Taiwan could only be finally solved after the signing of a peace treaty with Japan. (note 15) Thus, the United States concocted the notion that the status of Taiwan had not been decided, using this as an excuse to justify its perfidious actions.

Another question was, from the political point of view, how could it justify its attempt to separate Taiwan from China. The United States had all along used the following logic to justify its involvement in China's civil war: The Chinese Communist Party was "controlled" by the Soviet Union and its victory would inevitably turn China into a Soviet "satellite." So the same logic was used in regard to its attitude towards Taiwan. It declared that if Taiwan should fall into the hands of the Chinese Communist Party, it would amount to a military base for the Soviet Union in the Pacific and thereby present a menace to the security of the United States. Some people simply used such words: "If Formosa is lost to the communists, which means to the Russians" when they referred to the possibility of the liberation of Taiwan. Some Americans might have genuinely believed such an absurd myth out of ignorance and prejudice; but for U.S. policy-makers, it was a convenient excuse.

Informed American officials knew full well that "if we had any right to aid Nationalist China against the Chinese Communists, it could only be on the basis of defence against Soviet aggression, for otherwise it would be intervention in Chinese internal affairs." (note 16) Acheson himself said on an occasion of internal discussion: "We must accept as fact ... Mao is not a true satellite in that he came to power by his own efforts and was not installed in office by the Soviet Army." (note 17) It can thus be seen that the notion that the Chinese Communist Party was controlled by the Soviet Union was just another excuse for the United States.

Under the cover of these two excuses, the United States deemed itself free to go ahead with its attempt to carve up China's territory.

Caught in a Dilemma

How to materialize this attempt? On the eve of the overall victory of the Chinese people's liberation war on China's mainland, the United States contemplated the following choices:

1. Direct involvement of the United States.

It could be either direct military occupation of Taiwan by the United States or obtaining U.S. extra-territorial and base rights in Taiwan through negotiation with the Kuomintang, or treating Taiwan as part of the Japanese empire and temporarily placing it under the custody of the supreme command of allied powers (i.e., under General MacArthur) till the birth in Taiwan of a "future legitimate government true (to the) real intent of the Cairo declaration" (actually it should read "true to the real intent of the United States"). (note 18)

But each of the above practices was too blatant for the United States. For one thing, it surmised that the remnant Kuomintang government would not agree to it in defiance of universal condemnation unless in extremis. Furthermore, the United States had not given up its intention of waging a political war in liberated China to win popular support. And a brazen occupation of China's territory could only enable "the Communist Party to mobilize the entire Chinese people against U.S. imperialism." Moreover, it would tarnish the U.S. image in the world and leave it on the defensive in the United Nations. State Secretary Acheson said that the United States should avoid raising an "American created irredentist issue" just at a time when it was seeking to exploit the Chinese people's anti-Soviet sentiments because of Soviet practices in Xinjiang and the northeast. Therefore, said he, "if our present policy is to have any hope for successes in Formosa, we must carefully conceal our wish to separate the island from the mainland control." (note 19) He was strongly in favour of economic and diplomatic means and against making a show of military force.

Meantime, the White House asked the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff to consider whether the use of military means was practicable and worthwhile if diplomatic and economic steps proved insufficient to deny communist domination of Taiwan. The answer was: Such a situation would lead to the necessity for relatively major efforts in Taiwan, and "the current disparity between our military strength and our many global obligations makes inadvisable to undertake the employment of armed force in Formosa." Viewed from the point of military strategy, although Taiwan was important, it was not considered to be directly vital to U.S. national security like some European countries, say, Iceland, and therefore "any overt military commitment in Formosa would be unwise at this time." (note 20)

So, being politically undesirable and militarily unfeasible, this choice was dropped.

2. "To support continued local non-communist Chinese control" of the island to prevent communist domination and discourage the influx of Kuomintang remnants to Taiwan.

As for "local non-communist Chinese," the most desirable for the United States would be a local political force other than the Kuomintang, which advocated "self-government" and "independence" of Taiwan. The United States would support it to form a government under U.S. aegis, which would then declare separation of Taiwan from the mainland. Actually, U.S. diplomats in Taiwan, Xianggang (Hong Kong), Nanjing and Shanghai did make contacts with numerous representatives of organizations which professed to be anti-communist and advocated "self-government" of Taiwan. However, they failed to find any organized force or personality that could prove to be of some influence. The conclusion was that although people in Taiwan were universally dissatisfied with the rule of the Kuomintang which came from the mainland, they were "without political experience or strong leadership." (note 21) So, while continuing to keep an eye on and prepare to make use of a Taiwan autonomous movement whenever possible, the United States had to shelve this plan.

Its second choice was to replace the Chiang Kai-shek clique with people within the Kuomintang who were more acceptable according to U.S. standard, had a more liberal image, and were less notorious among the masses. Such people in power would be more easily manipulated by the United States. Therefore, after Chiang Kai-shek abdicated, the United States offered him a visit to the United States, and when he first prepared to go to Taiwan, tried to dissuade him on the ground that the status of Taiwan was legally undecided. (note 22) It also attempted to influence the choice of governor for Taiwan Province. But all these attempts ended in failure. The United States found that Chiang Kai-shek held power in his hands so closely that there was no way to "get around the generalissimo" and that, like it or not, it had to deal with him.

3. Separate Taiwan from China in one way or another through the United Nations.

The State Department repeatedly proposed that the United States should work through the United Nations, when it could still control the organization, to put Taiwan under either U.S. or U.N. trusteeship or to realize self-government of Taiwan. For instance, when the situation became critical, the United States would request, through other countries, that the United Nations interfere under the pretext of peace being threatened and then arrange a plebiscite under U.N. supervision to determine the status of Taiwan. Or, the request could be raised by the Kuomintang authorities and/or a Taiwan independent movement at the United Nations. The United Nations might also be requested to convene a special session where the United States could issue a statement expressing the view that because the Chinese authorities had mis-governed Taiwan, they had "forfeited the right to a perfunctory confirmation of sovereignty" over Taiwan. The statement would also suggest that the people of Taiwan had the right to decide through secret ballot whether Taiwan should return to the mainland or be temporarily put under trusteeship before it acquired independence. (note 23)

These formulas were naturally very appealing to the United States. But, since it deemed it necessary to conceal its intentions, it did not want to take actions publicly by itself. As for other major Western countries such as Britain and France, although they were quite interested in this idea, they were not ready to stand out and act for the United States on this issue. On the contrary, Britain sent several messages to the United States expressing "concern" about continuous U.S. deliverance of tanks and artillery to the Kuomintang in Taiwan for fear that once Taiwan was liberated, the weapons would fall into the hands of the Communist Party and would be used to deal with Xianggang (Hong Kong). (note 24)

Chiang Kai-shek, on his part, did not agree with the U.S. proposals. He maintained that war between the United States and the Soviet Union was inevitable and was hoping for a Third World War which would help him realize his dream of "recovering the mainland." Therefore, he was against the idea of separating Taiwan from the mainland. Instead, he requested the United States to regard him as the representative of all China and give him all-out support. In a public statement made in March 1949, Wang Shijie, former foreign minister of the Kuomintang government who had just retired, said that Taiwan was a "restored territory," not a "military occupation area" and that China had absolute sovereignty over its foreign and domestic matters. The Treaty of Shimonoseki was nullified by Chinese declaration of war against Japan in 1941. Taiwan had been legally reverted to China and then was physically acquired from the Japanese Army at the end of the war. This statement was actually a refutation of the U.S. thesis that "the status of Taiwan was undecided" and could not be unheeded by the United States. (note 25)

Besides, the United States noted that if the decision, even though adopted by the United Nations, met with resistance from any side, the United Nations had no armed force to enforce it. If an armed force was organized in the name of the United Nations, the main burden would fall on the United States and, militarily, that would not be much different from U.S. military dispatching troops alone, an option which had already been rejected by the U.S. military establishment. If a decision could not be put into effect, the United Nations would lose its prestige. (note 26)

Although the United States did not abandon the notion of controlling Taiwan through the United Nations, it has never dared, nor been able, to put the idea into practice.

4. Continued support for the Kuomintang.

As was mentioned above, those U.S. officials familiar with the situation repeatedly pointed out that the complete failure of the Kuomintang on the mainland resulted not from the lack of U.S. aid, but from its own corruption and incompetence. In his report to the Department of the Army in November 1948, General Barr, leader of the joint U.S. advisory group to China, said: "No battle has been lost since my arrival due to lack of ammunition or equipment." (note 27) A State Department document also pointed out: Since the Kuomintang took over Taiwan after World War II, it has "displayed a genius for misgovernment." (note 28) The undemocratic political practices of the Kuomintang and the grabbing by "carpetbaggers" from the mainland aroused deep resentment among the local people. The influx of people from the mainland threw the economy of Taiwan into further chaos. If the United States should continue to give all-out support to the Chiang Kai-shek clique which had no hope for victory, it would mean loss of prestige and of any chance for flexible policies. Moreover, to assist the Kuomintang ruling clique in its move to Taiwan as requested and recognize it as representing all China would inevitably arouse strong resentment of all the people in Taiwan against the United States, and make it completely discredited both on China's mainland and in Taiwan.

On the other hand, the United States did not want to see the collapse of the Kuomintang in the whole of China. So it continued its assistance to Chiang Kai-shek, permitting him to use U.S. funds to buy munitions. With regard to Taiwan, the United States tried hard to avoid giving people the impression that it supported the Kuomintang government's move to the island. It gave the latter economic assistance through the "economic co-operation administration" and was careful to use "aid" in places where it could be directly felt by the people of Taiwan. The United States did not make any promises in regard to the Kuomintang's repeated requests for sending again military advisory groups because it wanted to avoid undertaking an open commitment, but it allowed retired U.S. officers to be hired as advisers in private capacity. In addition, the United States formally asked Chiang Kai-shek and other principal Kuomintang figures to change their practices, to introduce "political reform" in Taiwan and to restrict the influx of people from the mainland into Taiwan as the conditions for more U.S. "aid." At the same time, it continued to carry out diplomatic activities in the hope that the Taiwan question could be finally brought up at the United Nations. (note 29)

With the development of the Chinese revolution, the United States sensed the imminent possibility of Taiwan falling into the hands of the Communist Party, so after June 1949, several reappraisals of policy towards Taiwan were made, particularly on the feasibility and desirability of resorting to military forces when and if other methods proved ineffective. As a result of these studies, the conclusion of the military quarters remained by and large unchanged: U.S. ability fell short of its wishes; the State Department believed the political price was too heavy and, therefore, not worthwhile. So the United States could not but take the fourth choice which was adopted under a helpless state. The White House National Security Council admitted that the "choice is not between satisfactory or unsatisfactory courses of action but rather of the least of several evils or an amalgam of the lesser of them." (note 30)

In short, the United States was fully aware that if it tied itself with a reactionary regime destined for defeat, it would become discredited and be bogged down in a hopeless position; yet, it could not make up its mind to end its aid to Chiang Kai-shek. It harboured a strong ambition over Taiwan, but at the same time tried hard to conceal it. While it was afraid to arouse the hostility of the entire Chinese people, it spared no efforts in doing things detrimental to the fundamental interests of the Chinese nation. It wanted to preserve its international image and loathed to be accused of imperialism, but it flagrantly tore up international agreements, disregarded the norms of international relations and wilfully tried to divide the territory of a sovereign state. Political, economic and diplomatic means turned out to be ineffective, while military force fell short of its objectives. All through the period between the latter half of 1948 and the end of 1949, U.S. policy towards Taiwan was enmeshed in contradictions and caught in a dilemma.

A Boomerang Policy Decision

Guangzhou was liberated in October and Chongqing in November 1949. The Kuomintang government officially moved to Taiwan in December and so did Chiang Kai-shek. There were indications that in the short period from then on to the first months of 1950, U.S. policy-makers did consider another option of policy towards Taiwan. A heated debate had been going on for quite a time in the U.S. ruling circles over the problem of whether to continue to assist Chiang Kai-shek. In March 1949, 50 U.S. Congressmen requested but failed to have the Senate Foreign Relations Committee take immediate action on a dollars 1.5 billion aid-to-China bill introduced by Democratic Senator Mc Carran. In April, U.S. Congress approved an extension of the 1948 China aid act by authorizing the president to use unobligated funds to aid "those areas of China remaining free of Chinese Communist control." In October, the president approved the "Mutual Defence Assistance Act," including a provision to grant Chiang a sum of 75 million dollars. With money available, the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff recommended that the United States give the Kuomintang in Taiwan a modest military aid integrated with a stepped-up political, economic, and psychological programme, thinking this might help Chiang to linger out a longer time. The military also suggested that the 7th Fleet conduct a special survey of the nature and extent of the military assistance required by Taiwan before working out concrete recommendations. (note 31)

This suggestion was rejected by the State Department. Acheson said at a joint meeting of the military group and the State Department on December 29, 1949, that it had to be admitted that the conquest of China by the Communists was due primarily to the collapse of the Kuomintang and that "there is no Chinese basis of resistance to communism." He said: Even if "we can postpone the fall of Formosa for a year, we must ask what price do we pay for this delay. I believe that, first, we will have once more involved U.S. prestige in another failure; moreover, and of greater importance, we will excite and bring upon ourselves the united Chinese hatred of foreigners. Throughout all Asia we would be represented as the supporters of this discredited, decayed Kuomintang government." He added: "It would have to be for a very important strategic purpose that would take an action which would substitute ourselves for the Soviets as the imperialist menace to China." But he did not think Taiwan was that essential for U.S. defence. He called for a long-term view of China and warned: "We are in a position resembling that in which Russia found herself in 1927 when she was driven from China and her influence liquidated. It has taken her 22 years to return to a position of dominant influence and it may similarly take us as long."

On December 23, the U.S. State Department issued a directive recommending that public opinion be prepared for the possible "fall" of Taiwan. It urged that all materials be used to counter the false impression that Taiwan's retention would save China and its loss seriously damage the interests of the United States and other countries opposing communism. It acknowledged that Taiwan "politically, geographically, and strategically, is part of China," that "politically and militarily it is a strictly Chinese responsibility" and that it is "not strategically important to the United States." It reaffirmed that "the Cairo agreement and Potsdam Declaration and the surrender terms of September 2, 1945, anticipated its return to China" and suggested avoiding statements that "Formosa's final status still is to be determined by the Japanese peace treaty." It said that seeking U.S. bases on Taiwan or taking any similar action "would accomplish no material good for its nationalist regime," "would involve the United States in a long-term venture," would result in a "possible involvement in open warfare" and "subject the United States to a violent propaganda barrage and to reaction against our militarism, imperialism and interference, even from friendly people, and particularly from Chinese." (note 33)

On January 5, 1950, U.S. President Truman issued a statement, reiterating the provisions in the Cairo declaration and the Potsdam proclamation concerning Taiwan's return to China. He said: "The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges, or to establish military bases on Formosa at this time. Nor does it have any intention of utilizing its armed forces to interfere in the present situation. The United States Government will not pursue a course which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China."

He said clearly: "Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa." (note 34)

On January 12, 1950, Acheson made a speech entitled "Crisis in China" at the National Press Club where he spoke in defence of U.S. policy towards China and addressed the problem of U.S. military security in the western Pacific. He drew the United States' defence line north from the Aleutian Islands through Japan, the Ryukyu Islands and south to the Philippines, without mentioning Taiwan. (note 35)

So far it can be said that, forced by the general trend of events at that time, the opinion of hands-off in Taiwan prevailed in the U.S. ruling circles. Some top policy-makers finally declared that the United States was prepared to withdraw from the civil war in China.

However, such a change of attitude was very short-lived and the promise of withdrawal was never put to practice.

For instance, while the United States declared that it would not continue its support for Chiang, its embassy moved to Taiwan with Chiang in late December 1949 all the same, though it did not send an ambassador. On the same day (January 5, 1950) when Truman issued his statement, Acheson, in elaborating this statement at a press conference, said it was only at this time that the United States had no desire to obtain special rights ... on Taiwan. He played on the words "at this time" and added that in the event when U.S. forces were attacked in the Far East, the United States must be completely free to take whatever action in whatever area is necessary for its own security." It can thus be seen that hardly had Truman's statement been published when the United States was already preparing to break its promise. (note 36)

At the same time, there had all along been pressure within the U.S. policy-making organs against the position which had just been pronounced. Some elements in the State Department recommended the "neutralization" of Taiwan. This was first proposed by John Foster Dulles, then special adviser to the peace treaty with Japan, and approved by

Deputy Secretary of State Dean Rusk. On May 30, 1950, Rusk submitted a memorandum to Acheson recommending that the United States convey "confidence and resolution" instead of weakness regarding the Taiwan issue, and announce that it would neutralize Taiwan, "not permitting it either to be taken by the communists or to be used as a base of military operations against the mainland." (note 37)

As mentioned above, the Pentagon, too, had their own opinions. Shortly after Truman issued his statement, U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff declared that the former war plan providing for the denial of Taiwan to the Russians in case of war should remain in effect. MacArthur was a strong advocate of U.S. intervention in Taiwan. On May 29 and June 14, he submitted two memorandums to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Department of the Army, putting forward for the first time the proposition that in the event of war, Taiwan would be "an unsinkable aircraft carrier." At about the same time, Secretary of Defence Louis Johnson suggested that "the United States make every effort to keep the communists out of Formosa even though this might entail holding Formosa with the aid of U.S. military forces." (note 38)

Meanwhile, there was a pro-Chiang uproar both in and outside of the Congress, accusing the U.S. Government of not providing the Kuomintang with enough support. This was known as the "who lost China" debate. It was also at that time that Senator Joseph McCarthy made appearance on the scene and opened a most absurd and reactionary page in the annals of modern U.S. politics. McCarthyism involved a much wider range of problems, U.S. China policy being one of its main targets. These people were small in number; but very outspoken and quite influential for a time.

Behind this hue and cry, there was communist-phobia, conflict among different interest groups and demagogic attacks by the "outs" on the "ins," which is common in American politics, as well as activities of agents directly paid by the Kuomintang. But, in the final analysis, what these people advocated did not go beyond the idea of letting the Chinese fight the Chinese with the United States providing money and guns and Chiang Kai-shek providing men. Only, deprived of all sense of reality, they simply ignored the fact that this practice had already gone bankrupt. Like the legendary king who was overwhelmed by the surging tide because he refused to retreat from the seashore, believing himself to be so almighty as capable of ordering an ebb of the sea, these people believed in the almightiness of U.S. dollars and U.S.-made arms, thinking by continuously pouring them down, they could stem the tide of the Chinese revolution.

Amidst this hubbub, Truman ordered the 7th task fleet to enter the Taiwan Straits on June 27, 1950, taking advantage of the Korean war. Thus began the history of almost 20 years in which the United States directly used armed forces to prevent the reunification of Chinese territory, which virtually reduced Taiwan to a U.S. protectorate.

Truman's statement of not interfering in the Taiwan issue and honouring the Cairo declaration [words indistinct] became a mere scrap of paper. When a British diplomat asked how to deal with the Cairo declaration, Acheson said it was "merely a lawyer's point" "not worthy of this discussion." Truman explained to British Prime Minister Clement Richard Attlee that when the Cairo declaration was signed, Japan was hostile to the United States but China was not and at that time he did not think China would be hostile to the United States. (note 39) According to this logic, the principle of respect for state sovereignty and territorial integrity could be changed at any time with the changing situation.

The above-mentioned developments show that, in late 1949 and early 1950 when the Chinese revolution swept over the mainland, the United States, finding that all conceivable means had proved ineffective except sending troops for a large-scale war, was forced to consider temporarily a hands-off policy. But this was done very reluctantly and a reverse was brewing all the time. The outbreak of the Korean war provided it with an excuse, as a U.S. Senator wrote in his diary: "The saving of Formosa was clearly God-guided." (note 40)

Ironically, all the bad consequences for the United States Acheson had anticipated and hoped to avoid did happen one by one: The United States tied itself to the discredited Chiang Kai-shek clique and thus lost prestige in the world. It could not escape the responsibility of prolonging the Chinese civil war, interfering in China's internal affairs and dividing Chinese territory. It made Taiwan an American-created irredentist issue and aroused with its own behaviour the entire Chinese people to the struggle against U.S. imperialism; it lost all room for flexibility in its China policy, found itself in an inextricable position, etc.... More important, the continuation of this policy of the United States led to a long period of hostility between the two countries and a tense situation in this region, which was detrimental to the fundamental interests of the two peoples and also seriously jeopardized peace in the Asian-Pacific region and the rest of the world.

The U.S. policy towards China during this period is recorded in almost all relevant books published in the United States as a "failure." One U.S. scholar made an incisive analysis when he pointed out that the key to the failure was the expansionist policy of the United States and its attempt to control China. In the eyes of the United States, he said, "a China not subservient to American interests was a China hostile to American interests." He also noted the contradiction between Acheson's warning that the United States should not aid governments lacking public support on the one hand, and his instruction to make absolutely certain that no opportunity be neglected to halt the spread of communism and his support for schemes devised by his subordinates for a separate Taiwan on the other. This scholar pointed out that what Acheson wanted was a puppet more compliant and "cleaner" than Chiang Kai-shek. He did not have any desire to change his approach to new China. (note 41)

Indeed, the United States policy failed because of its policy-makers' anachronism. Even in the mid-20th century they still attempted to continue practising the power politics of the 19th century. They did not regard China as a sovereign state, but as a chip in its contention with the Soviet Union for spheres of influence. They regarded China's territory as their property which they had the right to dispose of at will in disregard of the Chinese people's will. Having only experiences in dealing with the Kuomintang rulers who placed their hope of existence on the United States, they were accustomed to using patronizing and high-handed measures alternately to achieve their goal, and thought they could apply the same to the awakened Chinese people. Many experienced U.S. diplomats and learned scholars of the think-tanks spent their wisdom and talents on trying to find out a clever way to maintain U.S. imperialist privileges in China rather than on learning to go along with the trend of history and treat the Chinese people as equals. Naturally, failure was unavoidable.

Up to the 1970's, a new and great change had taken place in the world situation. U.S. power undeniably declined from its zenith and U.S. leaders found that "the United States, as compared with that position we found ourselves in immediately after World War II, has a challenge such as we did not even dream of." (note 42) Gone were the days when the United States could dominate the world, while new China had survived the U.S. blockade and encirclement and gone from strength to strength. Under such circumstances, some realistic U.S. statesmen recognized the necessity to change their policy towards China. It was then that they had to declare: "The United States acknowledges that all Chinese on either side of the Taiwan Straits maintain there is but one China and that Taiwan is a part of China. The United States Government does not challenge that position." Almost seven years later, they finally agreed: "There is only one China and Taiwan is a part of China, and the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legitimate government of China." It took the United States rather long to recognize such an obvious fact. Nevertheless, better late than never. It is precisely on this basis that China and the United States established diplomatic relations. However, a promise on paper is not equal to a deed. Almost immediately after the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries was signed, some U.S. politicians raised a hue and cry in the Congress which reminded one of the "who lost China" debate of 30 years ago. As a result, the "Taiwan Relations Act" came into being, which contradicts the spirit of the principles governing the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. At present, the U.S. Government, while declaring it values U.S. relations with China, says at the same time it wants to abide by the "Taiwan Relations Act," which means that it is unwilling to stop its interference in China's internal affairs. So, U.S. policy towards China is again enmeshed in a dilemma.

Frankly speaking, the fact that there still remains a "Taiwan issue" in the relations between China and the United States is the consequence of the imperialistic expansionist policy on the part of the United States. To China, it is the aftermath of the century-old history of being subject to foreign aggression and partition. It is inconceivable that the Chinese people, who have paid such high prices for the ending of national humiliation, would tolerate for long the continuation of such a state. But it is conceivable what a difficult situation the United States will find itself in if it clings to its policy which was already discredited in its heyday.

How Sino-U.S. relations will develop in the future depends on whether U.S. policy-makers will awaken to the irresistible law by learning from historical experience, throw off their heavy burden and catch up with the tide of the times.

CRITICISM OF U.S. INTERFERENCE IN PRC AFFAIRS

[Text] Recently -- particularly before and since U.S. Secretary of State Haig's resignation -- a number of diehards in the United States have fanned up an ill wind of interfering in the internal affairs of China. They openly asked the U.S. Government to adhere to the stance of "two Chinas" and feverishly incited the continuous supply of weapons to Taiwan to oppose the sole legitimate government of the People's Republic of China, which has long been recognized by the U.S. Government.

These ultraconservatives have attempted to impose influences on various circles because they are swollen with arrogance. They have written articles, made reports, written joint letters to President Reagan and interviewed reporters, going around crying for help and giving the people the impression that they will never stop until Sino-U.S. relations are broken off.

The representatives from 28 U.S. conservative organizations held a press conference in a hall of the U.S. Capitol on 8 July. At the conference, a joint statement was read out and remarks were made by several representatives. They flagrantly advocated the "two Chinas" policy, openly called China's Taiwan Province the "Republic of China," and requested the U.S. Government not to pay any attention to Beijing's one-China policy. They clamored against "Red China" and voiced support for so-called "free China," opposed the Shanghai Communique and any change by the U.S. Government of its policy of long-term supply of weapons to Taiwan. They demanded that the "Taiwan Relations Act," which violates the principles of establishing relations between China and the United States, should be firmly implemented and demanded that the suppply of weapons to Taiwan should be continued. They remarked that an end to the arms sales to Taiwan would mean desertion of old friends and a sellout of Taiwan, and so on and so forth.

These U.S. diehards have fanned up this adverse current against China in an attempt to undermine once and for all the basis for the current Sino-U.S. relations, thus causing Sino-U.S. ties to retrogress.

These diehards are few in number and their influence is limited. They represent neither the majority of the American people nor the mainstream of the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. Their clumsy performance was applauded by few, and very few people attended the press conference held on 8 July. This is because the fallacies they advocate not only run counter to the fundamental interests of the American people but also are detrimental to the interests of the peace and security of the various countries, including the United States. Despite their clamor, they failed to gain much support.

However, this ill wind of interfering in the internal affairs of China that has been fanned up recently certainly does represent a sinister intention held by some people in the United States. Their long-term and fundamental target is to create "two Chinas" and put Taiwan under U.S. control so as to keep China split for a prolonged period.

Therefore, it is not accidental that this adverse current against China appeared in the United States recently. They stirred up the trouble, not hesitating to undermine the Sino-U.S. relations established by the peoples and governments of China and the United States after a prolonged struggle, to completely overthrow the China policy that was agreed on by the four administrations starting with President Nixon, both Republican and Democratic, and to totally tear up the Shanghai Communique agreed upon by China and the United States as well as the joint communique on establishing Sino-U.S. relations, thus taking the Sino-U.S. relations back to the situation of mutual hostility of the fifties.

Goldwater -- a veteran of the U.S. Senate -- has acted most flagrantly in this concern. He has repeatedly and undisguisedly advocated the view of "two Chinas," saying that in his opinion, the United States should recognize the so-called "free China" on Taiwan; and that in this way Taiwan will be the largest aircraft carrier in the world and the land of most strategic value to the United States.

There is another one who sang the same tune, retired U.S. General Mark Hill. At the press conference held on 8 July he made no secret of his views, saying that the United States must possess bases abroad so as to control sea routes. Without certain military bases in Southeast Asia, he said, the United States could not have held out in the Vietnam war. The same thing would be true with Taiwan in a similar situation. So, the real objective of these people is to control and occupy Taiwan and continue to make it an unsinkable aircraft carrier of the United States.

In fact, as early as the 1950's, General MacArthur, the then commander-in-chief of the UN troops, made the same remarks. At that time, the United States had just launched the war of aggression against Korea, demanded a policy of hostility toward China and attempted to permanently occupy Taiwan so as to turn Taiwan into an advance base against China. MacArthur clamored that the United States should at all costs keep this important fortress of strategic value in the Pacific area.

More than 30 years have elapsed and there have been earth-shaking changes in both Asia and the world. In face of reality, the U.S. Government had no alternative but to revise its policy towards China in the 1970's, and the relations between China and the United States were normalized. In the long run, it had to recognize that there was only one China, Taiwan was part of China and that the PRC Government was the only legitimate government in China.

However, there are still a few people in the United States today who still have the same shattered dream cherished by MacArthur some 30 years ago. They refuse to abandon the old views of some 30 years ago, but still attempt to occupy and control Taiwan and keep China split for a prolonged period of time.

It should be noted that these conservative diehards in the United States have resumed their activities at this time because they have their short-term targets. At present, the Chinese and the U.S. Governments are engaged in negotiations on the arms sales to Taiwan by the United States. These people -- who from the first have been extremely dissatisfied with the developing Sino-American relations -- are doing their utmost to incite the U.S. Government to continue its sales of weapons to Taiwan. Taking advantage of this transition period when new principal officials are replacing the old ones at the U.S. State Department, these people are attempting to fan an ill wind of opposing China and undermine the on-going negotiations between China and the United States on the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, thus causing Sino-U.S. relations to retrogress.

However, the history of the development of the relations between China and the United States over the past 30 years tells us that it will never work for the U.S. Government to adopt the policy of infringing upon the sovereignty of China or interfering with the internal affairs of China. Those who still cherish the dream of going back to the old China of some 30 years ago to act as the overlords in China when the United States provided funds and guns to help Chiang Kai-shek engage in the civil war should review the history of the past three decades. They should open their eyes wide and take a good look at the current situation in the world.

History has already punished MacArthur and his like. However, there are still a few people in the United States who are suffering from serious amnesia, still trying to turn back the wheel of history. They engage in things that run counter to the fundamental interests of the American people and that undermine Sino-U.S. relations.

We advise them to stay clear headed. Anyone who persists in interfering with the internal affairs of China, attempts to occupy Taiwan, the territory of China, and attempts to keep China split for a prolonged period of time is bound to be punished by history.

REAGAN ANNOUNCES U.S. WILL NOT SIGN SEA TREATY

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Washington report: U.S. President Reagan announced on 9 July that the United States will not sign the international Law of the Sea Treaty. He said in a statement that the deep-seabed mining part of the convention does not meet United States objectives.

The draft of "the Law of the Sea Treaty" was adopted in late April at the 11th session of the 3d United Nations Law of the Sea Conference after nearly 9 years of negotiations. Some 130 countries, including France, Japan, most Western countries and almost all developing countries, voted for it. The United States, Israel and two other countries voted against it. Seventeen countries, including the Soviet Union, abstained. The treaty is scheduled to be signed in December 1982 in Caracas, the capital of Venezuela.

According to a Washington POST report, the U.S. State Department has informed several major allies of this decision made by Reagan. The paper pointed out the decision would "make the United States take the risk of eventually separating itself from a new world order accepted by other countries in the world and becoming isolated."

The decision shows that the Reagan administration has changed the more cooperative position on the law of the sea issue taken by several previous administrations.

ECONOMIC ORDER SOUGHT TO COUNTER RISING DOLLAR

[Text] The value of the U.S. dollar has recently been rising steeply, while the currencies of Western Europe and Japan have been losing value. This has become one of the main factors in disrupting international finance and causing tension between the United States and its main Western allies.

The value of the dollar against 15 major Western currencies had by early June risen an average of 22 percent since Reagan took office. The dollar has continued to rise since the Versailles seven-nation summit. At present the exchange rates of the Canadian dollar, the French franc and the Italian lira against the dollar are at their lowest postwar level. Two and a half years ago, $1 could be exchanged for DM1.72, but now it will buy DM2.43. The Japanese yen's rate against the dollar has also fallen to the lowest level in 2 and 1/2 years.

In the 1960's and the early 1970's, when the value of the dollar was falling, the chief Western countries frequently held consultations and sold gold reserves to help shore up the dollar, all to no avail. Now it seems that the dollar is striding proudly ahead again. Under the powerful pressure of the dollar, the French franc, the Italian lira, the Portuguese escudo, the Chilean peso, the Greek drachma and so on have recently been continuously losing their value. Even the prices of gold and silver have collapsed.

The Reagan administration is currently vexed by severe domestic economic problems. The boom in the dollar obviously does not stem from U.S. domestic economic strength, but is caused by other factors.

U.S. interest rates have consistently been higher than those of Western Europe and Japan for more than 2 years now. The U.S. inflation rate has declined notably this year, but there has been no fall in the domestic interest rate. Hence, the true U.S. interest rate (16.5 percent bank interest less 7 percent inflation) is as high as 9.5 percent, much higher than the true interest rates of 2-4 percent in Western Europe and Japan. As a result, idle international money is pouring into America, which causes the dollar to rise.

Another cause of the rise of the dollar is financial instability in Western Europe. As everyone knows, economic policies among the EEC members have never been coordinated; most of them are running shocking deficits and their currency values are unstable. The European currency system established in March 1979 has already carried out six major readjustments, including three in the past 9 months. Canada, America's northern nieghbor, is also in deep trouble, with double-digit inflation. All these things cause the dollar to imperceptibly turn into a shelter for idle international money and a bunker for private investment. The dollar is very popular on that account. The rise of the dollar helps to reduce domestic inflation, but it certainly causes tremendous calamity for the Western world.

The most outstanding calamity is that it forces a number of countries to devalue their currencies and worsens their domestic inflation. Many Western European countries have to resort to raising their domestic interest rates in order to protect the foreign exchange value of their currencies. However, high interest rates are bound to hamper domestic investment and exacerbate domestic economic stagnation; thus, unemployment increases and sharp social and political turmoil ensues. At present all EEC members have been compelled to institute high interest rates, and this is the reason their economic recovery is slow.

The rise of the dollar and high U.S. interest rates also pose a grave threat to the Third World countries. Due to the Western world's economic sluggishness, not only have there been sharp reductions in the raw materials and finished industrial goods exports of the developing countries, but their prices too have fallen greatly. In the midst of this, the rise of the dollar compels them to devalue their currencies and thus damages their repayment capacity, while high U.S. interest rates also greatly increase their interest burden. Many Third World countries have fallen into an impasse, where they are unable to repay their debts or borrow any more.

The rise of the dollar is causing a whole series of calamities for the entire Western world. Since at present 75 percent of international trade and international payments are made in dollars, the moment U.S. domestic economic policies change, the economy and trade of other countries suffer accordingly. Hence it is not only the industrialized countries of Western Europe and Japan that are currently expressing great discontent over U.S. policies; all the developing countries in the world are also extremely indignant over this issue. From the question of the rise of the dollar, it is all the more evident how essential and urgent it is to establish a new international economic order in the field of international finance.

USSR'S USTINOV ON FIRST USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

[Text] Moscow, July 12 (XINHUA) -- Although the Soviet Union has pledged not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, it will continue to determine its policy in the light of the U.S. behaviour, said Soviet Defense Minister Dmitry Ustinov here today.

In a lengthy article carried in PRAVDA, Ustinov stated that Washington and other NATO countries should realize that while the Soviet Union will not be the first to use nuclear weapons, it will not allow all those who are deliberating on nuclear attack plans aimed to win a nuclear war to be the first to use nuclear weapons either.

He said the Soviet Union will further improve the war preparedness and technical equipment of the Soviet Army and perfect its command and communication systems.

USSR SAYS PIPELINE TO BE COMPLETED ON SCHEDULE

OW081822 Beijing XINHUA in English 1616 GMT 8 Jul 82

[Text] Moscow July 8 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet press today published a resolution of the Central Committee of the Communist Party and the Council of Ministers saying that "the laying of the natural gas pipeline from Urengoy in Siberia to Uzhgorod in the west border region will be completed as decided before." The resolution says that "measures were taken" to ensure the completion of the project.

It says that gas for domestic comsumption will be supplied in accordance with the five-year plan and its exportation will begin as of 1984 under the contracts signed.

The resolution was apparently made to cope with the recent U.S. embargo on oil and gas production equipment export to the Soviet Union. Subject to the embargo, decreed by President Ronald Reagan on June 18, is not only equipment manufactured in the United States, but also that produced by overseas U.S. companies and by foreign countries with U.S. licences.

The pipeline will run some 5000 kilometers, and some Western European countries have agreed to supply steel pipes and equipment for the project.

The embargo has touched off a new wave of quarrels between the United States and West European countries. The Soviet resolution is believed to be intended to pour oil on the flame.

China's Foreign Ministry did not immediately confirm Kim's visit -- the first in seven years.

The sources said since there are no issues pending between China and North Korea, Kim's visit is likely aimed simply at furthering friendly relations between the two nations. They said Kim's trip is to repay visits in May 1978 by then Chinese party Chairman Hua Guofeng and in September 1978 by party Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping.

North Korea has been leaning increasingly toward China and there have been frequent exchange of visits by ranking officials of the two nations.

SINCERITY OF SRV TROOP WITHDRAWAL PLAN QUESTIONED

[Text] Beijing, 13 July (XINHUA) -- The Vietnamese authorities recently proposed a "partial troop withdrawal" from Kampuchea. What exactly is this scheme worth? What is their intention? What are the consequences? People might as well compare it to the "partial troop withdrawal" from Afghanistan proposed by the Soviet Union 2 years ago in order to reach a general conclusion.

The Soviet Union announced its "partial troop withdrawal" from Afghanistan on 22 June 1980. The Soviet authorities boasted it was a "new, important initiative action." However, what world public opinion noted at that time was not the decision itself but the time of the announcement. The time chosen by Moscow was prior to the convening of international conferences: the foreign ministers conference of the five ASEAN nations, the consultation between the ASEAN and the Western countries on the Afghanistan and Kampuchea questions and the 37th UN General Assembly session. The Soviet intention was to announce the "partial troop withdrawal" for the purpose of softening the firm stand of various countries which demanded unconditional, immediate and total troop withdrawal and evading condemnation by world public opinion. Now the Vietnamese authorities have put forth the proposal at a time following the signing of the declaration on the formation of a coalition government by the three patriotic forces in Kampuchea and before Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach visits some ASEAN countries and the 37th UN General Assembly opens. The Vietnamese intention was to use the "partial troop withdrawal" to offset the international impact of the formation of the Kampuchean coalition government, using this trick to soften the stand of the ASEAN countries and the United Nations, which have demanded unconditional, immediate and total troop withdrawal.

Another aim of the Soviet announcement on "partial troop withdrawal" at that time was to lure various countries into stopping aid to the Afghan people so as to step up its suppression of Afghanistan's struggle against aggression. Now, the Vietnamese authorities have announced that they would effect a "partial troop withdrawal" from Kampuchea; the purpose is to prevent the world community from giving aid to the Kampuchean people in their patriotic struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors. They demanded that the Kampuchean patriotic forces opposing Vietnamese aggression must be "disarmed" and that they "cannot accept aid in arms and food supplies." Obviously, Vietnam also wanted to apply the "partial troop withdrawal" trick to achieve what it could not get in the battlefield.

Two years have passed since the Soviet Union announced its "partial troop withdrawal." But it is a well-known fact that the number of Soviet invading troops in Afghanistan has not been reduced but has remained at about 100,000 at all times. While the Soviet Union has pulled out some of what it called "nonessential troops," such as the wounded and unreliable officers and men, it has also sent back some troops trained in antiguerrilla warfare. Troop withdrawal in such as fashion amounts to nothing but troop rotation. Now Vietnam has announced a "partial troop withdrawal" from Kampuchea; would the number of its invading troops in Kampuchea be greatly reduced? Prasong Sunsiri, secretary general of the National Security Council of Thailand, in his recent statement quoting relevant information said that the Vietnamese authorities had dispatched 20,000 Vietnamese soldiers to Kampuchea from the 3d and 4th Divisions in northern Vietnam prior to its announcement of a "partial troop withdrawal" from Kampuchea.

The two "partial troop withdrawals," announced on two different occasions, are very similar. It is clear that the trick Hanoi is playing today was learned from its master craftsman in Moscow. If the trick used by its master craftsman 2 years ago did not work and has long been proven a worthless fraud, how can an apprentice convince others of his sincerity? Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) Chairman Norodom Sihanouk exposed the deceptiveness of this trick used by Vietnam in Bangkok on 12 July. He said: While Vietnam has indicated that it would pull out some of its troops from Kampuchea and has given assurances that ASEAN would not be invaded, there is no guarantee, however, that another country will not become a second Kampuchea some day.

CGDK'S IN TAM ON PARTIAL SRV TROOP WITHDRAWAL

[Text] Bangkok, July 13 (XINHUA) -- The Vietnamese suggestion to withdraw part of their troops from Kampuchea "is sheer propaganda strategy," said In Tam, member of the Coordination Committee for Defence of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK].

The Thai newspaper MATUPHUM DAILY today quoted him as saying that the Vietnamese can never be trusted as it is their customary practice to resort to deceit and conspiracy. "The fact is Vietnam has not withdrawn any troops from Kampuchea," e said. he added that having occupied Kampuchea, the Vietnamese would never easily agree to withdraw their troops.

Questioned whether there had been any factional clashes among the resistance forces, In Tam said: "This is true. But after the formation of the coalition government, we believe we will have no more armed clashes among ourselves. That is to say, we must get united." He also told reporters that after the formation of the coalition government, each party will work in its own area. That is why coordination and cooperation are necessary, he noted.

[Text] Beijing, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua gave a banquet here this evening for Burmese Minister for Foreign Affairs U Chit Hlaing and his party.

Addressing the banquet, Huang Hua praised the Burmese government and people for their important achievements in promoting the national economy and culture on the basis of self-reliance. He also praised the Burmese Government for upholding justice and opposing aggression and expansion in international affairs. Huang Hua said that both China and Burma need a peaceful and stable international environment in order to build their respective countries. "Hegemonist aggression and expansion have created an intense situation in Asia, gravely threatening the independence and security of various countries. Confronted with this situation, all peace-loving countries in this region must proceed from their respective positions to strengthen unity and cooperation and make common efforts to defend peace and check aggression. In this just cause, the Chinese Government and people will firmly stand with other Asian countries and make common efforts with them," Huang Hua said.

He added that the friendship between China and Burma has been cultivated by their leaders and stood the test of time. The Chinese Government and people, he said, cherish Sino-Burmese friendship and will continue to make sincere efforts to enhance the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries.

In reply, U Chit Hlaing said that Burma and China are two neighbouring countries enjoying close and cordial relations since time immemorial. "Whenever issues arise between us, we have been able to successfully overcome them in a spirit of goodwill, friendship and mutual accommodation. For this reason, we firmly believe that the friendship between our two countries will continue to be doubly strengthened in the coming years ahead." RENMIN RIBAO DENOUNCES INVASION BY ISRAEL

[Text] Israel's invasion of Lebanon, their siege of West Beirut and their massacre of Lebanese and Palestinian people has already aroused the common anger of upright people all over the world, including the Israeli people. The likes of Begin and Sharon, however, are quite beside themselves. They say that "if we now follow up our victory with hot pursuit," the PLO will "disintegrate." A high-ranking U.S. official chimed in by saying: "The PLO is finished."

However, the likes of Begin should not be pleased with themselves so soon: The struggle of the Palestinian people for national rights will never be "finished." As long as they still exist and have truth on their side, and as long as they enjoy sympathy and support from people all over the world, the Palestinian people will definitely emerge from their pool of blood. They will advance wave upon wave until they have won the right to return to their homeland. Concerning this, even the magazine U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT has pointed out: "A frightening prospect is that" the PLO will "make a comeback." It said: "The force which spurs this movement on, that is, the hostility toward the Jewish state and the determination to recover the homeland of hundreds of thousands of Palestinian people, has not vanished as a result of Israel's military victory."

Begin should not laugh too much, for there will be a time to cry.

WORLD SITUATION BLAMED FOR KENYA'S DIFFICULTIES

["Roundup: Why is Kenya's Economy in Difficulties? -- by XINHUA Correspondent Ye Zhixiong" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Nairobi, June 28 (XINHUA) -- Kenya, once an economically fast-developing country, has encountered severe financial and economic difficulties in recent years mainly because of the problems arising from the existing international economic order.

In the first ten years since independence in 1963, Kenya's economic growth averaged 6.8 percent per year. In recent years, it has encountered economic slow-down, food shortage, increasing unemployment, high inflation rate, widening foreign trade gap, increasingly huge balance of payments deficits, declining foreign exchange reserves, rising domestic and foreign debts, and repeated devaluation of the currency.

Kenya's financial situation started to get worse in 1973. It depends entirely on imports for its oil consumption, but in the past it managed to pay for oil imports with re-export earnings from its excessive refined oil products. As the oil price has risen 24 times from 5.4 Kenyan pounds per ton in 1972 to 129.6 Kenyan pounds per ton last year, it has to spend an increasingly large amount of foreign exchange to pay for oil imports. By last year, its oil import expense accounted for 20 percent of its total import value and consumed two-thirds of its export earnings except that from oil product re-exports. All earnings from its coffee and tea exports are not enough to pay its oil import bills.

Like many non-oil developing countries, Kenya has been suffering from deteriorating terms of trade with Western industrial countries in recent years because these Western countries have been trying hard to shift their heavy burden from oil imports onto non-oil developing countries by raising drastically the prices of their industrial goods and equipment. It was estimated that by last year, developing countries averagely got only two-thirds of what they could import from Western industrial countries in 1972 with the same amount of their exports. Kenya now pays its oil import bills with 66 percent of its total export earnings instead of 20 percent needed in the early 1970's.

All this has led to increasing deficits in international balance of payments and diminishing foreign exchange reserves for Kenya. According to the economic and financial review by the Central Bank of Kenya, Kenya recorded an overall deficit of 1,832 million shillings in the balance of payments last year, or 386 million shillings higher than the previous year.

Its foreign exchange reserves went down from 4.752 million shillings in December 1979 to merely 2,355 million shillings in April this year. It had to devaluate the currency twice a year totalling more than 20 percent against the Special Drawing Right. The government's borrowing increased 70 percent last year and had to pay 1,412 million shillings in interest for the foreign debts, accounting for 9.2 percent of its export earnings. Meanwhile, inflation continued at an annual rate of 13 percent last year and officials forcast 20 percent for this year.

Since independence, Kenya has inherited and further developed a medium and small-sized industry and an agriculture largely based on small holders. But it considerably relies on Western countries for capital investment, machinery and equipment. The World Bank estimated that the average ratio of imported capital goods to gross domestic investment in Kenya has risen to some 38 percent and the average ratio of imported intermediate goods to Kenya's gross domestic product has risen to about 16 percent.

Under the impact of prolonged economic recession, Western countries have generally slowed down their capital outflow to Kenya in recent years. Meanwhile, Kenya's ability to import Western machinery and equipment has also been limited for lack of foreign exchange. Restriction on imports to curtail balance of payments deficits also affects economic development inevitably as well. According to the government's economic survey 1982, just published, manufacturing industry's growth rate was slowed down to 5 percent last year as against 12.6 percent in 1978 and (?9) percent in 1980.

On the other hand, Kenya's main export goods such as coffee and tea are under the restriction of international quotas [words indistinct] largely manipulated by Western countries. For example, Kenya at present has one million bags of coffee (60 kilos per bag) in excess of the international quota allocated by the International Coffee Organization and has to sell them in non-quota markets at much lower prices.

Kenya's population has more than doubled, from 8.5 million at independence in 1963 to 17.9 million now. Its present annual population growth rate at 3.9 percent is the world's highest, which has nearly offset the economic growth in recent years and caused food shortage. It had to spend lots of foreign exchange to import maize, wheat and milk powder in the past two years. The persistent drought in 1980 and 1981 has seriously affected the production of maize, wheat and other produce.

The Kenyan Government has taken a series of measures to ease the financial and economic difficulties and promote national economic development. Better weather and the raising of purchase prices had led to an agricultural growth rate of 6.2 percent last year. Restriction on imports cut down the foreign trade deficit last year by 16 percent to 7,400 million shillings.

However, as President Daniel arap Moi pointed out, Kenya is facing "a truly serious economic situation" which "is not a temporary one" and "is unavoidable for many developing countries." The fundamental cause for Kenya's economic difficulties lies in the existing unreasonable international economic order. It convincingly justifies the common demand of the developing countries for the establishment of a new international economic order.

XUE MUQIAO ON PLANNED ECONOMY, MARKET MECHANISM

[Speech by Xue Muqiao [5643 2550 2890] at second annual meeting of Sino-Japanese Economic Knowledge Exchange Association on 3 May 1982: "Planned Economy and Regulation by Market Mechanism"]

[Text] Regarding the relations between planned economy and regulation by market mechanism, I published an article in the 16 April issue of HONGQI. This article has been translated and can be used for our friends' reference. So it is no longer necessary for me to give an overall explanation on this question. I only wish to say that our recent formulation of this question is slightly different from what it was 2 years ago. Does this mean that the orientation for the reform of the economic system has been changed? I want to stress that our orientation has not been changed and that we simply want to express this orientation more accurately in order to avoid deviations. At present, this point is still under discussion.

The economic reform in our country is to implement the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. This policy has not been changed at present, nor will it be changed in the future. In implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world in the past few years, activities of smuggling and selling contraband have rapidly developed in some areas. At present, we are banning smuggling, selling contraband and other unlawful activities. As we all know, banning smuggling and selling contraband will not affect our policy of opening up to the outside world at all. On the contrary, this will ensure the smooth development of the policy. Moreover, in implementing the policy of enlivening the domestic economy and extending the decision-making power of localities and enterprises, our planned management work has not been able to keep pace with new situation. Departmental selfishness has developed to a certain extent in some localities and enterprises. They benefit themselves at the expense of state interests and strike blows at state plans. Therefore, we are considering how to take new measures to strengthen planned management of the national economy. In taking new measures, we do not mean to resort once more to purely administrative means in managing the economy, but to gradually more often use economic means in managing the economy with the development of the work of readjustment. Only in this way can the enthusiasm of localities and enterprises conform with state plans and the overall interests of the state. If we can achieve this, we can further enliven the economy.

In our planned management of the national economy in the past 30 years, we have been correct in some aspects and have shortcomings in others. We have been correct in strictly controlling the scale and orientation of economic construction. The people's livelihood has to be gradually improved and the extent of improvement has been controlled in a planned way. All arrangements for major construction items and the production and distribution of major products have been brought into the orbit of state plans. In these aspects, we have slackened our work since we extended the decision-making power of localities and enterprises. This has affected the readjustment of the national economy. From now on, we should use control more strictly. Our shortcomings are that we have depended solely on administrative means and have not been good at using economic means, such as using the price policy, the tax policy, the policy of bank credits and other economic levers to ensure the fulfillment of state plans. It is impossible for our state plans to completely reflect the needs of the market. There are tens of thousands of small commodities which cannot be brought into the orbit of state plans. They can only be regulated by means of market mechanism. If any plan for managing products is not in conformity with the needs of the market, it should also be readjusted within a certain scope. Therefore, in 1979, we put forth the principle of the combination of regulation by planning mechanism with regulation by market mechanism in the national economy. We can rely mainly on regulation by planning mechanism while at the same time paying full attention to the role of regulation by market mechanism. This principle of reform has undoubtedly played a positive role in enlivening the economy in the past 3 years.

In order to enliven the economy, we have gradually extended the decisionmaking power of localities and enterprises and have implemented the system of dividing financial income and profits of enterprises. The extension of decisionmaking power has played an important role in bringing into play the enthusiasm of localities and enterprises. However, our reform of the economic levers, such as the price and tax systems, has failed to keep pace with the changing situation and to guide localities and enterprises to develop along the course charted by state plans. They have often violated state plans for their own interests. Under these circumstances, we can only strengthen guidance by planning and administrative management over some trades and professions and some products, that is to say, we have considerably relied on administrative measures to ensure the fulfillment of state plans. There, recently we have changed our formulation as follows: "It is imperative to practice the planned economy on the basis of the system of ownership by the whole people and at the same time bring into play the supplementary role of regulation by market mechanism."

In the past, we often confused regulation by administrative means with regulation by planning, and regulation by economic means with regulation by market mechanism. Consequently, in planned management, the combination of administrative means and economic means was expressed as the combination of regulation by planning and regulation by market mechanism. In this sense, the meaning that regulation by planning is the dominant factor and market regulation a supplement will be understood as using regulation by administrative means as the dominant factor and using regulation by economic means as a supplement. Obviously, this is not correct. Even regulation by administrative means has to use objective economic laws. Therefore, in an article which I wrote recently, I have put using economic means to realize state plans within the range of planned management and have narrowed the meaning of regulation by market mechanism. Only production and circulation which are not brought into the orbits of state plans are regarded as regulation by market mechanism. I think this way of understanding conforms better with reality.

Some comrades do not agree with this change and hold that market mechanism has its broader and narrower sense. Market mechanism in its broader sense may include regulation by planning which is realized by means of economic levers. Many foreign economists also use the term regulation by market mechanism in this meaning. Thus, our planned economy is the combination of regulation by planning and regulation by market mechanism. This formulation may still be used. This question is open to free discussion and I do not insist on my own view.

Before the readjustment of the national economy is completed, our planned economy still has to relatively more often use administrative means (instructional planning) and there is still considerable restriction in using economic means for regulation (mandatory planning). After the readjustment is completed, our planned management will gradually use less administrative means and more economic means. Of course, it is still necessary to use administrative means within a certain scope and instructional planning remains useful. In regard to regulation by market mechanism of small commodities which are not brought into the orbit of state plans, since the number of these small commodities is tens of thousands, it is impossible to bring them into the orbit of state plans and as they are indispensable in the people's daily life, this should not be reduced by should be expanded appropriately over a considerably long period of time. After expanding regulation by market mechanism, we must respectively strengthen market management. This does not need much explanation.

There is a more obvious change in the formulation of the socialist economy. Some articles in the past termed the socialist economy as a commodity economy under the guidance of state planning or a planned commodity economy. It now seems that this is not an accurate formulation. Our idea is to change it into a planned economy of commodity production and commodity exchange on the basis of the system of public ownership of the means of production. Commodity production and commodity exchange extensively exist in the socialist society. In this sense, we may also call it a commodity economy.

However, the most important feature of the socialist economy is not the commodity economy but the planned economy on the basis of the public ownership of the means of production. If we regard the commodity economy as the most important feature of the socialist economy, we cannot distinguish it from the capitalist economy. Of course, when we stress that planned economy is the more important feature of the socialist economy, we cannot deny the inevitable existence of commodity production and commodity exchange in the socialist society. Nor can we do away with regulation by market mechanism of tens of thousands of small commodities which cannot be managed by state plans. Much less do we mean that when we practice planned economy we can discard some laws which are applicable in the commodity economy, such as the law of value. The difference is that we consciously use the law of value to realize state plans. With the exception of small commodities which are not brought into the orbit of state plans, we do not allow the law of value to regulate spontaneously.

The commodity economy of the socialist society and the commodity economy of the capitalist society have many common aspects. Both have to follow the law of value in carrying out exchange. But they are different in nature. The commodity economy of the capitalist society is a capitalist commodity economy which is based on the private ownership of the means of production. The capitalists and capitalist groups compete with each other and therefore the law of value often plays its role of regulation spontaneously. The commodity economy of the socialist society is a socialist commodity economy which is based on the public ownership of the means of production. The state can practice planned management of the national economy and therefore we can conscientiously use the law of value to realize state plans. But this only means that we have the possibility of using the law of value consciously. In practice, we are still not good at using the law of value, that is to say, we are not good at using economic levers. Consequently, after extending the decisionmaking power of localities and enterprises, phenomena of confusion such as blind production and redundant construction have occurred. In view of the fact that price readjustment and reforms of the tax system cannot keep pace with the situation, we can only temporarily slow down the speed of structural reforms. At present, it is still necessary to strengthen leadership by planning and administrative management. This does not mean that we have changed the orientation of our structural reforms. We have only adjusted the steps in our reforms to suit the present situation.

Some friends may suspect that China has gone to extremes in the past in stressing the role of commodities and market and that it is going to take the beaten track. This is not so. We still have to develop commodity production and commodity exchange and therefore still must learn how to make better use of the market role. In this respect, we have not done too much in the past; in fact, we have done very little. We stress the necessity of using economic levers such as pricing, tax revenue and banks to guide enterprises to observe state plans. This is still necessary. Our shortcomings in the past 3 years are not that we have overstressed economic levers but that we have talked much but done little, which has caused a lot of difficulties in our reforms. If we are not good at using economic levers to ensure the fulfillment of state plans and the planned and proportionate development of the national economy, it will be impossible for us to expand the decisionmaking power of localities and enterprises and to further enliven the economy.

Reforms of the economic management system (including price readjustment) can be smoothly carried out only if the national economy is operating normally. As a result of our "leftist" errors which lasted for quite a long period of time and the decade of turmoil of the "Great Cultural Revolution," the proportion of our national economy was seriously upset. This has also caused many difficulties in our reforms of the economic management system. After 3 years' readjustment, in particular the further readjustment carried out last year, our national economy has embarked on a road of healthy development, the people's livelihood has been markedly improved, the financial income basically balances with the financial expenditure and prices are basically stable. In the first quarter of this year, the situation of economic development and finance was much better than expected. This has created favorable conditions for us to carry out further reforms of the economic system.

In short, China's policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy will never be changed. Owing to the fact that, in the economic policy of the last 30 years, this has been a very great turn, we are bound to encounter a lot of new problems and difficulties in implementing this new principle. The specific measures we have adopted in implementing this new principle should also be studied in the course of practice and readjusted according to need. The formulation of our principle for reforming the economic system should also be changed gradually to make it more accurate and perfect and thus enable all people to be clear about the orientation of their advance.

The above-mentioned question is still under heated discussion at present. I have put forth my personal view for our friends' reference.

NEED FOR ATTENTION TO CONSUMPTION GROWTH CITED

[Article from JINGJIXUE DONGTAI [TRENDS IN ECONOMIC STUDIES] No 6: "We Must Pay Particular Attention to Consumption Growth"]

[Text] The economic circles in the capital hold that the major question in national income and distribution at present is prominently reflected in the fact that planning for national income and distribution has obviously weakened in the past few years. This is mainly manifested in: 1) The portion of national income which can be used by the state in a centralized manner (that is, financial income) has been decreasing. Consequently, the state's capacity in taking overall consideration and making all-round arrangements for economic construction and the people's livelihood is greatly reduced. Our country's financial income accounted for 37.2 percent of the national income in 1978, 31.9 percent in 1979, 29.6 percent in 1980 and 27.4 percent in 1981. 2) Consumption funds have repeatedly exceeded the planned amounts, resulting in overdistribution. This has given rise to an imbalance in national income, production and distribution. After the problem of excessive accumulation was relatively resolved in 1981, the problem of overspending became even more prominent. Overspending is mainly reflected in the rise of the people's livelihood exceeding the state's financial capacity and in the growth of consumption demands exceeding the actual supplies of consumable goods. Some comrades hold that the problem of overspending has accumulated over the past few years. The amount of consumption planned for improving the livelihood of the workers, staff members and peasants in the past 3 years has already been relatively excessive and this amount has been exceeded again and again. The growth rate of the average wage of staff members and workers has far exceeded the growth rate of production and the growth rate of labor productivity. In redistribution by means of prices and taxes, an additional portion of the national income has again been transferred to the peasants. Because of breakthroughs in the total amount of wages paid and bonuses awarded and the large increase in the peasnats' income, the consumption funds have increased by more than 96 billion yuan in the past 3 years, which is 10 billion yuan more than the increase in the national income in the same period.

At present, we should pay particular attention to overspending as a result of bonuses, social welfare, subsidies, price increases, negotiated pricing and subsidies for agricultural and sideline products. We should protect rational vested interests and readjust irrational ones according to the "three considerations" principle.

USE OF 'ERRONEOUS' ECONOMIC TERMS NOTED

[Article from ZHONGGUO JINGJI WENTI [CHINESE ECONOMIC ISSUES] No 3: "Jiang Xuemo Holds That Expressions Such as 'State Intervention" Are Erroneous"]

[Text] In an article entitled "It Is Necessary To Correct Leftist Mistakes and Guard Against Rightist Ones," Jiang Xuemo said: expressions such as "state intervention in economy," "beneficial cycle" and "vicious cycle" are reflection of the laws of relations and movements of the capitalist economy and it is quite improper to use them to analyze the socialist economy.

In the capitalist economy, which is based on private ownership, an enterprise or a capitalist group is an independent kingdom. The world economic crisis which began in 1929 compelled the bourgeois countries to adopt various measures to influence the activities of private enterprises. This is regarded as an encroachment of external forces on capital and is called "state intervention." Intervention means meddling by external forces. In the socialist economy, a socialist state is not an external force. It possesses and manages on behalf of all the people of the country the means of production that belongs to all the people of the country. Therefore, it is obviously wrong to call management of the national economy by a socialist state "intervention."

The expressions "beneficial cycle" and "vicious cycle" have evolved from "commercial cycle," which was coined by bourgeois economists to replace the term economic crisis. They try to avoid using the term economic crisis in the same way as Ah Q avoided using the world "bald" and used the word "light" instead. If there are mistakes in the economic policies of a socialist state, its economic development will also suffer but this is not something inevitable and is not a result of the system itself. Nor will they be repeated periodically. Therefore, it is undoubtedly very improper for some comrades to say that we should also "avoid a vicious cycle and bring about a beneficial cycle" in analyzing our country's economy.

CPPCC REVEALS MIDDLE-AGED INTELLECTUALS' PLIGHT

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- In his report on an investigation of the conditions of middle-aged intellectuals at a 12 July work meeting of CPPCC National Committee Vice Chairmen, Sa Kongliao, standing committee member and deputy secretary general of the CPPCC National Committee, said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the policy with regard to intellectuals has been implemented step by step.

However, a serious problem at present is the poor working and living conditions of middle-aged intellectuals. If this situation remains unchanged, it's inevitable that our cause will be adversely affected.

To investigate and find out about the implementation of the policy toward intellectuals, the CPPCC National Committee sent an investigation team composed of Standing Committee members Sa Kongliao, Wu Liangping, Yang Fangzhi, Shen Qizhen and Qian Weichang, members Shan Shiyuan and Zheng Xiaoxie and deputy leader of the urban construction group Tong Zheng, to Shanghai, Zhejiang, Jiangsu and Shandong in mid-May of this year on a 1 and 1/2 month investigation tour.

Sa Kongliao said: After the investigation in the three provinces and one city, the general impression is that the policy toward intellectuals has been implemented step by step since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. Generally speaking, problems concerning old intellectuals have been solved relatively well, but the working and living conditions of middle-aged intellectuals remain poor. At present, however, four problems are more outstanding. First, wages are too low. The middle-age intellectuals are roughly in their 40's or 50's, and their wages are between 60 and 70 yuan. Second, living conditions are poor. In Shanghai, Nanjing and Hangzhou, many middle-aged intellectuals in colleges, universities and scientific research units are living in cramped quarters. In more cases husband, wife and children share one table. Many men begin to prepare for class only after their wives and children have gone to bed. Some must go to their offices in the evenings to work overtime. All this is taking a toll on their health and performance. Third, they are generally in poor health. Fourth, they lack opportunities for furthering their studies and their professional level can barely improve.

Sa Kongliao said: At present there are 350,000 intellectuals working in Shanghai City, 230,000 or 70 percent of whom are middle aged. The proportion is approximately the same in other provinces and cities.

Sa Kongliao held: To further implement the policy toward intellectuals and, especially, to solve the middle-age intellectuals' difficulties, it is imperative to continue to overcome the "left" influence in dealing with intellectuals and suitably improve the middle-age intellectuals' working and living conditions. It is also necessary to suitable change the "unit ownership" of cadres and increase the exchange of competent personnel.

Wu Liangping, Yang Fangzhi and Qian Weichang, also members of the investigation team, made supplementary remarks at the meeting.

Vice Chairmen Liu Lantao, Lu Dingyi, Xu Deheng, Kang Keqing, Ji Fang, Zhou Jianren, Hu Ziang, Xiao Ke, Qian Changzhao and Dong Qiwu, who were present at the meeting, held that the intellectuals have played an important role in China's protracted revolution and construction causes and that large numbers of intellectuals are needed even more in the ongoing socialist modernization drive. Our intellectuals are not too numerous, but too few. They held that unless the existing difficulties regarding middle-age intellectuals are solved, they will adversely affect the progress of our cause at present and in the future. Some said middle-age intellectuals are our valuable wealth. The solution to middle-age intellectuals' problems is the most urgently needed investment in trained manpower, the capital construction of capital constructions. Although our country is still poor, we should strive to solve some problems for middle-age intellectuals step by step as far as conditions permit.

HENAN PARTY MEMBERS MAKE SELF-APPRAISAL

[Text] The party branch of the Liuzhuang production brigade, Qiliying commune, Xinxiang County, Henan Province, organized party members to restudy their applications for party membership. Recalling their determination and pledges at the time of their admission to the party and comparing these with their thinking, participation in productive labor, and so forth, the party members each wrote a self-appraisal and carried out criticism and self-criticism. Many party members took the initiative to ask for opinions from households they were associated with. Some party members held family meetings and subjected themselves to a joint ideological hearing.

After he became a deputy production team leader, (Liu Huagao), a new party member, for a time neglected to take the lead in participating in productive labor. After restudying his application for party membership, he felt deep shame and compunction. During the busy season of summer planting, harvesting and field management this year, he worked from early morning till late in the evening every day, eagerly did the hardest and dirtiest jobs and led commune members in fulfilling the production team's tasks 7 days ahead of time.

SCHOLARS DISCUSS DRAFT REVISED PRC CONSTITUTION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- At a discussion meeting on the draft of the revised constitution recently held in Beijing, some experts in political science and jurisprudence seriously studied the draft and actively made suggestions on further revision.

The participants pointed out: This draft of the revised constitution is better than the three constitutions adopted since the founding of the People's Republic. In contents, it upholds the four basic principles and correctly sums up both positive and negative experience gained in the more than three decades since the founding of the People's Republic. In its composition and the wording of its articles, the draft is perfect, well organized, accurate and standardized.

During their exchange of views on the revision, they emphatically discussed the question of how to safeguard the National People's Congress as the highest organ of state legislation and power.

They pointed out that in light of China's actual situation, it is necessary to increase the power of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. The draft of the revised constitution stipulates that when the National People's Congress is not in session, its Standing Committee has the power to enact ordinary laws, partially amend the basic laws enacted by the National People's Congress and decide on the appointment and removal of members of the State Council. At the same time, however, it is also necessary to protect the supreme powers of the National People's Congress, more explicitly define the functions and powers of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and prevent the supreme powers of the National People's Congress from being weakened or partially taken away. For instance, the constitution stipulates that any changes made by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress to things approved by the National People's Congress must be submitted to the next session of the National People's Congress for examination and confirmation; otherwise, the changes shall not remain valid.

At the discussion meeting, which lasted 2 and 1/2 days, the members of the board of directors of the Chinese Society of Political Science in Beijing and the experts who attended the meeting on invitation also discussed other questions on the draft of the revised constitution and made suggestions. For instance, they discussed the question of whether deputies to the National People's Congress representing various professions should be elected in addition to those representing geographic regions; the question concerning the functions andpowers of the Central Military Commission and its relations with the State Council; the question concerning concurrent jobs held by the members of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; the question on the functions and powers of national autonomous regions' organs; and the question concerning the relations between the State Council and provincial-level governments.

More than 50 persons attended the meeting. They included Qian Duansheng, honorary president of the Chinese Society of Political Science; Li Tiezheng, Shi Zhe, Wu Qiyu, Zheng Siyuan and Zeng Bingjun, advisors to the society; Zhand Youyu, president of the society; Du Renzhi and Li Zhengwen, vice president of the society; Du Ruyi, Yun Guang, Yu Haocheng, Wu Jialin, Qiu Guodong, Luo Jinglan and Yan Jiaqi, standing members of the board of directors of the society.

GEOLOGY, MINERALS CHIEFS HOLD NATIONAL MEETING

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 Jul (XINHUA) -- The national report meeting of geological and minerals bureau directors, which ended in Beijing today, pointed out that protection of mineral resources is an important task of geological and minerals departments.

The meeting was called by the Ministry of Geology and Minerals. Progress in readjusting geological work over the past 3 years was summed up at the meeting, and goals were set for further readjustment. The meeting discussed comprehensively readjusting the grassroots units of geological and minerals departments and stressed that readjustment should be focused on increasing geological returns and economic and social benefits. The meeting pointed out that the former Ministry of Geology was only responsible for general survey and exploration of mineral resources. Not long ago, the State Council decided to change the name of the ministry to the Ministry of Geology and Minerals, which means that in addition to its original tasks the ministry will also supervise the rational exploitation, use and protection of all the country's mineral resources. This is of great significance toward strengthening the overall management of our country's mineral resources.

For the protection of mineral resources, the meeting proposed several measures: first, it is hoped that local party committees and governments will strengthen leadership over mining production and mineral resources protection work.

Second, it is necessary to vigorously strengthen propaganda and education on protecting mineral resources. Third, the state will soon promulgate the "mineral resources law." As supervisory and enforcement units, the geological and minerals departments should coordinate with other relevant units and judicial organs to actively enforce the law. Serious cases of destruction of mineral resources must be dealt with according to law. Fourth, the ministry of Geology and Minerals and the Provincial, municipal and autonomous regional geological and minerals bureaus should set up mineral exploitation administrative organs to exercise unified supervision and management of rational exploitation and utilization of mineral resources.

The meeting also exchanged information and initial experience in dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field.

RENMIN RIBAO ON RURAL WATER CONSERVATION

[Commentator's article: "Properly Manage and Use Existing Farmland Water Conservation Projects"]

[Text] Since the populatization of the production responsibility system in the rural areas, and especially in those localities which have implemented the system of assigning the land to each household in exchange for fixed levies and fixing output quotas on the basis of households, the use of water on farmland has in most cases been changed from taking the production team as the unit to taking the many thousands of households as units. Under these new conditions, the satisfactory management anduse of existing water conservation projects and enabling irrigation to produce its best results is an important work item that will ensure the smooth carrying out of agricultural production.

Water conservation constitutes an important precondition for the development of agriculture. Since liberation, farmland water conservation in our country has developed greatly and the irrigated area has reached 700 million mu. These farmland water conservation installations have had an enormous effect on increasing agricultural production. Now that the responsibility system has been popularized in the rural areas, they have, more than ever, become production methods of direct concern to and actively used by the peasants. If we do not manage and use them well, not only will they not be able to produce their best results, but they will also create water conservation disputes, affecting production and dampening the enthusiasm of the peasants. At present, in some localities, management of existing water conservation projects has slackened. Some water conservation projects have been in a state of disrepair for a long time. Some are incapable of being built into complete sets. Some are left idle or even sabotaged. Some management systems have broken down entirely, with the result that water has not been collected in time, the efficiency of the water supply has been low and there have been many contradictions in the use of water. The vast numbers of peasants have made pressing demands on us to adopt positive measures to improve this situation.

Unified leadership and unified management constitute a most important problem in doing a good job of water conservation management. As for the water conservation installations in our country at present, apart from the shallow wells, water pits and small reservoirs constructed and used by the commune members themselves, most projects are beneficial to a team, a commune, one county or several counties. Water usage will also be concentrated in one agricultural season. We therefore need unified leadership and unified management, otherwise, not only will the benefits of water conservation installations be reduced, causing a wast of water resources, but it will also give rise to water conservation disputes, which will affect the stable development of agricultural production. It is only by unifying leadership and management that we can pay attention to water usage at both the upper and lower reaches of the river and water usage at neighboring villages, so as to ensure that the many thousands of households will benefit. Even within a production team, water conservation must be managed in a unified way. Only then will the water flow unimpeded and be put to optimal use.

Consequently, no matter what form of the agricultural production responsibility system we adopt, we should adhere to the publicly-owned nature of water conservation installations and preserve the integrity of irrigation installations. We must not share them out among ourselves or appropriate them at will, and even less sabotage them. Every reservoir, well and irrigation channel must have a unified management body and personnel and a full set of rules and regulations. We must conscientiously maintain the integrity of water conservation installations and speed up the benefits of water conservation.

With the implementation of a unified management system for water conservation, we must establish a corresponding management responsibility system and make it form an important part of the agricultural production responsibility system. This is an essential measure for enabling water conservation installations to achieve their best results. It is also the "breakthrough" for shifting the focal point of water conservation work to management. Cultivating crops and "eating from a big pot" will not do. Neither will it do to carry out water conservation and "drink from a big mug." We must set up a water conservation management responsibility system, implement specialist contracting methods, and lay down the duties, limits of powers and remuneration of water conservation management personnel, so that they have responsibilities, powers, rights, rewards and punishments. By so doing, we will be directing their enthusiasm toward the maintenance of project safety, the quest for irrigation results, the comprehensive utilization of water conservation resources and so forth. At the same time, we must, in respect of water-consuming units and agricultural households, fix times, water volume and water charges and fix the necessary repair tasks according to the size of the area benefited. In this way, we will be able to pool our efforts and thoroughly manage and use well our existing water conservation projects.

At present, there are many varieties of the farmland water conservation management responsibility system being implemented in the various localities. As for larger water conservation projects and irrigation areas spanning counties, communes and teams, we are implementing a system of management at different levels. Management bodies and post responsibility systems are established by the higher levels. As far as the water conservation installations for a commune or a team are concerned, we are implementing forms of the responsibility system such as comprehensive contracting, specialist contracting, contracting for individual projects, and assigning contracts in an overall way. Each of the various different forms of the management responsibility system has its own field to which it is suited. For instance, comprehensive contracting is mostly used in the case of small-scale reservoirs, and large pumping stations and certain project installations with quite a number of management items. Specialist contracting is mostly used in the case of small-scale water conservation projects that have no special management bodies. The form of the agricultural production responsibility system varies with the locality. So do the water conservation installations. The form of the water conservation management responsibility system is not confined to one type. We must encourage the adoption of measures to suit local conditions and the varying of forms and flexibility of application, so as to facilitate production. All localities must conscientiously investigate and study, proceed from reality and implement a water conservation management responsibility system that is favorable to the development of agricultural production in the locality. Furthermore, they must adopt the method of signing contracts, stabilize the responsibility system, ensure prompt repairs, dredging, water collection and water release, utilize water scientifically and economize on water consumption.

Strengthening the building of the grassroots water conservation ranks is an important link in the good management of water conservation. Our country's grassroots water conservation ranks are ill-suited to the demands of water conservation management work. According to statistics, in the country as a whole, over 50 percent of the communes do not have a water conservation station and quite a few water conservation installations are still in such a state that "management at the prefectural and county levels is fine, but the commune is cut off." There are, in the whole country, only 110,000 water conservation personnel in the communes. On average, that means less than two people per commune.

The scientific and technological level of many water conservation management personnel is not high and they are incompetent in their work. Quite a few people, because of poor work and living conditions, cannot keep their minds on their work. Consequently, we must quickly set up and perfect our commune water conservation stations, train sufficient water conservation personnel, grasp training work well, raise their professional level, improve their working conditions and show concern for their everyday difficulties. Once the grassroots water conservation ranks in the rural areas have been replenished and their quality raised, water conservation management will have been truly implemented and water conservation will be run better and better.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES EMULATING SINGER'S WORK STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Remember in the First Place That 'I Am a Communist'"]

Soprano singer Comrade Yu Shuzhen has recently been conferred the title "model artist for spiritual beauty." Our literary and art workers, in particular those who are party members, must emulate her work style, moral character and spirit.

In his talk "On Two Tendencies Among the Literary and Art Workers of Our Party," Comrade Chen Yun pointed out: Literary and art workers of our party should in the first place consider themselves as ordinary party members. He also warned the literary and art workers not to seek personal privileges and not to be arrogant. In this aspect, Comrade Yu Shuzhen has set an example. The main thing that merits our emulation of her is that she always remembered in the first place that "I am a Communist Party member," setting strict demands on herself with the criteria of a party member. By thinking of herself as a literary and art worker of our party, she adheres to the orientation that literature and art must serve the people and society, insists on singing songs that are sound in words and tone as well as an inspiration to people, and frequently goes to factories, the rural areas and army units to sing for the masses of people. By thinking of herself as being brought up by the party and the people, she adopts a correct attitude toward her talents, does not adopt the airs of a singer and seeks no privileges. With a view toward promoting the socialist literary and art cause, she gives no thought to personal fame and gain, vigorously trains young singers and enthusiastically helps them to catch up with and even surpass her. Both in work and in life, Comrade Yu Shuzhen is characterized by the noble work style of a Communist Party member. This helps her attain a lofty realm of thought.

It is absolutely necessary for our literary and art workers, in particular those who are party members, to learn from the spirit of Comrade Yu Shuzhen. The literary and art workers who are party members should keep in mind what the party requires of a Communist Party member in work and life. They must always think whether what they are saying and doing is in accord with the party's interests. As an ordinary party member, they must incessantly raise their communist awareness, heighten party spirit, maintain an upright work style, abide by party discipline and accurately implement the party's line, principles and policies in an all-round way. They should not be exceptional because they are writers or artists. Furthermore, they should not think they are a cut above others, and should not seek personal privileges from the party just because they are well known because of their artistic attainments. The four basic principles are fundamental principles which the whole party from top to bottom must adhere to. As "spiritual engineers of mankind," the party member writers and artists should set a much better example and take the initiative in upholding and protecting the four basic principles, but should not run counter to or impair them.

Since the smashing of the "gang of four," under the guidance of the line of the party's third plenary session, most of the literary and art workers who stick to the orientation that literature and art must serve the people and society and are strict with themselves, have made their contributions to the party and the people. Many of them do as well as Comrade Yu Shuzhen does. Nevertheless, among literary and art workers who are party members, a few comrades fail to put themselves as party members in a correct relationship to literary and art workers.

Some individuals even forget that they are Communist Party members and forget their duties of abiding by party discipline and obeying party leadership. Some comrades swell with pride when they achieve some small success and consider themselves privileged persons. They are not willing to keep themselves within the bonds of party discipline. They not only turn a deaf ear to criticism on their shortcomings and mistakes, but also refuse to make self-criticism. Moreover, some comrades long for fame and gain. All these evil tendencies are not worthy of a Communist Party member. All party member literary workers should resolutely combat such an unhealthy ideology and work style. Comrades who have been contaminated with the filthy trends should face them squarely and break with them.

Of course, Comrade Yu Shuzhen is not the acme of perfection. She has her defects. But it is of utmost importance that her spirit is highly commendable, which we should learn from. What Yu Shuzhen does is not particular but "common." But how can she do these ordinary things and many of our comrades cannot? This is a question which we should think over. If all of us are able to absorb something spiritual from her excellent deeds, then it will encourage healthy trends and check unhealthy ones as well as stimulate the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SHANGHAI PETROCHEMICAL PLANT

[Article by Chen Jinhua [7115 6930 5478], deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CCP Committee and Shanghai vice mayor: "Opening Up a New Way To Produce Good Investment Results -- Basic Experience of Shanghai Petrochemical General Plant in the Last 10 Years Since its Establishment" -- passages capitalized published in boldface]

[Text] By June this year, 10 whole years will have passed since the start of construction of the Shanghai petrochemical general plant in the summer of 1972. Today, a satellite city has developed around the modern petrochemical complex which has arisen on former wasteland. In the last 10 years, the state has invested a total of 2.18 billion yuan in the phase one project of this complex. And in the same period, the total profit and tax revenue which the whole complex has handed over to the state amounts to 2.89 billion yuan. In other words, the plant managed to make up the total investment within 4-odd years. [as published] While the total industrial output value has amounted to 7.07 billion yuan, the plant has produced 185,000 tons of orlon fiber, 149,000 tons of vinylon fiber, more than 62,000 tons of dacron fiber, more than 334,000 tons of high-pressure polyethylene, and 1,460,000 tons of various other chemical industrial products such as acetic acid and so on; of which the exported portion has derived foreign exchange revenue of more than $50 million. Phase two of the project of this plant, started in July 1980, was larger in scale and also more advanced both in terms of equipment and technology than phase one. Mainly producing polyester, phase two has an annual output capacity of 200,000 tons. So, with the two phases completed, the plant can produce more than 300,000 tons of synthetic fiber every year. It is the largest chemical fiber production base in our country at present.

The leading comrades of the central authorities have instructed us to conscientiously sum up the experience obtained in the construction of the Shanghai petrochemical general plant. On the occasion of the 10th anniversary of this plant, the summation of its experience, both positive and negative, will be of great significance to opening up a new way to produce good investment results in the "four modernization" construction in accordance with our national conditions.

1. THE KEY LINK TO BUILDING A PLANT WELL IS TO HAVE A LEADING GROUP WHICH IS ENTHUSIASTIC IN THE SOCIALIST MODERNIZATION CAUSE, STICKS TO THE PARTY'S POLITICAL LINE, IS AMBITIOUS IN WORK, AND STABLE IN ORGANIZATION.

Generally speaking, old revolutionary cadres are playing leading roles in the leading body of the petrochemical plant. Loyal to our party's socialist cause, they are conscientiously carrying out the party's line, principles and policies.

They form a united and coordinated collective with a great fighting capacity, a relatively high sense of responsibility and a strong devotion to their work. The leading bodies of the general plant and its branch plants consist of members recruited from various departments, companies and plants throughout the city. Because the plant has emphasized the unity of leading bodies and opposed factionalism, the unity in most units including the construction preparation unit, the designing unit. the civil engineering and construction unit, the equipment installation unit. contractors and so on, is rather good. As different units can join together to deliberate necessary measures and support each other on their own initiative when facing problems, they have managed to keep in step in the construction work. Most people in these units were not specialized in petrochemical work before, but their devotion to work, their enthusiasm in mastering techniques and their practical and realistic attitude have counteracted their weakness in the specialization. Regarding the construction of a modern enterprise as their chance to practice, they have been actively engaged in negotiations, inspection of equipment, construction and installation, and trial operation of equipment. They have attended training courses as well as personally operated equipment; they have tried hard to become familiar with the equipment, to understand the technical requirements and to grasp the procedures of production. Now, this plant possesses 17 senior engineers, 845 engineers, 542 technicians and 9,813 technical workers, who have become the backbone personnel in the operation of the existing equipment and the construction of the phase two project.

The construction and management of modern enterprises require us to maintain the organizational stability and continuity of the enterprises' leading bodies, in particular the groups of major responsible people. While those who had arisen by rebelling were cleared away, the principal members of the leading body of the Shanghai petrochemical general plant, in particular those old cadres with rich experiences, have remained at their posts during the whole construction period -- they have experienced the stage of construction preparation, the completion of the basic construction and the official operation of the plant. With an ardent love for their cause, they "take the plant as their own home," setting themselves as examples for new men, cultivating middle-aged and young cadres and educating them to love their own jobs and to play more important roles.

2. THE PRINCIPLE OF SELF-RELIANCE MUST STILL BE UPHELD WHEN ADVANCED TECHNOLOGIES ARE IMPORTED; THE MORE MODERNIZED AN ENTERPRISE IS, THE MORE IT NEEDS TO UPHOLD THE SPIRIT OF BUILDING AN ENTERPRISE THROUGH ARDUOUS EFFORT.

The Shanghai petrochemical general plant possesses 18 large installations. Nine of them were imported from abroad, and the rest, including the orlon, vinylon and dacron spinning equipment, and the whole public utilities project, were built with domestically produced equipment and materials. In terms of their weight, domestically produced equipment accounts for more than half of the total equipment of the plant. At the same time, the general layout and the civil engineering design of the whole plant, except the technological design of the imported equipment, was completed by domestic units.

Based on the domestic resources and upholding the principle of self-reliance, we cannot only save a large amount of foreign exchange; but also, more significantly, enhance the domestic production capability, and thus step up the development and improvement of the machine building industry at home as well as save time in the construction of the whole project. The orlon spinning machine is a major productive part of the complete set of equipment. Thanks to the cooperation of all coordinated plants, all the 12 production lines of the orlon spinning machine were delivered in time for installation. There were various malfunctions at the initial stage of the trial operation of the equipment. However, through persistent efforts, production has been put on the right course, the designed capacity of the equipment has been attained and surpassed, and the product quality has been increasingly improved. With satisfaction our workers said: "The domestically produced equipment is operating more and more smoothly."

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, in the new situation where we are expanding cooperation with foreign countries and stepping up exchanges in the technological and economic fields, this plant is continuing to give further play to the spirit of self-reliance. The technological and technical requirements of the dacron reeling equipment needed by the phase two project are high. And the required capacity for each staple fiber reeling production line was 15,000 tons per year. This meant that the plant had to take two large steps forward from the original conditions then available at home; and in fact, the degree of difficulty was remarkable. Under the unified leadership of the Ministry of Textile Industry and the municipal economic committee, this plant, together with some scientific research, design, equipment manufacturing, and dacron fiber production units in Shanghai and other fraternal regions, formed a collaborating group to develop new equipment. After a year or so of intensive work, all targets in the original plan were fulfilled or even overfulfilled. Practice showed that in the new situation of the implementation of the open-door principle, the better we give play to the spirit of self-reliance, the more prominent results can be achieved in cooperation with foreign countries, and the more rapidly we can foster our own technical personnel and continuously improve the level.

3. UNDER THE STATE'S UNIFIED PLANNING, MAKE FULL USE OF THE EXISTING MATERIAL AND TECHNICAL CONDITIONS OF THE OLD BASES AND OLD ENTERPRISES AND THE ECONOMIC RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THEM, AND TAKE THE INITIATIVE TO ACTIVELY PROMOTE VARIOUS FORMS OF MASS SOCIALIST COOPERATION.

The Shanghai petrochemical general plant is the product of mass socialist cooperation which manifests the superiority of our country's socialist system. There are mainly three forms of cooperation: 1) coordinated aid provided by relevant departments, committees, general bureaus and regions organized by the state, included in or excluded from the state plan, paid for or free. No matter which types of aid, all relevant departments and localities must regard the urgent needs of the state's key projects as their own needs, and do their best to fulfill them. In order to undertake the research tasks in dacron technology, the Dalian research institute of chemical fibers used its little and limited funds, which had originally been allocated to building dormitories, to develop the new technology. They have manifested a really lofty spirit of socialist cooperation. 2) Under unified planning, Shanghai Municipality has mobilized the existing departments and companies concerned to be engaged in the division of work and enter into various project contracts; these package deals included the recruitment of the staff of leading bodies, the deployment of backbone personnel, the training of a technical contingent, and logistics support. Such practices of contracting tasks in accordance with each one's specialities are favorable to mobilizing old bases and enterprises and giving free rein to their function. This is a form of cooperation with a higher degree of organization and better results. 3) Organize all non-contractor units in the city to engage in various cooperation projects on an individual project basis; integrate political mobilization with economic agreements and thus avoid bargaining. The above three forms of cooperation, complementing each other and helping each other forward, have created an organic relationship between the part and the whole, and between the region and the whole state; and have thus produced tremendous cooperative force.

4. INTERGRATE THE SHANGHAI PETROCHEMICAL GENERAL PLANT'S FAVORABLE MATERIAL CONDITIONS WITH THE SHANGHAI TEXTILE INDUSTRY'S FAVORABLE CONDITIONS FOR PROCESSING, REALIZE A COORDINATED PROCESS IN NEW PRODUCT DEVELOPMENT, AND STRIVE FOR THE OPTIMUM ECONOMIC RETURNS BY RATIONALLY UTILIZING RESOURCES AND BY ENHANCING THE TECHNICAL LEVEL OF PROCESSING.

Due to problems in equipment, technology, operation and management, the petrochemical general plant failed to bring production onto the right course at the beginning of the trial operation of the phase one project.

The quality of orlon and vinylon fiber produced in the trial operation was inferior, and the rates of seconds and rejects were high, and thus overstocking was considerable. In order to assist the petrochemical general plant in improving the reeling technology, the Shanghai No 17 state-run cotton textile mill, the Shanghai knitting factory and other units have been actively engaged in trial spinning and weaving, trying to find out the texture of fiber and its adaptability to spinning. Having worked hard for more than a year, they finally managed to put production onto the right course, and their products which had been unmarketable are now marketable. On this basis, they further cooperated with the Shanghai textile industry departments, developed new product series and improved production procedures ranging from synthetic fiber spinning to weaving designs, post-dyeing work and so on. The leading comrades of the central authorities have attached great importance to their scheme and strongly support them to open up new avenues.

The Shanghai petrochemical general plant is the largest integrated complex of multiple petrochemical fiber products in our country at present. This plant possesses superiority in advanced technology. As the largest textile industry base in our country, Shanghai has more than 400 natural fiber and chemical fiber processing plants, and has a relatively large technical contingent and favorable conditions for promoting cooperation. With the forces of these two groups joining together, Shanghai will be able to further rationalize the use of fiber resources and improve the technical level of processing. The result of this process will not be just a simple addition. It will surely create new and more conspicuous superiority, and thus give rise to the best economic returns.

5. THE CONSTRUCTION OF SATELLITE CITIES REQUIRES OVERALL PLANNING AND RATIONAL LAYOUT, SO THAT THEY CAN POSSESS THE COMPREHENSIVE FUNCTIONS OF SMALL TOWNS -- FAVORABLE CONDITIONS FOR PRODUCTION AS WELL AS CONVENIENCE IN DAILY LIVES.

The petrochemical plant is situated in Jinshanwei on the shore of Hangzhou Bay, 72 kilometers from Shanghai. The area ranging from here to Zhapu in Zhejiang Province was chosen by Dr Sun Yat-sen as the location for the "large part of the east" in his magnificent plan. The plant authorities have paid attention to making overall planning and a rational layout according to the requirement of a satellite city since the beginning of construction. In this satellite city there are dormitories, hospitals, sanatoriums, cinemas, small parks, cultural palace, stadia, a branch campus of a university, secondary schools, technical schools, primary schools, kindergartens, and various commercial and service facilities such as guest houses, restaurants, marketplaces and so on. Flowers and trees are grown everywhere in the plant, and there is a 300-meter wide green zone between the production section and the living quarters. The communications between the plant and downtown Shanghai, Zhejiang Province, Jiangsu Province and other major coastal ports throughout the country are maintained by railways, highways, the Huangpu Jiang Bridge, the Chenshan sea transportation pier, and other inland water transport piers. All these facilities effectively meet the laboring, studying, resting and entertainment needs of nearly 65,000 staff and workers and their families living in the city. In addition, as the rent and the cost of gas, water and so on are cheaper here than in central Shanghai, the living conditions of the satellite city are becoming more and more attractive. The construction of this plant has really provided valuable experience in the construction planning and management of satellite cities with comprehensive functions.

The several aspects mentioned above are common problems to be dealt with in capital construction projects. The Shanghai petrochemical plant did not handle all aspects very well and is still far from perfect. There are many shortcomings in ideological work, organizational construction and enterprise management. And the plant is still rather inferior to the advanced enterprises of the same type in the world in terms of technical and economic standards. Therefore, the Shanghai petrochemical general plant still has to conscientiously improve itself, open-mindedly listen to the opinions of various circles, learn from fraternal units and continue to make new and greater efforts.

TAX REVENUES UP -- Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- China collected industrial and commercial taxes amounting to 29,000 million yuan (renminbi) in the first six months of this year. This was 3,600 million yuan or 14 percent more than last year's like period, according to the Ministry of Finance. The taxes collected account for 50.7 percent of the 1982 target. Financial authorities said the increase was due to faster growth of industrial production in the first half of the year. Tax collecting departments strengthened management. GUANGDONG GROUP ON HIGHER EDUCATION PROBLEMS

[Report: "People's Deputies Put Forward Positive Proposals for Rapidly Improving the Backward State of Guangdong's Higher Education"]

[Text] A provincial people's deputies' inspection group on higher education, headed by provincial people's congress standing committee Vice Chairman Ou Mengjue, inspected 10 institutes including Zhongshan University in mid-June and listened to the views of a broad spectrum of the masses. The group has put forward positive proposals to the provincial CCP committee and people's government in order to rapidly improve the backward state of the province's higher education.

True Importance Must Be Attached

The inspection group held that the key to improving the backward state of higher education in Guangdong lies in the leadership. The current backwardness of higher education in the province is linked to the lack of importance given it by the party and government leadership at all levels. We hope that in the future the party and government departments at all levels will truly attach importance to "investment in brains." While promoting the building of "the two civilizations," they must make all-round arrangements with due consideration for all parties and put the running of higher education on their agenda. We propose that the provincial CCP committee hear periodic reports every year on the situation in higher education and provide still more support for this education. We hope that the first secretaries of the party committees at all levels will personally grasp education work. Relative stability should be maintained as regards the secretaries assigned responsibility for culture and education. The leading comrades assigned responsibility for planning, financial and economic work should put education in an important place on their agenda.

Expenditures Should Be Appropriately Increased

Guangdong has lagged far behind requirements in its education expenditures over the years, and this has seriously affected the development of teaching and scientific research. The inspection group held that expenditures and capital construction investment in higher education should be gradually increased each year. At present the state is in difficulties and cannot repay at once all the debts of the past, but at least "no new debts should be incurred and the old ones should be gradually repaid." This year the province has allocated too little expenditure and capital construction investment for higher education, and the old debts have not been repaid while new ones are being incurred. The inspection group therefore proposed that the provincial financial departments increase expenditures on higher education by at least 20 million yuan.

Worries in Daily Life Must Be Eased

The province has been mainly successful in implementing the policies on intellectuals since the third plenary session. The current outstanding problems are that there are too many worries for the teachers in their daily life; in particular, middle-aged teachers suffer "heavy burdens, low remuneration, fatigue in household tasks, and hardship in life." The inspection group held that apart from the problem of low salaries, which the province cannot solve itself, the departments concerned must do everything possible to solve these problems as far as possible. They should improve the teachers' housing conditions and the supply of water, electricity and nonstaple foodstuffs in the university areas and distribute gas stoves to the teachers. Special funds should be allocated from local finances to solve the problems of middle-aged teachers in expenses for books and materials and in providing the necessary subsidies.

Occupation of School Buildings, and Other Matters

The problem of occupation of university premises for other purposes is rather serious. Eight of the 10 institutes of higher education inspected by the group had unsolved problems of boundary disputes or occupation of premises for other purposes.

These problems seriously affect teaching and scientific research. The inspection group drew the attention of the departments in charge to urge the units concerned to rapidly return occupied school premises and land. The group hopes that the provincial people's congress standing committee will convene a consultative meeting to these problems, to be attended by provincial and municipal leaders concerned and urban planning department, in order to find a solution.

Shipai and Wushan in Guangzhou are cultural areas. However, their present status is that of a neighborhood subordinate to a suburban commune. Nonstaple foodstuff supplies, cultural life, primary and secondary education facilities and school systems and so on do not accord with the characteristics of cultural areas. As there is often a shortage of fixed-price nonstaple foodstuffs, many old teachers have to buy items at high prices in the rural trade markets. The cost of living for a typical family of equal size and living standards is about 10 yuan higher in the Shipai and Wushan areas then in the urban districts. The inspection group proposed that Wushan district be changed into a township [zhen 6966] and that it receive the same level of supplies as the urban districts; that special supplies be made available for the Hong Kong, Macao and Overseas Chinese students attending Jinan University; that a cinema be built; that postal services be improved and telegram facilities restored; that extra bus stops be provided; and that the primary school system be changed from 5 to 6 years.

GUANGDONG URGES STRENGTHENED CONTROL OF LABOR

HK130327 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 12 Jul 82

[Text] The Guangdong Provincial People's Government recently issued a circular demanding that enterprises and undertakings throughout the province seriously strengthen management of the labor force, straighten out the situation of worker employment that is not covered by the plan, and send those involved back to their original units. This is in order to improve production efficiency and economic returns in the province's enterprises and ensure good results in economic readjustment and restructuring.

At present a fairly large number of people are being employed outside the plans in the province, and there are more workers than needed. This reduces the enterprises' production efficiency and economic returns. The flow of large numbers of rural laborers into the towns also has a bad effect on agricultural production.

The provincial government circular pointed out: The leaders at all levels must regard sending back to their original units temporary workers from the rural areas as a major affair for correcting work style. The prefectures, municipalities and counties, and also the units subordinate to the central and provincial authorities and the PLA, must send back to their original units workers whose employment is not covered by the plan. This must be done in conjunction with straightening out the enterprises. The focus is on sending back those who have come from the rural areas. We must send back to the villages without exception all those people arbitrarily hired without the approval of labor departments at and above county level, especially newly recruited temporary workers from the rural areas since January 1981, together with worker-peasant personnel employed in state organs and prefectural and municipal enterprises and undertakings. It is also necessary to straighten out and send back worker-peasant personnel being employed in county enterprises and undertakings. Workers whose employment is not covered by the plan in closed or suspended units or overstaffed units that do not have enough to do must also in principle be sent back to their original units. Collective workers employed in units under all-people ownership should be sent down and organized into collective ownership units with independent accounting and sole responsibility for profit and loss. Rural construction and transport teams being used by urban industry and mining areas should also be straightened out and sent back to their original units.

The labor departments at all levels must regard this work as one of their main tasks for this year and next. The departments concerned should also actively coordinate and work together to do a good job in this work. Plans for sending these workers back to their original units must rapidly be worked out for the grassroots, a deadline must be set for completing them, and inspections must be carried out when the deadline comes. The province should strive to basically complete the task by the end of next year.

GUANGDONG PLA STRESSES ANTICORRUPTION EDUCATION

[Text] The CCP Committee of Guangdong Military District recently convened a meeting of CCP committee secretaries of large units to seriously look into the issue of strengthening ideological education for the units in resisting corruption and guarding against degeneracy. The meeting seriously analyzed the current grave corruption of the cadre ranks and pollution of the social atmosphere caused by criminal and illegal activities in the economic field and decided to get a thoroughly good grasp of education in preserving communist purity and opposing corruption and degeneracy. The meeting discussed and studied the following specific measures and views on strengthening education in opposing corruption and degeneracy:

1. Seriously organize the cadres and fighters to study the teachings of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong on opposing the corruption and degeneracy of party members, enhance the ideological level and political awareness of the party members, and continually improve their ideological immunity to corruption and degeneracy.

2. Make use of various means to conduct political education for the cadres and fighters in upholding the socialist road, loving the socialist motherland, and persistently regarding the interests and honor of the motherland as paramount, and in the party and government policies and decrees, so as to fundamentally enhance their socialist ideological awareness and concept of policy and discipline.

3. While striking at elements who commit serious economic crimes, it is necessary to do well in discovering and commending progressive typical examples who serve the people wholeheartedly, display the work style of arduous struggle and are honest in official dealings and in resisting corruption and degeneracy.

4. Carry out rectification of ideological style in the CCP committees and organs at and above regimental level and overcome various unhealthy trends so that the party committees will be made stronger and can bring into play their role as leadership cores and the party members' role as models and vanguards, and promote the fulfillment of all work tasks in the PLA and militia.

GUANGZHOU SCOTCHES RUMOR ABOUT BANK DEPOSITS

HK140457 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] In the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field, there have been some rumors recently to the effect that the banks and credit cooperatives will impose restrictions on withdrawing deposits. The rumors hold that deposits above a certain limit will be frozen and that the withdrawal above a certain limit must be approved beforehand. A responsible person of the provincial people's bank said that savings deposits are an important source of funds for our socialist construction. The increase of savings deposits will not only raise more funds for our country in its four modernizations drive, but will also help foster a social atmosphere characterized by thrift and hard work and help the masses manage their households in an industrious and economic way and improve their livelihood. Therefore, the party and the people's government have always carried out a policy of protecting and encouraging the people's savings deposits in this respect and the people's bank has always adhered to the principle of voluntary deposits, free withdrawal, payment of interest and maintaining secrecy. No encroachment on personal savings deposits by any unit or any individual is allowed. Savings offices of the people's bank at various places have resolutely implemented the principle of maintaining secrecy for the depositors. The recent rumors to the effect that the withdrawal of personal deposits will be limited to a certain amount and should be approved beforehand are entirely groundless and unbelievable.

GUANGDONG DISUCCCES SUMMER GRAIN PROCUREMENT

[Summary] The Guangdong provincial meeting on summer grain procurement closed on 2 July. The meeting analyzed the province's early crop production and made arrangements for procurement of summer grain.

The meeting held: Apart from certain areas where natural disasters have occurred, the early crops are growing well in many places. The per unit area yield is expected to increase over that of last year. However, due to natural disasters, the actual sown area of early crops has been reduced by some 1 million mu over that of last year and therefore early crop production is only expected to achieve last year's level. The provincial people's government has decided that this year's summer grain procurement tasks will be similar to last year's tasks, and that grain departments at all levels throughout the province must strive to fulfill their tasks.

"Wang Quanguo, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, spoke at the meeting. He stressed that party committees and governments at all levels must strengthen leadership and actively take effective measures to ensure the completion of the summer grain procurement tasks. Under the premise of fulfilling the plan's grain procurement and sales tasks, grain departments must procure and sell grain at negotiated prices. It is necessary to strengthen market management and strike blows at speculative activities of selling grain or grain coupons at high prices." Comrade Wang Quanguo added that in the course of fulfilling grain procurement quotas, it is necessary to carry out education in handling the interests of the state, the collective and the individual among the grassroots cadres in the rural areas. It is necessary to carry out education in patriotism among the broad masses of peasants, and encourage them to sell more grain to the state in order to contribute to the four modernizations drive.

[Summary] This morning the Nanning Municipal CCP Committee and the municipal people's government held a mobilization rally in the Workers' Theater of the Workers' Cultural Palace on tidying up social order. The rally called on all people throughout the municipality to go into action and to resolutely struggle against all criminal activities.

In his report, he pointed out that on the whole, Nanning's social order situation has gradually become stable. Since the beginning of this year, the municipality has made new progress in tidying up social order. He said: "However, some problems still exist in current social order. With a view to achieving a fundamental improvement of social order, in accordance with the instruction of the regional CCP committee and in conjunction with the reality of Nanning Municipality, in tidying up social order we must link the method of bringing about a temporary solution of a problem with the method of getting at the root of a problem and work hard to get at the root of a problem. We must endeavor to solve well several fundamental problems as follows:

"First, it is necessary to readjust the work and tasks of urban districts and strengthen the building of grassroots political power.

"Second, it is essential to establish youth and juvenile education and administrative organs and mobilize the forces of the whole party and the whole society to do well in grasping youth and juvenile education, administration and the resettlement of youths awaiting employment and reduction of the number of delinquents.

(Liu Xiang) said that we must tidy up social order under the unified leadership of organizations of the party and the government at all levels. We must strike blows at six heinous crimes which seriously jeopardize social order and at the serious criminal activities in the economic field. In conclusion, he said that organizations at all levels of the party must strengthen leadership over tidying up social order. Shi Qingsheng also spoke at the rally.

HAINAN LEADER OUTLINES SITUATION, TASKS

[Summary] Hainan Regional CCP Committee Deputy Secretary Liang Cheng said in a speech at a recent work conference in Hainan: Work on all fronts in the region has made great progress since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee. This particularly applies to the rural economy, where production has developed, living standards have improved, and the people are at ease. Last year total value of the region's agricultural production was 1.372 billion yuan, an increase of 16.57 percent over 1980. Total grain output was 2.433 billion jin, an increase of 5 percent. The cultivated area of tropical crops reached 4.31 million mu, an increase of 280,000 mu compared with 1980. Average collective distribution per peasant rose by 24.8 percent over 1980. When the income from domestic sideline occupations is included, average peasant income was about 200 yuan.

During the past 3 years, the party organizations in Hainan have also stepped up their own building and achieved great success. This is mainly shown in the following: "1) We have cleared away leftist influence and enhanced spontaneity to carry out the line, principles and policies of the third plenary session. 2) We have revived the party's normal party life and put it on a sound basis and done relatively well in implementing the principle of democratic centralism. 3) We have done quite well in correcting laxness and weakness in the party organizations and upheld and preserved the four basic principles. 4) The party's grassroots organizations are on a sounder basis; they are united, hard-working and combat-effective. 5) We have braced our revolutionary spirit and improved leadership style and work methods. 6) A clearer division of work has been drawn between party and government, and there has been a change in the situation of the party committees monopolizing everything. 7) A number of progressive party branches and outstanding party members have emerged, and the party's image among the masses has improved."

Comrade Liang Cheng said: "We must fully recognize the status and role of the party's grassroots organizations and build and enhance them to a new level." The organizations must firmly and correctly implement the party's line, principles and policies, have an overall viewpoint and correctly handle the relations between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, do well in carrying out ideological and political work, uphold party spirit, discipline and law and wage resolute struggle against all sinister trends. The party branch members must implement the principle of democratic centralism, strictly implement the party's organizational life, keep in close touch with the masses and care for them. All party members must make every effort to correct the party work style.

BRIEFS

HUBEI SUMMER GRAIN PRODUCTION -- Hubei Province has reaped a bumper summer grain harvest this year. It is estimated that the province's total output of summer grain will be 7.3 billion jin, some 10 percent more than last year. Except Enshi Prefecture, the other prefectures throughout the province have substantially increased summer grain production. The average per mu yield of the 4.8 million mu of wheat in Xiangyang Prefecture has exceeded 300 jin, a record. The per mu yield of the 2.3 million mu of broad beans and peas in Jingzhou Prefecture this year has reached some 200 jin. Despite unfavorable weather conditions in winter sowing, as all places strengthened field management, 99.5 percent of summer grain fields in the province were areas with guaranteed good harvest irrespective of drought and floods. SICHUAN RIBAO ON IMPROVING RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEMS

HK080215 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 8 Jul 82

[Report on 8 July SICHUAN RIBAO commentator's article: "Further Sum Up, Perfect and Stabilize the Agricultural Production Responsibility Systems"]

[Excerpts] The article says: It is essential to solve problems of ideological understanding in continuing to perfect and stabilize the production responsibility systems. We must further publicize and implement the spirit of the central instructions on summing up, perfecting and stabilizing the agricultural production responsibility systems, so as to unify the thinking of the cadres and masses. We must eliminate leftist influence, guide people to get a clear idea of the main current of development, and enthusiastically help them to solve new problems that appear on the road ahead. We must not be bystanders, engage in discussions and fault-finding, pay no heed to what is going on, or even think of going back to the old ways. We must do a good job in propaganda and education work in light of the masses' fears of change.

The article says: In continuing to perfect and stabilize the production responsibility systems, it is essential to handle properly the relationship between centralized control and decentralization. These two aspects represent the key to bringing into play the superiority of the collective economy and mobilizing the enthusiasm of the individual peasants. Whatever form of responsibility system is adopted, there must be both centralized control and decentralization. At present we must pay attention to solving the problem of excessive decentralization that has appeared in some places following the institution of the system of assigning the land to the households in exchange for fixed levies. In the future, we must correspondingly increase the scope of unified management in light of the needs of the development of production. We must gradually lead the form of dividing management among the households, with self-responsibility for profit and loss, onto the track of specialized division of responsibility, and organize new joint undertakings.

The article says: A very important aspect in continuing to perfect and stabilize the production responsibility systems is to take stock of and straighten out the commune and brigade finances. The focus in this work is on the fixed assets of the production teams, such as grain and materials, public accumulation, and credits and debts. It is necessary to take stock of, register and list each item of existing collective property, and put management responsibility systems on a sound basis.

In continuing to perfect and stabilize the production responsibility systems, it is essential to do a good job in organizing responsibility systems in diversification. The collective should manage in a unified way those items suitable for such management, and institute specialized contracting. Items suitable for domestic management should be treated as peasant domestic sideline occupations, and the peasants should be given plenty of support in developing them.

Some production teams that have instituted the system of assigning the land to the households in exchange for fixed levies have created a "small but complete" system based on the household, and production of industrial crops and of items produced in small quantities is spread among the households according to the number of people in them. As a result, the distribution is very small. This is very bad for developing production. In the future, such production should be handled by developing the system of specialized and key households.

The article says: In continuing to perfect and stabilize the production responsibility systems, it is essential to perfect the rural economic contract system and promote distribution work.

SICHUAN RIBAO URGES UPROOTING RURAL POVERTY

HK030415 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 3 Jul 82

[Report on 3 July SICHUAN RIBAO contributing commentator's article: "Get a Firm Foothold, Uproot Poverty and Plant Affluence"]

[Excerpts] Not long ago leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee carried out investigations and studies in rural areas of north Sichuan. They visited a number of typical communes and brigades that have gotten rich relatively fast, and exchanged views with comrades of the prefectural and country CCP committees and a number of grassroots units. They held that, to ensure that the rural areas of north Sichuan can tranform themselves and become rich as soon as possible, it is essential, in terms of economic development, to guarantee steady growth in total grain output, so as to get a firm foothold; to solve the problems of destroying the forests for land reclamation, single-product economy and destruction of ecological balance, so as to uproot povery; and to carry out rational exploitation and use of natural resources and vigorously promote diversification, so as to plant affluence. This way of eliminating poverty and promoting affluence is also applicable in other mountain areas of the province. It also has a certain guiding role for the rural areas throughout the province.

The article points out: The main characteristics of rural Sichuan are a large population and little land, extensive mountain and hilly regions, abundant resources, and location in the motherland's strategic rear area. The total arable area of the province is only 98 million mu, less than 1 mu per person. However, there are some 500 million mu -- 5 mu per person -- of mountain land, grassland, barren slopes, water and waterside land suitable for developing forestry, animal husbandry and fisheries and industrial crops. For a long time we have always concentrated our efforts on the nearly 100 million mu of arable land, single-mindedly pursued grain production, and neglected the exploitation and use of 500 million mu of nonarable land. As a result, the province's superiority in natural resources has not been brought into proper play, and rural diversification has not developed rapidly. In particular, a very large portion of Sichuan's superiority in natural resources lies in the mountain areas. Yet in the past these areas, too, single-mindedly pursued grain production and did not take advantage of their strong points to offset their weak ones. Output of many forestry, sideline and indigenous products has still not recovered to the highest historical levels.

Although the rural areas have basically solved the problem of adequate food and clothing in recent years the peasants have still not shaken off their state of poverty. The provincial CCP committee work conference proposed that we should get a firm foothold, uproot poverty and plant affluence. This is precisely aimed at correctly handling the relationship between grain production and the development of diversification, and at steadily readjusting the internal structure of agriculture, so that the rural areas can be economically transformed and get rich as quickly as possible.

The article says: Sichuan is a big province with 100 million people. Solving the food problem is our primary major task. We can by no means relax grain production, whether viewed in the light of the present conditions or from the angle of long-term development. We must ensure a steady annual rise in the province's total grain output. It is therefore essential to stabilize the provinces grain cultivation area; it must not be reduced any more. In particular, the grain-growing areas in the plains and valleys must continue to get a good grasp of grain production. They must not squeeze out grain with industrial crops.

The article says: Protecting and developing forestry is a fundamental strategy for dealing wih flood and drought disasters and changing the poverty of the mountain and hilly areas. In the future, while continuing to build a complete water conservation system and tidying up the rivers, we must gradually shift our main efforts to planting trees and grass and promoting soil conservation on the upper reaches of rivers. By this means we can reduce the disasters in the lower reaches and also speed up construction in the mountain areas themselves.

The mountain areas must continue to implement the provincial CCP committee's production guiding principle on comprehensive development by concentrating on forestry, simultaneously promoting agriculture and animal husbandry, and carrying out diversification.

The article says: Since Sichuan does not have much arable land per person, transformation and affluence cannot result from simply growing grain. It is essential to grasp grain in one hand and cash in the other, act in light of local conditions, develop various production opportunities, vigorously promote diversification and industrial and sideline production, and follow the path of all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fisheries and comprehensive undertaking of agriculture, industry and commerce. The leaders at all levels must deepen their understanding and devote more leadership effort to this aspect.

XIZANG HOLDS RURAL, PASTORAL WORK CONFERENCE

Yin Fatang Speech

[Excerpts] Xizang Regional CCP Committee First Secretary Yin Fatang gave an important report at the regional rural and pastoral area work conference on the morning of 24 June. He first spoke on the significance of convening this meeting. He said: This is a very important meeting. It must seriously analyze the situation in the region's rural and pastoral areas since implementing the important central instructions on work in Xizang. By summing up the work of the past 2 years, the meeting must get a clearer understanding of a number of characteristics in the region's agricultural and animal husbandry production and in work in the rural and pastoral areas. It must study and decide on work principles, policies and methods for the rural and pastoral areas and get a clear idea of the tasks there. This is also a mobilization gathering. We must mobilize to speed up the development of agricultural and animal husbandry production and the pace of progressing from poverty to affluence.

Comrade Yin Fatang's report was in three parts. In the first part, he spoke on clearly understanding and developing the excellent situation. He said: Since implementing the important central instructions on work in Xizang, we have carried out a series of tasks to bring order out of chaos in the rural and pastoral areas, scoring notable success. Agricultural and animal husbandry production has developed amid revival and readjustment. We have now basically completed the task of bringing order out of chaos in the party's guiding ideology for work in the rural and pastoral areas. These areas have taken a splendid first step in the struggle to progress from poverty to affluence, and laid an excellent foundation for continued advance. It can be said that the situation in the rural and pastoral areas in the past 2 years has been one of the best since the peaceful liberation of Xizang.

The practice of the past 2 years has also forcefully proven that the party's line, principles and policies for rural work laid down since the third plenary session and the important central instructions on work in Xizang are completely correct and truly promote the people's interests. We must be still more firm in implementing the central principles and policies and also continually study the new situations and problems and put forward effective ways for dealing them in close connection with reality. We should do all our work still better.

In the second part of his report, Comrade Yin Fatang spoke on the basic tasks and guiding ideology for future work in the rural and pastoral areas. He first analyzed the current situation in the region's agricultural and pastoral economy and expounded on the guiding ideology for the future. He then put forward the future basic tasks and targets for endeavor in the region's rural and pastoral areas. He said: The people of the region must unite, work hard together, strive to accomplish in 10 years Comrade Hu Yaobang's call for a small change in 3 years, a medium change in 5 years, and a major change in 10 years, become rich as soon as posible, and march forward in big strides toward building a united, affluent, and civilized new Xizang.

Centered on this general target, we must adopt the following specific measures: In 3 years of effort, we must revive and also develop production, basically solve the problem of adequate food and clothing, and initially change the region's poverty. In 5 years of effort, we should achieve steady development of production and completely change the region's poverty. In 10 years of effort, we should achieve a relatively great development of production and reach a level of initial affluence. Places that have already reached such a level must consider how to further forge ahead.

Comrade Yin Fatang also put forward specific demands for accomplishing the small change in 3 years. He said: The prefectures, counties, communes and production teams must set their own targets for endeavor in light of the demands on the whole region, and have a clear idea of the prospects and plans. They must also work hard to attain their targets.

In the third part of his report, Comrade Yim Fatang spoke on a number of important tasks to be tackled in a comprehensive way in the future. These are as follows: 1) Seriously sum up, perfect and stabilize the agricultural and animal husbandry production responsibility systems. 2) Gradually establish a rational production structure, and vigorously promote diversification. 3) Strengthen scientific and technical research and popularization in agriculture and animal husbandry. 4) Strive to improve the conditions for production. 5) Strengthen ideological and political work and rectify the grassroots organizations. 6) Strengthen leadership over agricultural and animal husbandry production and strive to achieve bumper harvests this year.

Comrade Yin Fatang said in conclusion: This is the last year for achieving a small change in 3 years. Work this year is of great significance for future developments. In order to lay a reliable foundation and create favorable conditions for the next stage -- a medium change in 5 years -- we must fully mobilize the enthusiasm of the cadres and masses, concentrate energy, work hard and make a success of all work this year. In particular, we must exert the greatest efforts to achieve bumper harvests in agricultural and animal husbandry this year.

Conclusion of Conference

[Summary] The Xizang rural and pastoral areas work conference concluded in Lhasa on 2 July. Present at the closing session were Yin Fatang, Redi, Song Ziyuan, (Zhang Xiangming), Yang Zongxin, Zhang Zengwen, Duojicaidan, and other responsible comrades of the party and government in Xizang. Regional CCP committee Secretary Song Ziyuan presided.

Regional CCP committee Secretary Redi made a speech. After hailing the success of the meeting, he said: "The autonomous region has decided on its major guiding principles for work at the present and for a time to come. We also have the specific policies. The issue in the next stage is to vigorously implement them, and mobilize the whole party and the people of all nationalities in the region to seriously implement them. First, we must seriously study, publicize and implement the spirit of this meeting. We must organize the cadres and masses to study and publicize the minutes of the national rural work conference, Comrade Yin Fatang's report at the regional rural and pastoral areas work conference, and the other documents of the meeting."

He said: "On the basis of unifying understanding, the prefectures, municipalities and counties must carry out serious investigation and study and decide on the targets for endeavor and the measures and methods for achieving a small change in 3 years, a medium change in 5 years and a big change in 10 years in light of their local conditions and characteristics. They must also set different demands according to the different districts, communes and production teams."

Redi also called for vigorous support for agriculture and animal husbandry by all sectors and trades, and extensive popularization of science and technology. The region should strive for bumper harvests in agriculture and animal husbandry this year.

Redi emphasized: "Strengthening the unity of nationalities is the foundation of consolidating the unity of the motherland, the fundamental guarantee for carrying out socialist construction, and the requirement of continuing to develop the excellent situation in Xizang. The leading cadres at all levels must attach great importance to nationalities unity work, continually conduct for the cadres and masses reeducation in the communist view on nationality and the nationality policies, education in the notion that Han cadres cannot do without minority-nationality cadres and vice versa, and education in the historic ties between Xizang and the motherland, and seriously implement the party's nationality policies. The leading cadres at all levels must continually enhance spontaneity to promote unity and be models in this respect.

"The cadres and masses of all nationalities must learn from, respect, trust, support, and help each other in actual work, and oppose all words and deeds that do not benefit the unity of nationalities. We must carry forward the fine traditions of army-government and army-people unity, and teach the cadres and masses to promote this unity, so as to further develop the region's political situation of stability and unity, consolidate the unity of the motherland, and ensure the smooth progress of all construction undertakings in Xizang."

Regional CCP committee Secretary Yangling Duoji made a speech on a number of issues in building socialist spiritual civilization.

XIZANG MEETING ON CADRE, WORKER RETIREMENT

[Summary] A Xizang regional conference on cadre and worker retirement was held recently in Lhasa. At the summation session on 22 June, Li Benshan, vice chairman of the regional people's government, put forward four views on how to implement, in light of Xizang reality, the Central Committee and State Council documents and provisions on the retirement of old cadres and workers and do a good job in retirement work:

"1. Fully understand the importance of doing a good job in cadre and worker retirement work. This is an important measure in strengthening the building of the cadre and worker ranks. The great care of the party and government for old cadres and workers fully expresses the superiority of the socialist system. Doing a good job in retirement work will also play a very stimulating role in strengthening the unity of nationalities in Xizang.

"2. We must uphold the principle of putting ideology to the fore in retirement work and strengthen ideological work. Those retiring must correctly handle the relations between the state and the individual, between the whole and the partial, and between aspirations and possibilities, cooperate with the organization and happily subordinate themselves to the arrangements of the party and state.

"3. Resolutely carry out the various specific retirement regulations and act according to principle in everything. No unit or individual is allowed to exceed the bounds of the regulations.

"4. The party committees and government at all levels must strengthen leadership over retirement work. The political work, personnel and labor departments of the prefectures and municipalities and of the regional units, and the other departments concerned, must grasp this work as a current major affair and a political task. Areas and units where there is much retirement work to do must also set up special work organs and cultivate and train specialized cadres for the work. It is also necessary to conduct propaganda and education for the whole body of cadres and workers, so that all of them will understand the relevant principles and policies."

DUAN JUNYI SPEAKS AT BEIJING PARTY BRANCH FORUM

HK091402 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 1 Jul 82

[Summary] Yesterday [1 July] afternoon the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee held a forum of the representatives of the advanced party branches and the outstanding party members to mark the 61st anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Communist Party. This forum was attended by 57 representatives of the advanced party branches and the outstanding party members on all fronts throughout the municipality. The forum was also attended by Duan Junyi, first secretary of the municipal CCP committee; Jiao Ruoyu, second secretary; Chen Xitong and Ye Lin, secretaries of the municipal CCP committee; and Ma Yaoji, vice chairman of the municipal people's congress standing committee.

With Jiao Ruoyu presiding, the comrades attending the forum conducted a discussion, stressing the issue of how to strengthen party building. Representatives of advanced party branches and outstanding party members spoke at the forum and introduced their experiences. They held: "To strengthen party building, it is necessary first to do well in ideological and organizational building in party branches. We must give play to the role of party branches as a combat fortress and unswervingly implement the principles and policies of the party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. Politically, we must be in line with the CCP Central Committee. We must also conduct ideological education for party members in a planned way in light of the situation so as to make every party member strengthen the concept of the party and the training in party spirit and to enable every party member to persistently struggle against bourgeois liberalization and anarchism in society and become a model in abiding by party discipline and the state law. We must inherit and carry forward the glorious traditions and work style of the party, spontaneously resist all unhealthy trends and never be divorced from the masses. We must be models in adhering to the communist ideology and opposing corruption by capitalist ideology. We must give play to the vanguard and exemplary role of Communist Party members and be models in implementing the four instructions of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee on the principle of the building of the capital and in doing well in building spiritual and material civilization in the capital."

After their speeches, Duan Junyi spoke, praising this forum. He demanded: "Relevant departments of the municipal CCP committee must seriously popularize the experiences of these advanced party branches, commend the outstanding party members and give further play to the vanguard and examplary role of party members and to the role of party branches as a combat fortress."

BEIJING MEETING ON STRAIGHTENING OUT ENTERPRISES

[Summary] The third Beijing municipal meeting on straightening out enterprises, which concluded on 26 June, stressed: "To straighten out enterprises, we must adhere to the principle of setting high and strict demands on ourselves. The key problem is to successfully straighten out the leadership groups of enterprises."

To straighten out enterprises well, the meeting put forth views in 10 categories. Two hundred and fifty-eight enterprises in this municipality are in the first group of enterprises to be straightened out. According to the data supplied by this meeting, 40 percent of these enterprises have a relatively deep understanding of the significance of straightening out enterprises and their spontaneity has been high. After perfecting the economic responsibility system, the Capital Iron and Steel Company has stepped up rationalizing the organization of production and rationalizing management. Many enterprises, including the Beijing Municipal Plastics Industrial Company, Beijing No 2 Rubber Plant and Beijing Coking Plant, have seriously learned from the experiences of the Capital Iron and Steel Company and have constantly perfected the responsibility system. "However, work has not progressed at an even rate. Of the first group of 258 enterprises to be straightened out, some 40 percent of these enterprises have not deeply understood the significance of straightening out enterprises, definitely taken measures to raise economic returns and progressed greatly in their work. In addition, about 15 percent of these enterprises have not started work in straightening out."

In view of this situation, the meeting stressed: "On the one hand, we must quickly step up the work of straightening out. On the other hand, we must adhere to the principle of setting high and strict demands on ourselves. The key problem in straightening out enterprises is to first successfully straighten out their leadership groups. We must promote as quickly as possible young and energetic cadres who know technology and management and have both ability and political integrity so that people can be employed to the best of their ability. We must do a good job in the division of work between the party and the government and in the resettlement of old cadres." On the basis of exchanging experiences, the meeting made specific arrangements for straightening out enterprises in the second half of this year and put forth views in 10 categories as follows:

"First, it is necessary to constantly deepen understanding of the important significance of straightening out enterprises. Second, it is essential to firmly grasp the central work of enhancing economic returns. Third, it is imperative to work hard to learn from the Capital Iron and Steel Company and to perfect the economic responsibility system. Fourth, we must strengthen the fundamental work of enterprise management. Fifth, we must do even better in straightening out and building up the leadership groups of enterprises. Sixth, we must successfully straighten out the grassroots organizations of the party and do well in reforming the internal leadership system of enterprises. Seventh, in close conjunction with striking blows at the serious criminal activities in the economic field, we must carry out enterprise management. Eighth, we must seriously organize cadres and workers to learn culture and technology in order to train people of ability. Ninth, we must strengthen ideological and political work and rely on workers to spontaneously set up six-good enterprises. Tenth, we must further strengthen leadership over the work of straightening our enterprises."

BEIJING RIBAO ARTICLE VIEWS EMPLOYMENT SITUATION

HK100352 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Lu Zhu [0712 4591]: "Why Does the Phenomenon of Awaiting Employment Exist in a Socialist Country?"]

[Text] Why does the phenomenon of awaiting employment still exist in a socialist country? In order to answer this question, we must begin by discussing what employment means. There are three essential factors in productive forces, namely, labor force, labor methods and labor objects. The combination of labor methods and objects is called means of labor. Employment means production and circulation of material products conducted with the integration of labor force and means of labor. It includes labor services.

In a socialist society, the public ownership of the means of production occupies a dominant position. The interests of the state and the vast majority of the masses coincide. In our country, there is no such phenomenon as maintaining a large unemployed force in order to bring pressure on the employed workers, which is popular in capitalist countries. Therefore, a socialist country is able to resolve the problem of employment which cannot be resolved by a capitalist country. Our country's practice in the 1950's fully proved this. However, this does not mean that there is no problem of employment in a socialist country at any given time. For instance, at present, the problem of employment is still very serious in our country. The reasons are as follows:

First, labor force resources in our country are very abundant, but the average means of labor per person is not large. For example, the average arable land area per person is only something over 1 mu. After the 1950's, the growth of population was out of control for quite some time. Babies born during that period are now successively becoming of employable labor age. It is estimated that from now until the end of the 1980's, the population becoming of an employable age each year will be over 20 million in our country. There is an imbalance between the production of labor force and the production of means of labor. The relative surplus of labor force is serious.

Second, our country was exhausted by the 10 years of chaos. At present, it is impossible for our country to provide sufficient money, sufficiently increase labor means and provide sufficient opportunities for employment. For example, investment in capital construction in the 1981 budget of our country was 37.58 billion yuan. Even if this capital construction investment sum is totally converted into fixed assets and calculated on the basis of an average 10,000 yuan worth of labor means for every staff or worker in the enterprises under public ownership in our country, only 3.8 million persons could be placed in jobs. However, the annual member of young people in cities and towns awaiting employment far exceeds this figure.

Third, social requirements are rather complicated. Ours is a large country. There exists in the economic management system many irrational elements which hamper people in correctly reflecting reality. Technical planning and statistical methods are also very backward. As a result, it is more difficult to correctly understand and master complicated social requirements. It is also unavoidable that the economic planning departments might make mistakes in deciding what kind of products to produce. For example, although factory buildings are completed, some factories still cannot go into operation, as there is no market for their products. Hence, it is impossible to employ a larger labor force according to plan. On the other hand, some products and trades must be developed quickly so as to employ a larger labor force. Nevertheless, it is impossible to provide more opportunities for employment due to improper planning and a lack of accelerated development.

Fourth, in some places there is a labor force as well as means of labor, and also markets for products. Nevertheless, due to impediments in ideology, technology and geography, it is impossible to integrate labor force with means of labor, and so employment opportunities cannot be created. This is especially prominent in large and medium-size cities. For example, on the one hand, many young people awaiting employment have nothing to do; on the other hand, enterprises in coal extracting, construction and environmental public health cannot fulfill their recruiting quotas. Some highly technical trades need people, but many young people are unable to take the jobs, as they are not skilled in technical work. There are opportunities for employment in remote regions, but young people in large cities are not willing to go there, and so on.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the party and the government have attached great importance to resolving the problem of employment of young people in cities and towns and have drawn up a series of guiding principles and policies in expanding the channels for more employment opportunities. Great achievements have been scored in this field. In the period from 1979 to 1981, there were more than 680,000 young people awaiting employment in our city, of whom more than 600,000 have now been placed in jobs. There are basically no young people awaiting employment in more than 10 medium-size cities in our country. Of course, it is a very difficult and complicated task, with people still awaiting employment throughout the country and city. In order to fulfill this historic task, we must make persistent and long-range efforts.

NEI MONGGOL ON STRENGTHENED ECONOMIC CRIME FIGHT

[Excerpt] At a meeting of party-member responsible cadres of the regional level organs held on 9 July, Ting Mao, second secretary of the regional CCP committee, called on the party organs at all levels under the direct control of the region to strengthen leadership to further deepen the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere.

Comrade Ting Mao pointed out: The former stage of the region's struggle against economic criminal activities was slow in action, small in momentum and not prominent in grasping key points. The main reason is that some leading cadres have a poor understanding of the nature and the great significance of the current struggle. Some units of the regional organs in particular are listless in leadership and slow in action. The measures they have adopted to deal with major and important cases are inefficient. Some have even adopted an apathetic and indifferent attitude in this struggle and have taken no action at all.

He urged the leading cadres at all levels to be determined and to grasp the struggle against serious economic criminals as a major task because it affects the rise and fall of the party and the country. In dealing with problems of units, leaders must investigate and know the real situation, clarify the categorization of problems according to their seriousness and have a good idea of how things stand so as to enable them to solve the problems without fail. As to units and individuals who do not take any action, efforts must be made to investigate to determine their responsibility.

Comrade Ting Mao said: The key to deepening the current struggle is to grasp well the work of conducting investigations and punishing criminals involved in major and important cases. The first two top men of the party organs must assume personal responsibility in dealing with major and important cases, divide the work and assign specific persons to take charge of each case and give concrete instructions in handling the cases. Efforts must be made to assign competent cadres to form special groups to handle cases. Discipline inspection and judicial and public security departments must maintain close coordination in the struggle and put together all superior forces to make a breakthrough in handling cases within a short period of time.

NEI MONGGOL CIRCULAR ON 1982 WHEAT PROCUREMENT

[Text] According to our sources, the regional people's government issued a circular on 6 July on 1982 wheat procurement. The circular notes: This year the region sowed over 13 million mu of wheat. Although the climate was abnormal during the growing period, in most places wheat has grown well thanks to adequate fertilizer and good field management.

To achieve success in this year's wheat procurement and distribution, the circular urges all localities to uphold the principle of giving equal consideration to the interests of the state, collectives and the people so as to attain the goal of rational procurement and proper distribution.

The circular notes: As for production teams which have surplus summer grain but inadequate autumn grain, their wheat should be marketed to the state at an added price in a half-and-half division. After the autumn, when the state returns the same amount of other varieties of grain to these production teams, the price for this returned grain should also be added in the same proportion.

The circular notes: The 1982 task for purchasing wheat is to ensure procurement of 470 million jin and strive to purchase over 500 million jin. As for the communes and brigades which already fixed the purchasing quotas in the spring, their wheat should be purchased and put into storage in line with contracts. As for those which did not fix the purchasing quotas, the purchasing task should be fulfilled by teams, groups and households.

TAIWAN GENERAL PREDICTS 1985 COMMUNIST ATTACK

[Text] Taipei, Jul 14 (CNA) — A ranking officer of the Ministry of National Defense (MND) revealed Tuesday that the Chinese Communists, who have never ceased plotting to seize Taiwan by force, may launch attacks against the island sometime in 1985-1986.

The officer, Lt. Gen. Hsia Tien, reporting on the development of national defense during the second day of the 12th national development seminar, added that the prediction is based on a confidential Communist Chinese document which came into the hands of secret agents of the Republic of China. The document stated that 1985-1986 is the most suitable time for the Communists to take military action against Taiwan.

He pointed out that considering the ongoing efforts of the Chinese Communists to isolate Taiwan by demanding that the U.S. cut off arms sales to this island and abolish the Taiwan Relations Act which protects the arms sales, the projected timing for an attack on the island seems highly possible.

However, the officer said, the ROC has determined to make the Communists postpone the attack indefinitely by continuing to strengthen its national defense industry and upgrade defense weapons.

At the moment, the MND is working on research projects to develop and produce jet fighters, anti-submarine helicopters and submarines as well as anti-tank weapons.

For its long-range program, the MND is mapping out a ten-year arms development project to counteract the threat of Communist invasion of Taiwan.

TAIWAN OFFICIAL WARNS AGAINST 'SEDITIOUS GROUP'

OW090307 Taipei CNA in English 0247 GMT 9 Jul 82

["Seditious Group" — CNA headline]

[Text] Taipei, Jul 9 (CNA) — A ranking official of the Executive Yuan Thursday urged people at home and abroad to heighten their vigilance against being used by the "World United Formosans for Independence," an organization now dominated by some "Taiwan independence" elements. The official pointed out that the rebellious organization, calling for the overthrow of the existing government by illegal means and responsible for many subversive activities in this country and abroad, was branded by the State of California in June, 1981, as a terrorist group.

In answering an interpellation from six members of the Legislative Yuan recently, the Cabinet said public officials of the Republic of China are not allowed to attend the annual meeting of the "World Federation of Formosan Clubs" because that organization has come under the control of some members of the "World United Formosans for Independence." The official said the reply does not contradict with the statement made by Premier Sun Yunnsuan on March 19 when the premier replied to an interpellation by Legislator Chung Jung-chi.

When Premier Sun made the reply to Legislator Chung, saying that the government does not regard all organizations of the natives of Taiwan abroad as "Taiwan independence" groups, he was, in fact, referring to the following groups as legal and well-established organizations: the Taiwan Benevolent Association, the Formosan Club, the Taiwanese Welfare Association and the Taiwanese Merchants Association.

The premier said that the great majority of overseas compatriots who are natives of Taiwan Province are patriotic and homeland-loving. The official noted that the premier did not mention the "World Federation of Formosan Clubs" in his reply. However, the official said, although the organization is being controlled by a handful of "Taiwan independence movement" elements, not all members of the "World Federation of Formosan Clubs" are "Taiwan independence" elements.

HSIN WAN PAO DENOUNCES U.S. PRO-TAIWAN LOBBY

["New Talk" column: "Not a Single New Idea in 30 Years"]

[Text] "Goldwater has not had a single new idea in his head in more than 30 years." This was the appraisal of the U.S. senator made by a U.S. diplomat in Hong Kong.

Living in the 1980's in the 20th century but with a mentality 30 years behind the times, his thinking has become ossified and he is still dreaming old dreams and actually does not know that the world has changed. There are still such living corpses at all times and in all countries, but the number is few.

An article commenting on Sino-U.S. relations, which appeared in RENMIN RIBAO yesterday, pointed out: As in the case after the fall of every dynasty, there are always old and young diehards who cling desperately to the ancestral tablets of the former dynasty and nurse fond illusions of restoration. Although MacArthur's "unsinkable aircraft carrier" and "Dulles' doctrine" of nonrecognition of China have been discarded by history, their ghosts still haunt some of the American people. What they long for night and day is still to play the role of backstage rulers of more than 30 years ago when they lorded it over China by supplying Chiang Kai-shek with money and arms to fight the civil war.

If you want to know what is on the minds of these old and young diehards, you can get the answer from history. XINHUA NEWS AGENCY yesterday also transmitted an article from GUOJI WENTI YANJIU quarterly. This article used a vast amount of foreign information and detailed footnotes to explain the history of Sino-U.S. relations in the period from 1948 to the mid-1950's. The article mentioned some of the already deceased American imperialist elements. How similar their words and actions were to those of Goldwater and his ilk today.

In the past, Truman and Dulles were not the only people in Washington who advocated the U.S. occupation of Taiwan to obstruct China's unification. In Hong Kong, there was a U.S. consul general by the name of Isaac Allen who openly admitted that his point of departure was "to make our government take possession of this big island (Taiwan)," later, U.S. diplomats in Hong Kong also had contacts with certain people in Taiwan and also participated in the rigging up of a non-Kuomintang anticommunist government in Taiwan, although without success.

At present, a tremendous change has taken place in the world situation and China and the United States have eventually established diplomatic relations, and U.S. diplomats are no longer openly advocating the annexation of Taiwan. Burton Levin, the present U.S. consul general in Hong Kong, in a talk last week said that the estrangement between the United States and China in the past had damaged the interests of both countries. He said that at present because of the arms sales to Taiwan, relations have been strained. However, President Reagan's recent letters to the PRC leadership and Vice President Bush's visit have created an environment to work out a mutually satisfactory solution to the problems. However, at about the time of Mr Levin's talk, a handful of diehards in America nevertheless raised a hue and cry. They not only wanted to undermine the "environment" and obstruct the working out of a mutually satisfactory solution to the problem, but they also wanted to basically reverse the U.S. policy toward China of the last 10 years and return to the past.

The American living corpses are at present fanning up an anti-China evil wind. They are taking advantage of the replacement of the former secretary of state by the new secretary of state and the coming off-year elections to exert pressure on President Reagan. These clamorous fife-and-drum troublemakers are trying to play the "poltergeist" and forcing the living to submit to the dead. Let us see whether the Reagan administration can shake off these evil spirits.

HONGQI ON SUPERPOWERS' ROLE IN THIRD WORLD TIES

[Article by Liu Yili [0491 5030 4539] and Li Shuqiao [2621 2885 2890]: "The Great Significance of Strengthening Third World Countries' Unity and Cooperation"]

[Text] At present, the hegemonist policy pursued by the two superpowers -- the Soviet Union and the United States -- and their heated contest on a global scale have seriously threatened the safety of a large number of Third World countries. Especially in the Middle East, South Asia, Southeast Asia and other areas, several "hot spots" have been created with endless years of war and ceaseless trouble. Such countries as Afghanistan, Kampuchea and so forth have suffered greatly as direct victims of aggression and occupation by hegemonists. Many countries closely related to them have also been affected and threatened, to varying degrees, giving rise to the question of concern: "Who's next?"

The longstanding international economic order has put a large number of Third World countries in a disadvantageous position in their economic exchanges with developed countries. The gap between the rich and the poor in the international economy is forever widening. The economy of developed capitalist countries has for years been in a state of "stagflation." This has also dealt a blow to the economy of many Third World countries and brought them serious difficulties.

To maintain world peace and their own safety, the Third World countries have made tremendous and persevering efforts, opposing aggression, expansion, war preparations and arms expansion on the part of the superpowers, demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, urging the discontinuation of Soviet support for Vietnam in its invasion of Kampuchea and Soviet plans to dominate Southeast Asia, calling for the United States to stop supporting Israel's policy of external expansion and apartheid and calling upon the Soviet Union and the United States to first destroy their nuclear weapons and reduce their arsenal of conventional weapons. These just demands have met with the stubborn resistance of the two superpowers. The Third World countries have demanded the establishment of a fair and rational international economic order with the developed countries through consultation and the reform of the old international economic order. This has also met with resistance, due to some developed countries' vested interests.

The various factors above show that to stimulate the development of the international situation in a direction favorable to the people of the world, the Third World countries must strengthen unity and cooperation among themselves. This is a matter of immediate concern.

(II)

There is a strong objective basis for the strengthening of unity and cooperation among Third World countries.

1. The Third World countries share the same historical fate. From the beginning of modern times, they have been reduced to colonies, semicolonies, other dependent states and have suffered greatly from colonialist and imperialist oppression. Even today, the effects of a backward economic and cultural state resulting from long colonial rule and national oppression are far from being eliminated.

2. The Third World countries are facing a common historical task. It is that given political independence, they must uphold national sovereignty, overcome the backward economic and cultural state left over from history, do away with imperialist and feudalist influences and the remnants of capitalism in social relations, develop the national economy, win economic independence, develop scientific, technical, cultural and educational undertakings, improve the people's standard of living and seek continuous social prosperity and progress.

3. No matter what the social system, the Third World countries are placed in a similar position in today's international life. They are all being threatened or jeopardized by the policies of aggression and war on the part of the superpowers. They are all receiving unfair treatment because of the old international economic relations. They all demand upholding world peace and establishing a new international economic order. Their interests are synonymous where these basic problems are concerned.

Since the conclusion of World War II, with the vigorous growth of national liberation movements in various countries and their continuous victories, cooperation and unity has not ceased to develop among Third World countries.

First, the national liberation movements and the struggles for upholding national independence in various countries support each other and are directed at imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism. Their mutual support and common struggle have played a very important role in the ability of several Asian, African and Latin American countries to win independence and maintain independence after the war, besides relying on the strength of their own people.

To uphold common interests, the Third World countries, through bilateral and multilateral diplomatic activities, have strengthened mutual understanding and coordinated actions in international affairs. In 1954, China, together with its neighbors India and Burma, jointly proposed the five principles for peaceful co-existence. At the Asian-African conference held in 1955, China and other participating countries made joint efforts and again affirmed 10 principles to promote world peace and cooperation. These have played a significant role in promoting unity and cooperation among newly independent Asian and African countries. The Nonaligned Movement which started in 1961 has also played a positive role in the unity of a large number of Third World countries seeking a common goal. Some regional organizations have continuously appeared in Third World countries. They have done a lot of work stimulating economic cooperation and mediating disputes at home and upholding common interests on the international front. More and more Third World countries have broken away from the control of imperialism and superpowers, have adhered to their own stand on international matters and have put forth their own views. For a fairly long time after the war, the United Nations was a tool controlled by U.S. imperialism. With newly independent countries joining one group after another, there has been a major change in the balance of power. Through the common efforts of Third World countries, various UN conferences have adopted some resolutions and declarations condemning imperialist aggression and upholding Third World interests. These include the restoration of our legitimate UN seat and the election at the end of 1981 of a person from the Third World as the UN secretary general. All these bear eloquent testimony to such a change.

The Third World countries have differed in the levels of their economic development. But generally speaking, they all belong to the category of developing countries. Since the war, the developing countries have stimulated the development of the national economy through mutual cooperation and have strengthened forces to counter superpowers and international monopoly of capital. Such cooperation has assumed varied forms. Apart from bilateral cooperation, there has also been the establishment of the "Group of 77" (now with an increased membership of more than 100 states and regions), some regional economic cooperation organizations, organizations among raw material-producing countries and finished product-exporting countries, and so forth.

With independence obtained, the developing countries have generally waged a struggle to reform the colonial and semi-colonial economy. They have denied imperialists and colonialists such special rights as opening up resources, issuance of currency, income taxation, customs control, and so forth.

Having gained independence, the developing countries have generally waged a struggle to reform the colonial and semicolonial economy. They have denied imperialists and colonialists such special rights as resources, development, issuance of currency, income taxation, customs control, and so forth. They have nationalized some foreign enterprises and have gradually controlled the economic life of the state. Such reforms have been matched with disruption and suppression from imperialist countries, which often resort to such means as severing trade relations, imposing an economic blockade and even instigating a coup and carrying out armed intervention. The developing countries have relied on their own efforts and mutual support to achieve continuous victories. In the 1950's, Egypt reasserted its sovereignty over the Suez Canal and defeated the British and French aggressor troops. In the 1970's, the Arab states used oil as a weapon (by raising prices, reducing production, imposing an embargo, increasing their share in a company's stock and realizing nationalization) to deal a heavy blow to imperialist countries headed by the United States. Latin American countries have started a struggle to uphold territorial waters and protect their own offshore resources. All this fully shows that given the awakening and unity of developing countries, international imperialism can no longer freely control the economic rights of developing countries as in the past.

In the early 1970's, based on their own experiences and lessons of many years in fighting imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism, some developing countries have raised the slogan of "rejuvenation through relying on a group's own efforts." This has won widespread support from the Third World. Since then, there has been further progress in economic cooperation between developing countries. Trade between them has grown at a rate exceeding that of trade with developed countries. There has also been increased cooperation in joint ventures, projects on a contract basis, exchange of technical know-how, and so forth, stimulating the economic development of the various nations concerned.

(III)

The Third World countries and people are the main force in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism. When the unity and cooperation of the Third World countries are further strengthened and these countries are more closely united, the superpowers and imperialists will no longer be masters of the world situation and the whole international situation will be changed.

The two hegemonist powers, the Soviet Union and the United States, have always considered Europe an area of vital importance and the focus of their global contention. Both sides have made great efforts to maintain and expand their spheres of influence in this area and have thus brought about a situation of sharp confrontation. In order to contend for possession of favorable strategic points, they have respectively made great efforts in making new deployment, occupying strategic points, controlling strategic thoroughfares and conducting military and diplomatic activities. Some Third World countries think that when they have conflicts with other countries or when they are threatened or invaded by a certain imperialist country, they can possibly be sheltered by one of the superpowers. This opinion is very dangerous. The former Afghan Government had signed with the Soviet Union a "treaty of friendship and cooperation" which included terms of joint defense, but it was subverted by the Soviet Union, and its territory was occupied. This is a serious lesson. History also shows that when wars were waged by the imperialist powers scrambling for spheres of influence, the first victims were usually weak and small countries. Before World War II broke out, Germany, which was contending with England for hegemony in Europe, had first swallowed up Austria and Czechoslovakia. After the war broke out, it continued to occupy western Poland, Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands, and Belgium.

At the same time, Japan, which was contending for the Pacific Ocean with the United States and England, first occupied the Philippines, Malaya, Indonesia and Burma. Therefore, the Third World countries must strengthen the unity between themselves, unite with all peace-loving countries in the world and make joint efforts in safeguarding world peace and opposing hegemonism. This is a reliable guarantee for their independence and security and will effectively stop the superpowers from expansion and waging new wars.

In order to develop their national economy more healthily and free themselves from reliance on the developed countries, many developing countries must also gradually improve their single-product and abnormal economic structure left over by history. There are many difficulties at present in this regard. The establishment of a series of new economic departments requires a large amount of investment. The import of foreign capital from developed countries is a method of solving financial difficulties. However, the most fundamental method is internal accumulation. Also, it is necessary to actively develop mutual cooperation between the developing countries. At present, the economic force in many developing countries has greatly increased. This has provided a better material basis for mutual cooperation. Since the oil-exporting countries in the Third World achieved victory in the 1970's, their financial strenth has been greatly enhanced. Over the past few years, their contribution in aid in terms of national productive value of other Third World countries has greatly exceeded that of the developed countries and their loans have been given more favorable terms. The national economies in certain Third World countries other than the oil-exporting countries have also greatly developed, and their ability to accumulate domestic funds has constantly increased. They also have some surplus funds to export. Even in the most underdeveloped countries, if joint measures are taken to raise money collectively, many things can be done.

At present, the national industries of many developing countries, which have a comparatively weak foundation, are confronted with competition from powerful international monopoly capital, especially of the transnational corporations. Some small countries are also faced with the difficulties caused by their narrow domestic markets. If joint measures are not taken to resist the invasion of international monopoly of capital and to expand the scope of their domestic markets, the national industries in these countries will have difficulty existing and developing. It is more necessary for the Third World countries to strengthen their unity and defend their national industries as protectionism is gaining ground in the developed Western countries. The "New Delhi consultation" conference convened in February this year decided that talks on establishing a preferential world trade system between developing countries will begin within the year. Some regional economic cooperative organizations of the developing countries have made it a rule to reduce or remit tariffs between member states and to put into practice unified tariff rates to other countries. This is obviously favorable to the development of their national industries.

In order to speed up economic development, the Third World countries have to import advanced science and technology from other countries. But some developed countries are not willing to provide them with the most advanced science and technology. On the other hand, quite a few developing countries have also possessed science and technology, which are relatively advanced or are at the world advanced level, through their own efforts. They can import from each other new technologies which suit their needs, require less investment and are easier to master. There are good prospects for the development of cooperation in this respect.

The superpowers are the main countries which benefit from the old international economic order. They have always opposed and obstructed in a thousand and one ways the reasonable demands of the Third World countries on reforming the international economic order. The United States is striving to maintain its position as master of the world economic situation and to keep the present international economic system intact, while the Soviet Union is trying hard to rake in exorbitant profits from the economically backward and undeveloped countries in its external economic contacts. Most Third World countries have now recognized that in order to reform the old international economic order, it is necessary to strengthen their efforts collectively to promote their global negotiations with the developed countries, and that economic cooperation between the Third World countries themselves on the basis of equality and mutual benefit and the development of their economy through self-reliance are important component parts of the new international economic order.

(IV)

The current state of unity and cooperation between the Third World countries is far from satisfying the demands of the international life and the desires of the people in various countries. On the one hand, the disputes on border, territorial, nationality and religious issues, which have been left over by history, are still greatly obstructing the unity and cooperation of quite a few Third World countries. When the contradictions become acute, they can even result in armed conflicts or wars. Differences over some current international issues have also led some Third World countries to sharp confrontation. On the other hand, for the purpose of expansion and domination, the superpowers often make use of the contradictions between the Third World countries to sow dissention and stir up trouble. According to whether or not a country follows their foreign policy, the Soviet hegemonists have divided the Third World countries into two groups, that is, the "progressive" and the "reactionary," and have been supporting some countries and opposing others. They have also used Vietnam and Cuba as the "Trojan horses" to disrupt the unity of the Third World countries. This is a serious disruptive factor for unity within the Third World.

The contradictions among the Third World countries and those between the Third World countries and the superpowers are fundamentally different in nature. There are no conflicts of fundamental interests between the Third World countries. Most Third World countries have deeply realized from experience that the disputes between themselves left over by history can only be solved through peaceful consultations and not by war, so that fair and reasonable solutions can be reached. It is particularly important to guard against interference, provocation and estrangement by the superpowers. When the disputes cannot be solved for the moment, it is necessary to proceed from the interests of the whole and seek a common ground while reserving differences so as to unite and oppose invasion and oppression by the superpowers.

Many developed countries have looked down on the strength of the Third World countries. Some people in Third World countries also fail to see their strength. It is correct for an article in Algeria's EL MOUDJAHID, which commented on the economic cooperation between the developing countries, to say that "if prejudices are discarded, talent is not the private property of the industrialized countries. Any civilization has its own technology." This article listed some examples of successful economic development and mutual cooperation between developing countries, requiring the Third World people to place faith in their own "ability of mutual assistance" and to "establish unity on the basis of the civilization and progress of our countries."

China is a developing socialist country. It belongs to the Third World and is a faithful and tested friend of the large number of Third World countries. It hasbeen adhering to the socialist foreign policy and principles. Before many countries won independence, it had done its utmost to support their struggles against imperialism and for national salvation. After they won independence, it enthusiastically established and developed cooperative relations with them in the political, economical, cultural and scientific fields. It has made contributions to promoting the unity and cooperation between the Third World countries. Along with our successful development of the construction of socialist modernization, the cooperation between China and a large number of Third World countries will certainly be promoted on a more profound basis, and the future looks bright.

GREEK PAPERS EXPOSE KGB-FORGED DOCUMENT

The Greek newspapers AKROPOLIS and VRADYNI reported yesterday that the U.S. State Department made public on July 11 a forged letter allegedly written by former U.S. Secretary of State Clark to U.S. Ambassador in Athens Monteagle Stearns on September 25, 1981. The KGB-forged letter said that the United States was upset by the preponderance of the Panhellenic socialist movement in the general elections. It warned that a military coup might take place in Greece if Andreas Papandreou won the October 18 election.

The newspapers pointed out that the Russians deliberately use fake documents to confuse the public in other countries. From September to November 1981, the KGB has forged several documents to sow discord between the United States and its allies, they added.

SOFTBALL SPOKESMAN ON 'TWO CHINAS' PLOT AT GAMES

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- A responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association issued a statement to a XINHUA reporter today expressing indignation and lodging a protest against Porter, secretary generay of the International Softball Federation, and others who willfully made use of the Fifth World Women's Softball Championship to create "two Chinas."

The responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association said: I have repeatedly pointed out that according to the resolutions made by the International Softball Federation and the International Olympic Committee on the issue of China's Taipei, Taiwan's so-called "national flag" and "national anthem" are not to be used in any form in the Fifth World Women's Softball Championship. However, Secretary General Porter of the International Softball Federation and others have always refused to make an explicit, written statement on this issue. Now, the Fifth World Women's Softball Championship has ended. Many reports from Taipei have proven that there are people who used this championship to fanatically create "two Chinas." This cannot but arouse the strong indignation of the Chinese people and athletes.

This responsible person pointed out: In addition, Secretary General Porter of the International Softball Federation and others even had the audacity to accuse the Chinese Softball Association and other associations who saw through their political plots and refused to attend the championship in Taipei as "playing politics," and raised a hue and cry about "taking disciplinary measures." This is out-and-out nonsense. Those who used this championship to carry out the political plot are none other than themselves.

The responsible person of the Chinese Softball Association lodged a strong protest against Secretary General Porter of the International Softball Federation and others for their actions to undermine the resolutions of the International Olympic Committee and the International Softball Federation and create "two Chinas." He said "All the people who truly care about the healthy development of world sports may draw beneficial lessons from this farce. This responsible person pointed out: Any activity in a vain attempt to create "two Chinas", obstruct the return of Taiwan to the embrace of the motherland and undermine the great cause of the Chinese people for national reunification is bound to fail.

SHULTZ REMARKS ON MAJOR ISSUES AT SENATE HEARING

[Text] Washington, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Secretary of State-designate George Shultz made statements today and yesterday during his nomination confirmation hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, outlining U.S. relations with China the Soviet Union, the Middle East and West European allies.

In reply to questions regarding the Sino-American relations, Shultz said: "The continued development of our relationships with the People's Republic of China is a matter of great importance." But he added: "That isn't to say that I have any hesitation in supporting the relationship we have with Taiwan and in the faithful carrying out of the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act."

He answered in the affirmative to the question raised by Senator Barry Goldwater: "Would you agree...that the United States has never formally recognized the People's Republic of China's political sovereignty and jurisdiction over the people and governing authority on Taiwan?" He said the Shanghai Communique and the joint communique on establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States "acknowledge that the Chinese on mainland China and the Chinese on Taiwan all agree that there is one China. Our position, I believe, is sensible; that is, how this difference of opinion is to be resolved is fundamentally up to the Chinese."

He also gave the affirmative answer to the question if the United States should continue to provide Taiwan with arms of a "defensive nature" "without any time limit". "We have expressed our willingness and determination to provide defensive arms as needed to Taiwan. And personally I think that is exactly where we should be" he said.

On U.S. relations with the Soviet Union, Shultz stressed in his prepared statement the theme of seeking peace through strength. "Peace and security can be assured only if we have the strength," he said.

Noting that the Soviet Union expanded its military capability at a steady and rapid rate in the past decade while U.S. military strength remained at an original level, Shultz believed that it is "critical" that "we (the United States) persevere in the restoration of our strength."

He expressed U.S. "willingness to negotiate" with the Soviet Union and readiness to establish "mutually beneficial and safer relations" with it "on the basis of reciprocity." He also linked U.S. efforts in the area of arms reduction to "restraint in many dimensions of Soviet behavior."

On the Middle East, Shultz said: "The importance to our security of wide and ever-strengthening ties with the Arabs is manifest." "I will do all in my power to sustain these relationships and to further them," he added.

He declared that "the legitimate needs and problems of the Palestinian people must be addressed and resolved -- urgently and in all their dimensions" and that in autonomy talks "representatives of the Palestinians themselves must participate in the negotiating process". On the other hand, however, he stressed the U.S "special relationship" with Israel, commitment to the "security of Israel" and "readiness to assure that Israel has the necessary means to defend herself."

Shultz urged the strengthening of U.S. relations with its West European allies by a "structure of alliances". "Just as we expect others to act in partnership with the U.S.," he said, "we must conduct ourselves as responsible partners."

The Senate's Foreign Relations Committee today unanimously approved the nomination of Shultz as the secretary of state. A plenary session of the Senate is expected to complete the process of his nomination confirmation at the end of the week.

U.S. FAILURE TO SIGN LOS TREATY CRITICIZED

[Text] U.S. President Reagan announced on 9 July that the United States would not sign the international Law of the Sea Treaty because the deep-seabed mining part of the convention is unfavorable to U.S. monopoly. Several words in this statement are worth pondering.

The statement admitted that this convention was adopted with 130 votes in favor, 4 against (including the vote by the United States) and 17 abstentions. However, the statement said that, although those countries which voted against the convention were in the minority, "their GNP's amount to 60 percent of the world total and the membership dues they pay to the United Nations amount to more than 60 percent of the total." The implication of this statement is quite obvious: The United States has vast productive forces and pays higher membership dues to the United Nations; therefore, naturally, special consideration should have been given to the United States when the international Law of the Sea Treaty was being worked out. In other words, small and weak countries and the United States can never be treated equally and the former as usual have to suffer losses.

However, the UN Charter, to which the United States is a signatory, clearly provides that "all nations, large or small, enjoy equal rights." The charter does not say that the member nations should be discriminated against in sharing interests according to their power and their shares in the membership dues. The U.S. Government regards the world and the United Nations as a joint-stock company, thinking that the biggest stockholder should enjoy the most rights, and therefore the superpowers may certainly practice power politics. This is exactly the world outlook of the U.S. monopoly capital class.

FRG BANKS WILL FINANCE SOVIET GAS PIPELINE

[Text] Moscow, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union signed an agreement in Leningrad Tuesday with a consortium of West German banks, which will finance a Soviet pipeline bringing natural gas from Siberia to the western border, PRAVDA reported today.

Under the agreement, the consortium of West German banks will give the Soviet Union 2.8 billion marks (1.1 billion U.S. dollars) of credit to pay for equipment it has already ordered from West German firms. The credit line can be extended to four billion marks (1.6 billion U.S. dollars) if the Soviet Union orders more equipment and services for the pipeline from West German firms before the end of the year. West German sources said the loans will stretch over an 8-year period at an interest rate of 7.8 percent.

The agreement was reached at the second meeting of the specialists group on problems of banking and finance of the mixed commission on scientific, technical and economic cooperation between the USSR and the Federal Republic of Germany. It was signed by the chairman of the foreign trade bank of the USSR and president of the board of managing directors of Deutsche Bank.

SRV, USSR CRITICIZED OVER 'PARTIAL WITHDRAWAL'

[Text] The Vietnamese authorities' fraud of "partial withdrawal" from Kampuchea has been exposed and dismissed by the ASEAN states. However, it has gained response from and has been hailed by the Soviet Union. In only a few days, Vietnam and the Soviet Union have worked concertedly to perform a duet of the fishermen, in an attempt to hook the ASEAN states.

Hanoi said that the partial troop withdrawal is "an outcome of the daily improving situation in Kampuchea." Moscow responded, saying that Kampuchea's "situation at home and abroad is secure." When Hanoi said that the partial troop withdrawal "indicates the Indochinese countries' sincerity and hope to get along peacefully, in friendship and cooperation with the ASEAN states," Moscow responded, saying that the partial troop withdrawal shows Vietnam's "sincerity and concern for reducing the tension in the region." They wanted these cliches, which were incompatible with reality, to produce the effect of a beautiful lullaby.

However, people can hear from this undelightful duet the implication that one of them is praising the development of regional hegemony based on the Indochina federation while the other is eulogizing his own strategy of southward advance to seek world domination. No wonder a newspaper in Singapore stated that "disbelief and a loud and clear 'no'" would be the best reply to the duet performed by Hanoi and Moscow.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTATOR ON KAMPUCHEA COALITION

[Text] Samdech Norodom Sihanouk returned to his homeland for the first time since the Vietnamese invaded Kampuchea three-and-a-half years ago, heading a Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea formally established somewhere in that country last Friday. The coalition marks an important step in the Kampuchean resistance against the Vietnamese occupation as it joins all patriotic Khmer forces in their common effort to oust the invaders.

Formation of the coalition government conforms with a declaration issued jointly by Prince Sihanouk, Mr Khieu Samphan and Mr Son Sann in Kuala Lumpur on June 22. Khieu Samphan is now vice-president in charge of foreign affairs, and Son Sann is prime minister in the government.

The declaration culminated long and strenuous efforts by the three sides to form a united front against Vietnamese occupation. A tripartite statement of intention to join forces had been issued in Singapore on September 4, 1981. But it took nine more months of discussion and mutual compromises before formation of a coalition government was agreed upon.

This is a natural outcome. As the old Chinese saying goes, "Internal disunity dissolves in the face of external invasion," since there is no other option.

All the world's just and peace-loving nations welcome this hardearned accomplishment by the patriotic forces of Democratic Kampuchea. They consider it in line with the general trend of the times and the desire of the Kampuchean people. They also recognize ASEAN's contribution toward this end.

It is to be hoped that the three parties of the coalition will take their combined interests into account, bury whatever differences that might linger, continue strengthening their unity and mobilize all the forces at their disposal in a joint effort to deal with their common foe. The Kampuchean struggle for national salvation will be a hard one. But as long as they are united and persevere in fighting the aggressors, victory will be theirs. And if their own resolve to fight for liberation is strong, they will not be let down by the international community.

It is not surprising that the Soviet Union, which supports and has benefitted from the former's occupation, and the Vietnamese invaders are furious. It would be foolish to expect otherwise. Vietnam can be expected to continue its attempts to annex Kampuchea for an "Indochina federation," and the Soviet Union to take advantage of the occupied territories and the naval ports there to further its own hegemonist interests.

The formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea is a humiliating setback for the Vietnamese and their mentors. To get out from under international isolation and condemnation, Hanoi will resort to any means to fool the world to hold on to its booty.

Vietnamese Ruses

It is therefore important for everyone to guard against Vietnamese ruses like pretended readiness for a conditional and partial withdrawal of troops from Kampuchea. First, it will be impossible to verify any so-called partial withdrawal. Second and more crucial, partial withdrawal, were it at all practical, would mean legalizing partial occupation of a sovereign nation by aggressors.

It is not only unacceptable to the brave Kampuchean people, but it will also establish a dangerous precedent whereby the aggressor benefits at the expense of the victim, and would encourage furhter onslaughts.

Any solution to the Kampuchean question must be based on the declaration of the international conference on Kampuchea and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly, which call for immediate and total withdrawal by the Vietnam invaders from that ravaged country. Only thus can Kampuchea be restored as a sovereign and independent state and the peace and security of Southeast Asia ensured.

KARACHI DAWN REPORTS ON PRC TRADE DELEGATION

[Text] Lahore, July 4 -- Haji Yefu Abdul Hamid, leader of the 13-member Chinese trade delegation now visiting Pakistan, today stressed close friendship between Pakistan and China and said that the two people supported each other politically, economically, culturally and in other fields. He was speaking during a visit to the Lahore Chamber of Commerce and Industry here this afternoon. He said the visit by the trade delegation would further strengthen the bonds of friendship which was already higher than the Karakurrams. Haji Jefu Abdul Hamid said that ever since the start of border trade 14 years ago, the relations between the two countries had been greatly strengthened. He described the Karakurram highway as a permanent monument of friendship between the two countries.

Earlier the president of the chamber, Mr Abdul Qayyum Bhatty, in an address of welcome said that Pakistan-China friendship, based on the principles of international peace, sovereign equality and noninterference in the internal affairs of each other, had stood the test of time. China, he said, had always stood by Pakistan in its hours of need.

He said that the friendship between the two countries had found expression in many forms. Besides the world famous Karakurram highway, there are many other monuments like heavy machinery complex, the heavy forge and foundry and a number of other industrial projects set-up with the Chinese assistance are indicative of the growing cooperation between the two sides.

He said that private sector in Pakistan would like to significantly increase industrial, commercial and economic cooperation with China.

Mr Mumtaz Ahmed Khan, president of the Pakistan-China Friendship Association, also spoke on the occasion and said that friendship between the two countries was everlasting. He said that a silver jubilee of the friendship association would be celebrated in November this year and invited the members of the delegation to come back to participate in the ceremonies connected with the occasion. Later he distributed friendship badges between the members of the delegation.

Earlier talking to newsmen at the airport he said that the border trade between Pakistan and China was greatly contributing towards further consolidation of friendship between the two countries.

He said his delegation and Pakistani officials, by signing border trade agreement in Gilgit last week had accomplished the task assigned to them by their governments satisfactorily, in a quite friendly atmosphere.

NONALIGNED COORDINATING BUREAU DISCUSSES LEBANON

[Text] Nicosia, July 15 (XINHUA) -- An extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the non-aligned countries on Palestine opened here this evening. The meeting is to discuss "practical means and methods to stop the Israeli aggression and support the Palestinian people's struggle," an official announcement said.

Delegations from 45 countries, of which 28 were members of the Coordinating Bureau, attend the meeting. Thirty delegations are headed by foreign ministers. A dozen more delegations are still coming. Among the guests are the president of the United Nations General Assembly Ismat Kittani of Iraq and representatives of the Arab League and other international organizations.

The holding of the meeting, suggested by Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasir 'Arafat, was decided upon at a meeting in New York on July 9 at the permanent representatives level of the Coordinating Bureau. Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis, who is hosting the meeting and was elected chairman of it, said that the meeting shall be a good opportunity for the Cypriot people to give the Palestinians and Lebanese support and solidarity.

Addressing the meeting, President Spyros Kiprianou of Cyprus, one of the founding nations of the Non-Aligned Movement, declared that the meeting will solely discuss Palestine and the situation in Lebanon. A solution to the Middle East probelm is imposible and unjust without recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to set up their own independent state, he said.

In a message to the meeting, 'Arafat reported that the Israeli invaders, using modern weapons supplied by the United States, have so far destroyed three Lebanese cities, 30 Lebanese villages and 14 Palestinian refugee camps. They have killed or wounded 30,000 Lebanese and Palestinian citizens and made 800,000 people homeless. He expected the meeting to take "forceful measures" to confront the crimes of Israel.

Other speakers included the representatives of Cuba, the current chairman of the non-aligned group, of Sri Lanka on behalf of the Asian member states, Grenada on behalf of the Caribbean and Latin American member states, Benin on behalf of the African member states, and Yugoslavia on behalf of the European members.

The meeting adopted a message to 'Arafat expressing solidarity with the Palestinian people. From tonight on the meeting will go into closed session.

The meeting announced that it had received a message from Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs Huang Hua, who extended greetings to the meeting on behalf of the Chinese Government and people. The message sternly condemned the Israeli authorities for their genocidal invasion backed by the United States. It appealed to all non-aligned countries and other peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people of the world to take urgent action and work together to stop the Israeli acts of aggression and maintain peace in the Middle East.

Huang Hua Message

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, has sent a message of greetings to the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of non-aligned countries being held in Nicosia, Cyprus. The message, dated July 12, reads:

On the occasion of the convocation of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of non-aligned countries on the situation in Lebanon, I wish to extend, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, our greetings to the meeting.

Since 4 June the Begin authorities of Israel, backed and abetted by the United States, has launched a most barbarous invasion against Lebanon and willfully slaughtered innocent Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, thus seriously aggravating the situation in the Middle East region and menacing the peace and security of the world. This has aroused grave concern of the international community. I would like to take this opportunity to state the position of the Chinese Government as follows:

-- We sternly condemn the Israeli authorities for their genocidal invasion against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples in disregard of the U.N. Charter and basic principles of international law; Israel must stop forthwith its invasion against Lebanon and withdraw unconditionally all its troops from that country in implementation of the relevant resolutions of the U.N. General Assembly and the Security Council;

-- We maintain that the Palestinian people must regain their national rights and that the Palestine Liberation Organization, as the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people, has the right to participate in a comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East question;

-- The independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon must be respected and no country is allowed to interfere in the internal affairs of Lebanon;

-- In our view, the immediate pressing task is to stop the Israeli attack against Beirut and force Israel to lift its seige of Beirut and then to withdraw all its troops from Lebanon. The internal problems among various parties of the Arabs should be resolved by themselves through consultations; the question of Israeli aggression must not be mixed up with the Arab internal problems, and it is all the more impermissible for outside forces to interfere in the internal affairs of the Arabs;

-- We appeal to all non-aligned countries and other peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and peoples of the world to take urgent actions and work together to stop the Israeli acts of aggression, support the just cause of the Palestinian and Arab peoples and maintain peace in the Middle East.

I am sure that the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of non-aligned countries will make positive contributions to preserving the principles of the U.N. Charter and norms guiding international relations and the maintenance of peace in the Middle East and the world at large.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR ON SMUGGLING PROBLEM

[Commentator's article: "Pay Serious Attention to Building an Antismuggling Contingent"]

[Text] The third work conference on dealing blows at smuggling in the three southeastern coastal provinces recently held in Beijing has summed up and exchanged experiences in the struggle against smuggling since the first work conference on dealing blows at smuggling, especially since the urgent circular issued by the CCP Central Committee in January this year, and studied such questions as how to amplify the management system, plug loopholes and give play to the role of relevant government departments at various levels. The conscientious implementation and enforcement of the guidelines of this conference will effectively push forward in future the struggle against smuggling and deal blows at serious violations of law and criminal activities in the economic field.

At present, serious criminal activities of smuggling and selling of smuggled goods are already corrupting our cadre ranks, poisoning and polluting the social atmosphere, disrupting economic construction and affecting social stability. This is an important manifestation of the class struggle under the new historical conditions in our country. As a result of the struggle of the preceeding period, smuggling activities on land and sea have been effectively attacked and the arrogance of criminal elements has been restrained. However, because of various internal and external factors, such criminal activities cannot be wiped out merely after a few rounds of attack, and the struggle against smuggling will be protracted. At the moment, channels of smuggling have not been completely plugged up and smuggling activities have not ceased. They have only changed in form and content and become more covert and crafty. This requires us to constantly maintain a high degree of vigilance, fully bring into play the role of various government departments in the antismuggling struggle and conscientiously strengthen ideologically and organizationally the building of antismuggling forces. We must wage a protracted tit-for-tat struggle against smuggling activities.

Generally speaking, our antismuggling contingent is good and many advanced individuals and collectives have appeared in the present struggle against smuggling and criminal activities. Although situated on the frontline of the struggle against corruption, they are unaffected by their environment and have impartially enforced the law for the party and the people. However, we should also see that there is serious impurity in the antismuggling contingent of some localities, and some of the people who have been hit by sugar-coated bullets are wallowing in the mire with the smugglers and dealers in smuggled goods. Some of the people who have been ideologically disarmed are neglecting their duties. Some, in the name of suppressing smuggling, have in fact engaged in smuggling and the selling of smuggled goods. The perversion of justice for a bribe in the case of the Haifeng No 4 antismuggling patrol boat in Guangdong is an example. To ensure the purity of the antismuggling contingent, law enforcers like this who break the law must be strictly investigated and dealt with accordingly. Fatuous and corrupt people who seriously neglect their duties must be firmly removed. We must bring in some of the good cadres who are honest in performing their official duties, vigorous and bold, and who can bear hardship, stand hard work and maintain close ties with the masses to replenish the antismuggling contingent. This is an important condition for scoring a decisive victory in the struggle against smuggling.

Party committees and responsible government departments at various levels must take an interest in the building of antismuggling forces, constantly study their work, promptly provide enthusiastic guidance and give them positive support and help when they encounter problems and difficulties in work. While fully bringing into play the role of customs, public security, border defense, commercial administration and management, revenue and fishery administration departments, we must at the same time properly conduct ideological education among the fishermen, cadres and people in coastal communes and production brigades so that everyone will consciously observe discipline and law, voluntarily serve as antismuggling personnel and conscientiously report and expose criminal activities in smuggling and selling of smuggled goods. In this way, a formidable antismuggling contingent of a mass character will take shape and we can really build an iron wall against smuggling and guard against corruption.

EDITORIAL VIEWS PREVENTING OVERSUPPLY OF GOODS

[Editorial: "On a Quick Turnover of Goods as Seen From the Change of Sluggish to Brisk Sales of Kelp"]

[Text] A few years ago, the oversupply of kelp was a very serious problem. This was a matter which was hard to tackle. In 1978 and 1979, the sales volume of kelp was less than 50 percent of the purchase volume. However, the departments concerned have changed the method of monopolizing purchase and sales in the last 2 years. They have adopted such measures as purchasing and selling at negotiable prices, making direct contact between production and sales units, price reduction, increase in the number of sales outlets, issuing rewards as a sales promotion and so forth. In the meantime, they have also succeeded in trial-producing kelp as a fast food and readjusting production of iodine. Thus, the situation of sluggish sales and overstock of kelp has been initially changed. With the exception of Shandong, kelp formerly kept in stock in some main producing areas such as Liaoning, Zhejiang, Jiangsu, Fujian and so forth has sold out. The change from sluggish sales to the clearance of the oversupply of kelp has given us a good deal of enlightenment: It all depends on human efforts to turn "dead things" into "active assets." As long as we continuously improve our style of thinking, management system, sales methods and economic measures and throw convention to the wind, the situation of an oversupply of commodities can certainly be changed.

At present, the number and percentage of commodities kept in stock has increased. This is a striking problem in the field of circulation. A finance and trade worker wrote a letter to this newspaper, saying: "A certain basic-level supply and marketing cooperative has commodities in stock worth more than 700,000 yuan. Half of them are dull, unmarketable, incomplete and broken goods which have been kept in stock for several years. Among them, 20,000 yuan worth of commodities have lost their use value. However, they still represent 'statistical value.' Some pesticides have been stored for many years and their effectiveness has long since deteriorated. A quantity of canned pork has been kept in stock for 20 years. The purchase price of each can was 2.32 yuan and the cooperative has paid more than 1.3 yuan in interest for each can." Such instances are not rare and we believe that they occur on a fairly wide scale. Some commodities have been "sleeping" in warehouses for 3, 5 or even 10 or 20 years. Some table tennis balls kept in stock had disintegrated into powder when we touched them and some rubber shoes stuck together.... However, they are placed in warehouses year after year and have occupied a large amount of circulating funds. Their use value is decreasing or losing value with each passing day. When these commodities now kept in stock were taken from the factories, the departments concerned had already declared industrial and profit taxes. This practice will bring spurious elements into the financial revenue. If they do not sell well, the entire commodity value which includes tax and profits cannot be truly realized.

There are many and varied reasons for an oversupply of commodities: poor quality, unreasonable prices, unmarketability and more supply than is needed. The block in circulation channels is also one of the reasons. Some commodities might be kept in stock in certain areas, but they might be out of stock in other areas. Some commodities might be kept in stock in the warehouses, but they are not available over the counter. We should adopt different measures in light of different conditions. We should focus our attention on production links, do our best to improve quality, increase variety and designs, decrease products in ample supply and boost those in short supply, produce more good quality and famous brand products and stop the reproduction of poor quality goods. All these are effective measures for completely changing the situation of an oversupply of goods. However, one thing which merits our attention is that the ideas of some trade and commerce workers lag behind the recent developments in the situation. They are accustomed to a thorough distribution of commodities and to having exclusive control of the market for their businesses. Under the new situation of the change in circulation channels and the market supply and demand, they feel that it is "difficult to do business." However, they do not exert any efforts to study the new situation and adopt new measures.

Dilatory and perfunctory work style, low work efficiency and mutual restraint among departments have made a large number of seasonable goods outmoded and have turned best-selling goods into unsold goods. Therefore, we should fully realize the harm of an oversupply of commodities, break regional blocks, promote commodity circulation in accordance with reasonable economic principles and do our best to keep the channels of circulation unimpeded so that a quick turnover of goods will be ensured. This is very important work which we should undertake.

The process of goods circulation plays a very important role in promoting the production process and the entire social economy. Marx said: "The faster the sales, the smoother the process of reproduction." ("Das Kapital," vol 2, p 155) Whether commodities sell well will determine whether speed has an enormous bearing on reproduction. However, in the past we often talked about the fact that circulation was determined by production. However, we seldom talked about the role of circulation in production. The so-called circulation means the circulation of products. Circulation is, first of all, determined by production. Without production, there would be no circulation. If we produce unmarketable commodities and manufacture too many or too few products, it is difficult for us to promote circulation. However, whether we organize circulation effectively or ineffectively will play the role of promoting or impeding production. Consumption is the purpose of production. The purpose of keeping goods in stock is to play the role of continuously meeting the needs of production and consumption. We should on no account deviate from this prerequisite to stress the so-called "the more goods in stock, the better." Some necessities related to the national economy and the people's livelihood should be reasonably kept in stock and a certain amount of reserves should be guaranteed. We should make up for some poor harvests in an otherwise good year of rich harvests and store up goods to satisfy emergency needs. With regard to some products, we only need to keep a small amount in stock or even refrain from storing them at all. There is nothing for us to worry about even if they are out of stock for a short period of time, because this will be a signal to the production units, which will then continue their production. As for some commodities which have been kept in stock for years, we should take a long view to selling them at lower prices or discarding them as useless. We should resolve to throw away this "burden." The power to handle these commodities can be allocated to lower levels. The problem of losses resulting from sales at lower prices should be properly and expeditiously solved. Of course, we should adopt strict supervisory measures to prevent some people from taking advantage of the sales at lower prices. CCP committees and governments in various localities should resolve to grasp the work, take a positive attitude and follow a down-to-earth path to make a new breakthrough in this respect.

The "Decision on Dredging Channels of Commodity Circulation in the Urban and Rural Areas and Providing the Countryside With More Industrial Goods" recently adopted by the State Council is an important reform of the business system. It has created favorable conditions for dredging channels of circulation, increasing sales volume and reducing goods kept in stock. With regard to the problem of promoting circulation of socialist commodities, we should not only study the problem of circulation of certain enterprises from the micro view, but also devise methods from a macro view so that commodities will enter the realm of consumption in the shortest period of time and at the smallest expense. In a word, the phenomenon of disregarding economic returns, paying more attention to production than to circulation and turning a blind eye to the overstock of commodities must not continue to exist any longer. Comrades who are in charge of economic work should learn something from the change in the sluggish to brisk sales of kelp. Proceeding from the viewpoint of enhancing economic returns, they should foster an idea of "managing money affairs" and adopt effective measures to conscientiously solve the problem of an oversupply of commodities.

ARTICLE ON INDUSTRIAL TECHNICAL TRANSFORMATION

[Article by Qiu Chunfu [6726 4783 3940]: "On Technical Transformation of Industrial Enterprises in Our Country"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang put forth in the government work report 10 principles for our country's economic construction. One of them is to carry out technical transformation of existing enterprises selectively and step by step. Now, I would like to discuss my personal understanding of the formulation and implementation of this principle.

I. The Purpose of Carrying Out Technical Transformation of Existing Enterprises Is To Increase Economic Returns.

Industry in old China was very backward. By the time the whole country was liberated, the grand total of industrial fixed assets was about only 12.8 billion yuan. After the founding of the country, we adopted the method of mainly depending on building new factories to expand reproduction in order to rapidly lay down a foundation for industrialization. It was very necessary and correct to do so at that time. After 30 years' construction, we now have nearly 400,000 industrial and communications enterprises with fixed assets amounting to about 500 billion yuan. An independent and relatively complete industrial system has been formed. Under these circumstances, in order to increase economic returns, the expansion of reproduction for a period of time to come should mainly depend on technical transformation and giving full play to the role of existing enterprises. The above-mentioned principle put forth by Premier Zhao Ziyang is an important change. The essential starting point of this change is to increase economic returns and to produce more products which meet the needs of society with as little human labor consumption and material consumption as possible so as to promote better and continuous development of the national economy.

II. In Carrying Out Technical Transformation of Existing Enterprises, We Should Adopt Correct Policies in Accordance With the Conditions in Our Country.

One way is to adopt advanced technology which is suited to our country's present conditions. This means technology that is suited to the concrete conditions of respective trades and enterprises and can bring about a relatively big increase in economic returns. We should not indiscriminately demand the latest technology, nor should we one-sidedly seek things foreign and new. Of course, we will adopt a certain quantity of advanced technology in some departments, in the production of some products and in some technical fields according to necessity and possibility in order to promote the rise of the entire technological level.

The second way is to take increasing social economic returns as our goal. In carrying out technical transformation of existing enterprises, we should take into consideration not only the economic returns of one enterprise, one trade or one department but also mainly the returns of the entire national economy. The current technical transformation should be carried out in the following aspects: 1) economizing on energy and raw materials and lowering consumption and costs of production; 2) reforming the structure of products in order to upgrade the products and to increase their varieties, improve their performance and raise their quality; and 3) rationally utilizing resources and raising the level of comprehensive utilization. Besides, we should also pay attention to promoting safe production, improving environmental protection and reducing heavy physical labor.

The third way is to pay attention to economic returns in updating equipment. The work should be carried out selectively and we cannot update all equipment. Equipment updating includes updating production equipment, processing equipment and means for testing. Under the present circumstances, we should mainly update and refit one or two crucial parts and certain crucial equipment and not all equipment. In key enterprises, we should be ready to update equipment listed below step by step and in a planned way: 1) equipment which has been seriously worn out and whose performance and preciseness can no longer meet processing requirements giving rise to extremely harmful technical and economic consequences; 2) the cost for overhauling the equipment is more than updating it; and 3) the value of energy and raw materials wasted by the old equipment in 2 to 3 years' time will exceed the costs for buying new equipment.

The fourth way is to proceed from the actual needs of our country's technical transformation and actively use foreign investment to import advanced technology and equipment from foreign countries. In importing technology from foreign countries, we should mainly import advanced technology which is suited to our country's present conditions and crucial equipment which we have not been able to manufacture. We should popularize and encourage licensed trade, advisory service, technical service and cooperation in production in importing technology.

III. Technical Transformation Is a Long-Term Task and Should Be Carried Out With Overall Planning and in an Orderly Manner.

The technical transformation of existing enterprises and the building of new enterprises should be considered at the same time and be brought into the orbit of state plans. Such plans should be formulated in four aspects.

First is general planning. It should include major items of technical transformation that involve the overall situation of the national economy; items of technical transformation of major basic installations; the coordination and linking up of tasks of technical transformation of major departments, major trades and key enterprises; and the overall balance of funds, materials and technical forces.

Second is the planning of center cities with developed industry. Most of our country's industrial enterprises are concentrated in center cities, especially in large cities along the coast. There are a large number of old enterprises which should be transformed at once. The planning for technical transformation in center cities should be linked up with the transformation and development of these cities.

Third is the planning of technical transformation of trades. In formulating plans in this respect, we should make clear the orientation and key points of the technical development of these trades. We should promote the development of specialized cooperation and handle properly the relationship between production tasks and technical transformation. The technical transformation of machinebuilding industry should be linked up with the technical transformation of other departments so that it can provide timely advanced technical equipment.

Fourth is the planning of technical transformation of enterprises. We may start with some large enterprises. At present, key enterprises such as the Anshan iron and steel company, the Wuhan iron and steel company, the Nanjing chemical company and the No 1 auto plant have started work in this respect.

While carrying out technical transformation of existing enterprises, we should raise the management and operation level of these enterprises. We still have much work to do in this regard. Besides summing up our own experiences, we should also be good at learning useful experiences from foreign countries in order to promote smooth work in the technical transformation of industrial enterprises in our country.

BANK OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON USING FOREIGN FUNDS

[Text] China must manage foreign investment carefully and should seek to make the best possible use of this money, a Bank of China official told CHINA DAILY in a recent interview.

In using foreign capital to modernize her economy, China should observe the following guidelines, the official said:

China's debt service ratio -- the ratio of interest payments to income from transactions with foreign countries -- should be kept well below 15 percent. A higher ratio would indicate a danger of China's going too deeply in debt, the official said.

Domestic investment in joint venture enterprises should be at least equal to foreign investment. Overall, there is about three times as much domestic capital as there is foreign investment available for such projects, he said.

China should pay attention to the rate at which domestic enterprises can effectively "digest" foreign capital, as well as equipment and production techniques.

The official added that the Bank of China is planning to offer foreign exchange accounts to Chinese citizens, in order to allow diplomats, professors, and other workers returning from abroad to bank any foreign exchange they may have accumulated.

COMMENTATOR ON RECTIFYING PROBLEMS ON RAILWAYS

[Commentator's article: "Carry Forward the Railway's Good Style of 'the People's Railway Serving the People'"]

[Text] As early as the 1950's our railway departments had already developed the railway's good style of "the people's railway serving the people" praised by the broad masses of passengers and shippers. This good style was damaged during the 10 years of turmoil and even now has not been completely rectified. The railway departments have recently developed "the people's railway serving the people" activities with safety and punctuality, respecting the passengers and cherishing the cargoes and good quality services as the main contents along the whole line. This will give a great impetus to the work of arousing the revolutionary spirit of railway workers and developing gains of the national civility and courtesy month.

The railway is the main force among various means of communications in China. Nearly half the turnover of goods and more than half the turnover of passengers are undertaken by the railway. The quality of railway work exerts a direct influence on the national economy as well as the livelihood of the people and has an extremely important bearing on the maintenance of public order and the building of spiritual civilization. Therefore, "the people's railway serving the people" activities must first be properly developed in the passenger and freight transportation departments. Passenger transportation departments must strive to improve the quality of their services and provide facilities for the passengers. They are strictly forbidden from making things difficult for the passengers. Freight transportation departments must ensure safety in operation, prevent the breaking of rules and regulations in loading and unloading and reduce damage to goods. By means of "the people's railway serving the people" activities, there has been a marked improvement in the longstanding situation of "difficulty in purchasing tickets, difficulty in getting on trains and difficulty in shipping goods." Here, particular mention must be given to coal transportation. In China, the task of transporting coal from the west to the east and from the north to south is a very heavy one. Coal must mainly be transported by rail and accounts for more than 40 percent of the total transportation volume of the railway. The guarantee for industrial and agricultural production depends to a very great extent on the link of coal transportation. At present, there is a serious shortage of coal in areas of east China and northeast China where industries are concentrated. However, coal in such places as Shanxi, Ningxia and Nei Monggol cannot be shipped out. For the sake of changing this condition, we must, on the one hand, produce more coal in such places as east China and northeast China. On the other hand, railway transportation departments must use various means to tap transport potentials, raise transportation efficiency and transport more coal to guarantee the needs of production and construction as well as the livelihood of the people.

The railway is like an engine with many integrated parts. Various departments not only promote each other but also condition each other. For the sake of enabling the railway to better serve passenger and freight transportation, various departments must coordinate in unity and make progress together. Capital construction departments must speed up construction schedules, improve project quality and economize on the use of raw materials so that the benefits of various projects can be brought into play at an earlier date. Industrial departments must properly repair and build railway cars and supply high quality products to transportation departments.

Material departments must make a success of the work of supplying and managing materials and guarantee the needs of the transportation, industrial and capital construction departments. In short, various departments of the railway system must serve the people wholeheartedly.

We must conscientiously do a good job of safe railway transportation. Regardless of whether it is passenger or freight transportation, safety is a comprehensive target and the test for all basic work. The railway accidents which occurred frequently resulted in great loss of lives and property to the state and caused the already very strained transportation capacity to become even more strained. Most of the accidents which occurred on the railways recently were accidents caused by irresponsibility and were not fortuitous, and their causes could be found in the ineffective leadership, lax management and slack discipline of the units in which the accidents occurred. Various railway departments and units must conscientiously implement the instructions of the State Council and quickly change the poor condition of railway safety. Leading cadres at various levels must establish the mentality of safety first and carry out safety education for all the workers so that everyone will firmly establish the concept of holding himself strictly responsible to the state and the people, conscientiously implement the position responsibility system, strictly obey labor discipline and scrupulously enforce rules and regulations as well as operating rules.

We must pay attention to the work of training workers and incompetent people must not be allowed to work regular shifts. Cadres must constantly go down to lower levels to inspect safety work and to discover and eliminate unsafe factors in time. In the future, if a serious accident occurs, we must carry out investigation level by level to find out who is to blame.

Recently, in some railway sections, incidents of stealing rides, boisterously snatching and stealing state property and attacking trains have still constantly occurred. Railway departments must closely cooperate with the localities and look on reestablishing public order along the line as an important content of "the people's railway serving the people" activities. Bad railway order not only will cause losses to state property, but will also seriously affect passenger and freight transportation and endanger traffic safety. We must carry out legal education within and outside the railway, conduct education on cherishing and supporting the railway, protecting state property, observing public order, complying with social ethics, promoting healthy tendencies and combating unhealthy tendencies. Local people's governments at various levels must put up notices in urban and rural areas along the railway line and stipulate in explicit terms: It is forbidden to interfere with traffic commands or hold back a train under any pretext. It is forbidden to hop a freight car or to board a passenger car without a ticket. It is forbidden to attack trains. It is forbidden to pilfer or to boisterously snatch transportation materials. It is forbidden to dismantle and steal or to receive and sell railway equipment. It is forbidden to set up obstructions on the track. In lighter cases, violators will be subjected to criticism and education. In serious cases, violators will be punished according to law.

Leading railway cadres at various levels must set an example in "the people's railway serving the people" activities and give play to the role of pacesetters. In work, they must not be afraid to take charge and manage and must courageously shoulder responsibility. In economic matters, they must be honest in performing their official duties and be spotlessly clean. In life, they must work hard and live plainly and must not divorce themselves from the masses. In social contact, they must hold fast to their principles and resist unhealthy tendencies. At the same time, we must educate the railway workers not to take advantage of the opportunity offered by strained transportation and the demands made by the broad masses of consumers on the railway or regard their position in "the people's railway serving the people" as personal authority to practice unhealthy tendencies.

The basic aim of our socialist railway is to be "the people's railway serving the people." To enable "the people's railway serving the people" to become a regular practice and system and to keep on improving service quality, railway party organizations at various levels must energetically strengthen ideological and political work and arouse the sense of honor and responsibility among the broad masses of workers to make greater contributions to the four modernizations.

RAILWAYS, PUBLIC SECURITY MINISTRIES HOLD TALKS

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Ministries of Railways and Public Security jointly called a telephone conference today to consolidate public order on railways. The telephone conference called on railway departments to work in close coordination with the local authorities to comprehensively improve public order along railway lines and strive to substantially improve railway public security within the year.

Owing to the impact of the chaotic decade, cases of riding trains without buying tickets, of many people hopping freight trains and of looting and stealing supplies being transported by rail have been frequently reported in recent years. In August last year, the CCP Central Committee and the State Council transmitted, with official comments, the "minutes of the forum on consolidating public order on the railways held by 10 provinces and areas and 10 railway bureaus," prepared by the Ministries of Public Security and Railways. To this end, the various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional CCP committees have strengthened leadership over public order on the railways and the public security departments and the railway public security organs at all levels, working in close coordination, have captured a number of criminal gangs and dealt with a number of criminals, thus improving railway security, but, incidents involving numerous people riding trains without buying tickets and hopping freight trains and cases of looting and stealing supplies being transported by rail currently continue in some places. Cases of train vandalism have also been reported. All this has seriously affected the safety of passengers and train operations.

At the telephone conference, responsible comrades of the Gansu and Lanzhou Railways Bureaus and the Hubei Provincial Public Security Department introduced their experiences in consolidating railway public security along the Tian-Lan (Tianshui-Lanzhou) line and in strictly dealing with looting incidents along the Han-Dan (Hanyang-Danjian) line. The main experience of the Tian-Lan and Han-Dan lines was that under the unified leadership of the provincial, municipal, prefectural and county CCP and government organs, the railway departments and local authorities, by working in close coordination, have mobilized forces from all circles, indefatigably consolidated public order along railway lines, dealt blows at criminals seriously endangering railway security, and continually handled the situation in a comprehensive way to ensure operational safety. Now, public order along these two sections has taken a noticeable turn for the better, the number of people riding trains without buying a ticket or hopping freight trains has greatly decreased, incidents of looting and stealing supplies transported by rail have been basically curbed.

Vice Minister of Railways Li Xuan and Vice Minister of Public Security Li Guangxiang spoke at the telephone conference. Li Xuan called on various railway bureaus to vigorously popularize the experience of the Tian-Lan and Han-Dan lines. He said: Railway bureaus at all levels must strengthen enterprise management and each bureau must assign a leading comrade to be specifically responsible for railway security. In the meantime, the bureaus must rely on local party and government organs and public security departments to quickly solve problems as soon as they are discovered.

Li Guangxiang emphasized in his speech: The railways are the vital arteries of the national economy, and the safety of railway transportation has a direct bearing on national construction and the people's livelihood. Railway security represents an important aspect of social security; public security departments at all levels must look upon railway security as an important task and grasp it firmly; they must concentrate their forces and straighten out those sections having serious cases of disorder, resulting in hopping freight trains, stealing, looting and vandalizing trains. Steps must be taken to strictly handle incidents seriously undermining the safety of railway transportation. In the meantime it is necessary to launch a propaganda campaign among the masses, teaching them to love and protect the railways.

NEW RURAL ECONOMIC COMBINATIONS REPORTED

["Opinion" column]

[Text] Ouyang Junbin, party secretary of the agricultural commission of Henan Province, and Qin Kangyu, a member of the provincial agricultural department, have made a study of the economic combinations which are a new form of economic organization in China's rural districts. The following are excerpts from their article:

The combinations are of various kinds. There are those between households and households, between households and production teams, and between neighbouring production brigades and people's communes. Some of the combinations are permanent, others temporary. They all come into being out of production needs.

The emergence of the combinations gives birth to "new collectives within old collectives" and "small collectives inside large collectives." Some people support this new development in rural districts, others oppose.

We believe that the birth and development of this new economic form is determined by the law that relations of production must suit the nature of the productive forces. Effective policies of the Central Committee after the third plenum in December 1978 have rectified equalitarianism and impractical direction in production. A new situation arises when incomes of the state, the collective and the commune members are all on the increase.

Now there are capital funds in the hands of the peasants. Labour productivity has been raised, and there is a surplus of farm hands. In Henan Province, 30 percent of the labour force should be more gainfully employed. The surplus even reaches 50 percent in certain cases. At the same time, skillful craftsmen and expert farmers need a greater collective to give full play to their skills.

On the other hand, some peasant households could not well fulfil their task for a lack of skill. Therefore, the new economic combinations came into being as a new form for more rational organization of labour power and use of funds and skills.

Characteristics

The study shows that the characteristics of the economic combinations are:

-- Voluntary participation and mutual benefit.

-- Ability of each combination to accumulate capital, to be responsible for profit or loss, to find market for its products.

-- Good management and quick turnover.

-- Ability to produce competitive and marketable products.

At present there are three main forms of such combinations.

1. Pooling of money to buy draught animals, tractors and instruments and to overcome shortage of means of production and capital.

2. Employment of skillful craftsmen in house-building, weaving and papermaking to teach and train other members.

3. Pooling of surplus labour to going in for transportation, processing agricultural products.

Practice has shown that these combinations have played an important role in developing diversified economy and enlivening a commodity economy in rural districts.

MINISTER DISCUSSES HIGHER EDUCATION SYSTEM

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- China's new Minister of Education He Dongchang said today that he supports diversified development of higher education to accommodate China's uneven economy and culture. In a XINHUA interview, the minister, who was appointed two months ago, suggested that the concept of higher education be expanded to include any post-secondary education satisfying uniform requirements.

He Dongchang, 59, formerly dean and vice-president of prestigious Qinghua University here in Beijing, said China should have a varied and multi-leveled higher education.

With an underdeveloped economy, he explained, China can not and need not develop all its institutions of higher learning into regular four- or five-year universities, let alone attempt to copy institutions in the West. Society's needs for different specialists also call for different periods of schooling, the minister said, appealing for more two-year colleges at present.

A 1945 aeronautics graduate of China's Southwest Associated University, He Dongchang started teaching at Qinghua three years later and in 1955 helped establish the university's nuclear engineering department with himself as the dean. He served as vice-president of Qinghua between 1978 and last May.

The new minister said he supports development of radio, television and correspondence courses as well as adult higher education like night universities and workers' universities. He also encouraged people to acquire a college education on their own. However, he pointed out, there must be a strict examination system with uniform requirements for students following such courses. Those passing a single examination will be given a certificate with certain credits while college education diplomas will be awarded upon accumulation of enough credits, he suggested.

The minister advocated planned guidance for such courses of study to avoid teaching unwanted specialities. While supporting society-run colleges, he said they should serve the country's development without impairing the state plan.

Calling for restructuring China's higher education, the minister said the proportion between departments of liberal arts and science and students trained to be high-level, medium and primary specialists should be adjusted gradually to the needs of the country's economic and social development. Therefore, he said, it is necessary to set up a vocational and technical education system.

He Dongchang said that to overcome the disproportion in higher education, his ministry is preparing a planning department to forecast society's needs and offer advice on restructuring.

At present, college students needed by departments of finance, economy, law, management, agronomy and light industry by far outnumber the graduates provided by the state. The minister called it a long-term problem made prominent by recent years' economic readjustment that gives priority to the development in these fields.

To handle the disparity between higher education and state construction, he appealed for a broadening of the scope of some engineering specialities so that the students can have a wider range of knowledge.

The ministry is exploring the possibility of pre-assigning some students so that their courses can be changed to keep pace with their future jobs, he said.

He Dongchang suggested that colleges of agriculture, forestry and medicine and teachers' colleges enroll more students in rural, pastoral and forest areas with somewhat lesser qualifications. With practice of agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry, such students are willing to return upon graduation, he said.

Since the third plenum of the Chinese Communist Party's 11th Central Committee has paid great attention to the importance of education in the country's construction.

He appealed to gradually increase the budget for education which is still at a low percentage of the overall budget.

"China has a rich experience in education," the minister said, "the history of education in this country dates back to Confucius' days more than 2,400 years ago." He recalled China had in the past century learned from the educational experience of Japan, Britain, the U.S. and the Soviet Union. "We will continue to make use of the experience of foreign countries, including those in the Third World," he said. But, he pointed out, China must embark on its own way of developing education and work out an educational system and structure suitable for China's conditions. Speaking of China's conditions, he emphasized two points:

China has a large population, an underdeveloped and uneven economy, which can not be changed totally over night.

On the other hand, China's colleges and schools, with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as their guiding principle, aim at cultivating students with a socialist outlook and to serve the people.

MOST GRADUATES TO BE ASSIGNED TO LOCAL UNITS

HK160225 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 16 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] Only about one-fifth of this year's 310,000 college graduates will be assigned to organizations under the central government, a spokesman for the Ministry of Education's distribution department has told CHINA DAILY.

Last year, the bulk of the first class to graduate since the restoration of college entrance examinations was assigned to leading organizations. This year, 62,000 graduates will go to departments and enterprises under the central government; 248,000 will go to affiliates of local administrations.

The distribution department spokesman said that although the number of graduates this year is the largest in China's history, the task of assigning them jobs would have been completed by the beginning of this month, except that assignment of last year's graduates was delayed until early this year.

Despite the delay, he said, last year's distribution of graduates proved to be somewhat easier than expected.

With few exceptions, the graduates set out for their assignments cheerfully despite the anarchic effect of the "Cultural Revolution." Many of them were older than normal students, and were engaged or married, rearing children, or earning wages. More than half were native to the areas of their universities.

The State Commission for Planning, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of Labour and Personnel share the responsibility for the distribution of graduates.

This year's students are much like last year's so the job distribution procedures adopted at the beginning of the year are being used again.

The only complication is the addition of non-residential students at day colleges run by local administrations, of whom there were none last year.

Although these graduates are included in the state distribution plan, they have been supported during their studies by localities. Therefore most will be assigned by local authorities.

Based on experience, the departments concerned are stressing such areas as energy resources, communications, light industry, textiles, building materials, and teaching in normal schools.

Rural Areas

Graduates of normal schools and those who specialized in agronomy and forestry are certain to be posted to rural areas, the spokesman said.

College graduates are the most important form of aid that the central government can provide to border minority nationalities areas, he explained. Graduates assigned to Tibet, for example, will not be allowed to apply for reassignment home until they have spent eight years there.

Anyone who volunteers to work in these areas should be praised, the spokesman said. Those chosen to work there must be encouraged to accept their assignments, and those who come from these areas should be ready return to them.

Anyone who fails to report to an assigned post within 90 days without justification will be deprived of his qualification for assignment. No personnel department in the country is allowed to register such a person as a permanent worker or staff member for five years.

Efforts are also being made to stop any "backdoor" deals and privileged assignments. Parents in high positions have been called to meetings with provincial discipline committees to hear the rules explained.

WORKERS, STAFF EDUCATION CADRES' CLASS ENDS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 14 Jul (XINHUA) -- The National Committee for Workers' Education and the State Economic Commission jointly held a ceremony in Beijing today to mark the conclusion of the study class for administrative cadres for education of staff members and workers in the country. Yuan Baohua, chairman of the National Committee for Workers' Education and vice minister of the State Economic Commission, addressed the ceremony.

Attending the study class were 121 regular students and more than 50 auditors. All of them are comrades from provincial, municipal and regional offices for education of staff members and workers (workers and peasants), pertinent ministries and commissions of the State Council, some industrial cities, enterprises and establishments, who are engaged in the work of education of staff members and workers.

After summing up the principal accomplishments of this study class, Yuan Baochua said that leaders at all levels must fully understand the position and role of staff and worker education in the four modernizations. He stressed: Staff and worker education is a task of prime importance concerning the success or failure of the four modernizations. It is the foundation for developing intellectual resources and promoting science and technology, the major way to quickly change the structure of our cadre ranks and an important component in the work of promoting socialist material and spiritual civilization. For this reason, it is imperative to plan early and do our best to grasp it as very important work.

Yuan Baohua said that currently five tasks must be grasped well in order to make staff and worker education a real success.

1. Carry out the work of staff and worker education according to the characteristics and law of this type of education.

2. Make positive efforts to create conditions for establishing training centers in conjunction with the consolidation of enterprises.

3. Further improve the organizations for staff and worker education and provide full-time personnel to handle the work.

4. Actively carry out research work on the theory of staff and worker education.

5. Discover and cultivate advanced examples and sum up and popularize advanced experience in staff and worker education. Yuan Baohua said; A national meeting of advanced representatives in staff and worker education will be held in the winter of this year or the spring of next year. Through this meeting our work of staff and worker education will be pushed to a new stage. It is hoped that early preparatory work for this meeting will be made in all localities and departments.

The closing ceremony was presided over by Lu Dong, vice minister of the State Economic Commission. Lu Dong and Yuan Baohua awarded certificates of completion of study to the students at the ceremony. SYMPOSIUM ON MAO LITERARY, ART THINKING PROFILED

HK141203 Beijing WENYI BAO in Chinese No 6, 7 Jun 82 pp 9-11

[Article by Li Wen [3810 2429] "First, It Is Necessary To Uphold and Second, To Develop"]

[Text] Under the auspices of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles and the Institute of Literature under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, the symposium on Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art was held in Beijing from 6 to 12 June. More than 80 persons attended the symposium including some theorists and commentators on literature and art who were in Beijing, teachers on literary and art theories from colleges and universities, and professional writers.

Zhou Yang, adviser to the Propaganda Department of the Central Committee and chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, attended and addressed the meeting. Also participating in the meeting were He Jingzhi, deputy director of the Propaganda Department of the Central Committee; Zhou Weizhi, vice minister of culture; and Lin Mohan, adviser to the Ministry of Culture. Chen Huangme, Feng Mu and Xu Juemin presided over the symposium. In his opening speech, Feng Mu briefly expounded on the principles, tasks, demands and guiding ideology of the meeting. In accordance with the essence of the resolutions passed at the sixth plenary session of the party, the symposium upheld the four basic principles, implemented the policy of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend," developed the practice of seeking truth from facts and of holding discussions on an equal footing and achieved gratifying results.

Comrades participating in the meeting reviewed the article by Comrade Hu Qiaomu, "Some Questions Concerning the Present Ideological Front," which had been recently republished in WENYI BAO. They also plunged into brisk discussion on how to scientifically assess and adopt a correct attitude towards Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art.

It Is Necessary To Adopt a Correct Attitude Toward Mao Zedong's Thinking on Literature and Art

The participants unanimously pointed out that Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art is an important component part of Mao Zedong Thought. In his "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art" and other articles on literature and art, Comrade Mao Zedong summed up the major experiences gained from all the movements for revolutionary literature and art since the May Fourth Movement of 1919 and showed clearly the orientation that literature and arts must serve the people, and in the first place workers, peasants and soldiers.

He set forth the idea of literary and art workers' integrating with the masses of the new era and the policy of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend." Comrade Mao Zedong also analysed the relationship between literature and the people, literature and life, literature and revolution, and between popularization and the raising of standards, origin and development as well as carrying forward the essence and using it for reference and the relationship between within the party and outside the party in the literary and art movements. He also solved a series of problems concerning theory, guidelines and policies for the proletarian literature and art of our country. The essence of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art was, is now and will remain the guideline for leading our revolutionary cause of literature and art to forge ahead. Many comrades further pointed out: It is necessary to adopt a scientific attitude towards Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. We must study and apply it in action, and we must uphold and develop it. If we do not adhere to Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art, we cannot begin to talk about developing it. If there is no development, we cannot attain the real goal of adhering to it. At present, we must continue to carry through outgoing reforms. We must differentiate between what are correct fundamental tenets which have been proven to be true through practice, and what are errors which stem from misinterpretation or the course of implementation. In particular, we must distinguish between what has been distorted by the leftist ideological trend on Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art and what are its true colors.

"Serving People and Socialism" Is an Important Development in Mao Zedong's Thinking on Literature and Art

The participants noted: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art and the scientific tenets of the whole or Mao Zedong Thought have been and are still being revived and developed in the sphere of literature and art. The guiding ideology formulated by the party Central Committee on literary and art work is correct and fruitful. We must be clearly aware of this. At the same time, there are now two wrong tendencies which should not be neglected in literary and art circles or in socieity. One is trying to negate the essence of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art and refusing to recognize its great theoretical contribution and its powerful, guiding role in the present literary and art cause. This is an expression of the bourgeois ideological trend of liberalization in the sphere of literary and art theory. The other one is ignoring history, dodging reality, continuing to adopt an attitude of metaphysics and dogmatism, blindly clinging to "every utterance being the truth," and denying the necessity of progressively developing Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art under the new historical circumstances. With a view to forging ahead, we must, therefore, wage struggle on the two frontlines.

They further pointed out: The practical conditions of today are quite different from those of 40 years ago when "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art" was published. In particular, many new problems have cropped up in the course of practice under the present new situation. In accordance with the stand, viewpoints and methods of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, we must sum up historical experience, study the new situation, tackle new problems and constantly enrich and promote the Marxist literary and art theory.

The participants also centered heated discussion upon the relationship between literature and art, and politics. Many comrades noted: Literature and art cannot be divorced from politics. This is self-explanatory. The functions of revolutionary literature and art are: Socialist politics can be promoted and perfected by the strength of artistic images. But if we say judgment of all literature and art must be subordinate to politics and to a certain given political line, this does not square with historical practice of literature and art and also is not scientific enough in a theoretical sense. Literature and art as well as politics each belong to the superstructure and affect each other. In the final analysis, they must be subject to the economic base. Politics and literature and art are not the ends. They must, in the end, serve the great majority of the masses of people and help the people to propel history forward.

Since the third plenary session, our party has readjusted the policy of literature and art, putting forward the general slogan of "serving the people and socialism" for the literary and art work in the new period. This is an important development for Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art.

Literature and Art Must Become a Gigantic Spiritual Force in Guiding People Forward With Communist Ideology.

The comrades held: Comrade Mao Zedong advocated that literature and art must be for the people, and in the first place for workers, peasants and soldiers, and that literary and art workers must integrate themselves with the masses of the new era. This ideological theory has been proven to be completely true through protracted practice. We should give greater scope to it under the new historical conditions. Combining literature and art with the great majority of the masses of people is the main avenue for pointing to the orientation that literature and art "must serve the people and socialism" and also is the only way to bring about a flourishing arena for socialist literary and artistic creation. Since the smashing of the "gang of four," the literary and art work in our country has begun to boom into prosperity. This is precisely attributable to the fact that literary and art workers have closely integrated themselves with the masses. At present, there are some literary works which are at sixes and sevens and have no connection with present-day life. A few comrades propagate the idea that literature and art should solely express egotism. There are also trends of liberalizing and merchandizing literary and art work. All of this completely results from the fact that some literary and art workers have been severely divorced from the masses. We must do our utmost to check such tendencies. Quite a few comrades also said: When plunging into the thick of life, writers and artists must pay attention not only to transforming their subjective world, but also to seeking sources for their creation work. Neither can be neglected. They must be done simultaneously. Generally speaking, transforming the subjective world of writers and artists involves their thoughts and feelings, correctly handling the relationship between subjectivism and objectivism and ceaselessly raising their cognitive ability. The party Central Committee explicitly points out: Most of our country's intellectuals have become part of the laboring people. Like workers and peasants, they are also objects the revolutionary cause depends on. It is wrong to separate the ideological remolding of literary and art workers from the self-remolding of the laboring people and regard them as two different matters in the sense of class nature. Everybody must continuously transform their subjective world while transforming the objective world. As spiritual engineers of mankind, literary and art workers should pay more attention to such remolding. They should study Marxism and society to the utmost. In the course of plunging into the thick of the struggle and life of the masses, they must consciously maintain an upright stand to combat the corrosive influences of bourgeois and other decadent ideas and to form and strengthen their Marxist world outlook. They must correctly understand and reflect the new era, portraying a new type of socialist people. With their excellent works containing noble ideas and perfect forms of art, they can inspire the people to join the socialist modernization. Literature and art must become trailblazers in improving social mood as well as a gigantic spiritual force in leading people ahead with communist ideology. Our literary works should neither exaggerate contradictions and describe our life as a gloomy one, nor should they evade contradictions and advocate the theory of no conflicts. Our literary works must fearlessly reflect contradictions and conflicts in real life, eulogize and affirm newly emerged people, things and ideas, as well as expose and criticize all old ideas, customs and influences which hinder socialist modernization. Both praise and criticism must stem from life, convince people of how things actually stand and help people to forge ahead courageously.

The "Double Hundred" Policy Requires That Socialist Literature and Art Be Devloped Through Struggle and Emulation.

Many of the participants point out: Advancing the policy of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" was a significant development of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art in the socialist period.

Since the third plenary session, the party Central Committee has once again carried out this policy, vigorously promoting the flourishing of literature and art in the new era. Owing to the sequelae of the 10 years of internal disorder and a certain degree of corrosive influences of the bourgeoisie which are being inevitably brought about by the open-door policy, we are bound to face various complicated problems in implementing the policy at the present stage. The "double hundred" policy requires that socialist literature and art be developed through struggle and emulation. If we renounce the party leadership and necessary struggle in the ideological sphere, we will commit rightist errors, leading to an overflow of bourgeois liberalization. Meanwhile, we will also commit the same errors as the "leftists" if we wage a struggle in the ideological field by simple and rude methods and if we doubt the correctness of the policy and forsake it just because of the emergence of osme erroneous things. Many comrades indicated: It is necessary to urge literary and art workers to continue to emancipate the mind. Aimed at the sole goal of "serving the people and socialism," it is necessary to bravely blaze new trails and to probe into the theory of literature and art. It must be allowed for anyone to make errors in the course of doing this work. We must help them correct their errors by proper methods. Freedom of criticism and self-criticism must be protected. We must take a clear-cut stand in criticising the literary works which run counter to the four basic principles. But we must not equate ordinary artistic and academic problems with political ones.

Many participants also pointed out that it is necessary to strengthen theoretical criticism of literature and art and reinforce the theoretical study contingent in this field. They said "criticism of literature and art must be developed" as Comrade Mao Zedong put it. A nation must have theoretical thinking. There must be correct theoretical guidance for literature and art work. Since the smashing of the "gang of four," theoretical workers in the field of literature and art have played an important role in setting to right things which have been thrown into disorder and carrying out thorough going reforms. But when compared with the flourishing development of literary and art work, obviously the theoretical criticism in this sphere still lags behind. The participants eagerly hoped that the literary and art leading departments and the party committees at all levels will pay more attention to theoretical criticism of literature and art, earnestly place the work of developing theoretical criticism on the major agenda and make still greater efforts to uphold and develop Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art.

It Is First Necessary To Uphold and Second, To Develop

On 12 May, Zhou Yang attended and spoke at the meeting. He noted that it is first necessary to uphold and second, to develop Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. Since the publication of the "Talks at the Yanan Forum," our epoch has undergone radical changes. Great change has also taken place in the relationships between workers, peasants and intellectuals. The study of theory must be aimed at the new situation, and tackling new problems. Historical viewpoints are developing viewpoints. No development means stagnation and stagnation means no prospects. He stressed that we should neither cut Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art apart from the whole of Mao Zedong Thought, nor should we separate Mao Zedong Thought from Marxism-Leninism, and nor should we isolate Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art from the May Fourth Movement for new literature and art. Zhou Yang also expressed his important views on the relationship between literature and art, and politics, as well as the problem of the present theoretical work in the field of literature and art. He said the slogan of plunging into the thick of life is correct. If writers can really identify themselves with the masses in thoughts and feelings, know the masses well in the thick of their struggle and try to be the real mouthpiece of the masses of the people, then they will not waver politically. When going into the life of the masses, writers and artists should not be observers, but should be persons who show them concern. They must maintain flesh-and-blood ties and share the weal and woe of the life they depict.

At the closing ceremony of the symposium, Chen Huangmei made a speech on behalf of the sponsors of the meeting. He pointed out: The symposium was a lively meeting in a solemn atmosphere. Generations of writers and artiists, old and young, have gathered together to air their own views and discuss matters of common concern. Their views on some issues are different, but they hold unanimous views on some major problems . This shows it is quite necessary to seriously study the "Talks" and Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. It will help in unifying understanding, establishing a clear orientation, strengthening unity and raising the consciousness of carrying out the party's policy on literature and art so as to make contributions in building socialist spiritual civilization.

SUZHOU MUNICIPAL LABOR REFORM SYSTEM EXAMINED

[Article by Qi Xiangyan [7871 5046 1693]: "Reform in Labor System in Suzhou Municipality" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Suzhou Municipality is one of the cities throughout the country which does well in solving employment problems. Of a total population of 551,000 people, 354,000 people have been employed. This accounts for 64.2 percent of the entire municipal population. At present, graduates of the senior middle schools of the municipality obtain employment the same year they graduate. Graduates of junior middle schools will also be employed after a 2-year training period. All new entrants into the labor force have been basically absorbed by all trades and professions.

There are several factors contributing to the improved situation in the employment problem in Suzhou Municipality. First, the most important factor is that Suzhou has rapidly developed production. The total industrial output value in 1981 was more than 54 times higher than the period shortly after liberation and has increased by 37 percent over 1978 output figures. In 1981 the proportion of light industry reached 64.89 percent. At the same time, the municipality has restored and developed the handicraft units which can absorb a large number of people entering the labor force. Second, collective economy in Suzhou Municipality has developed very rapidly. This is beneficial to the settlement of the employment problem. Third, Suzhou Municipality has done well in conducting education classes for staff members and workers. Training has been given according to the needs of the society. This has created conditions favorable for employment. Fourth, Suzhou Municipality has carried out a series of reforms in the labor system so that the channels of employment will remain unimpeded.

This article will mainly discuss the labor reform system in Suzhou and its significance.

In recent years, Suzhou Municipality has surmounted all obstacles to continuously reform its enrollment system and has gradually devised a series of feasible enrollment methods which are beneficial to the development of the national economy and the four modernizations. To put it briefly, the main characteristic of this enrollment system is that the units concerned are truly allowed to select and recruit the best people and individuals have certain freedoms in job selection.

The enrollment principle of Suzhou Municipality is: Candidates sign up on a voluntary basis and their moral character and intelligence are assessed in an all-round way. Unified examinations are held and the units concerned are allowed to select and enroll the best applicants and the successful candidates will be assigned to work according to their ability.

The specific ways of doing things are: First of all, all people awaiting employment are encouraged to register and the municipal labor departments organize various departments responsible for the work, labor service companies and units concerned to discuss enrollment methods and assign enrollment quotas to the departments concerned. All candidates take a uniform examination provided by the municipal labor bureau. Various units concerned put forth their conditions for enrollment (including political conditions, sex, age, educational level, height, eyesight and a passing grade for enrollment). Then the labor departments make repeated verifications, hold consultations and carry out readjustments in accordance with the development and needs of various enterprise units and the situation in manpower resources. Finally, various units concerned formulate their general enrollment regulations. After the work has been completed, the municipal labor bureau collects all relevant data and issues a public notice to the whole municipality to start open recruitment work. In the notices issued by the municipal labor bureau, the principles, scopes, enrollment methods and the enrollment conditions and quotas of various units as well as the passing marks and pay and conditions offered by the units concerned are stated. After the publication of the results of the examination, youths awaiting employment bring with them their test scores or the results of their university entrance examination (they may use their university entrance examination grade if it is higher so that they may be exempted from the enrollment examination) to register at the units which they select according to their own conditions and wishes.

Various enrollment units concerned assess the candidates in an all-round way, morally, intellectually and physically. Those candidates who pass are enrolled in a highest-grade-first order until the enrollment quotas are fulfilled. During the enrollment period, various units concerned publish admission lists daily. Those unsuccessful candidates may register with other units in which there are no registration limits. After completing the enrollment work, various units make public the basic personal data of the successful candidates to that the masses are able to exercise supervision over the work and the units concerned are able to carry out their verification. Those newly-recruited workers are examined and approved by the municipal labor bureau without exception and the responsible units issue notices concerning 6-month probations. Those who fail to satisfy the enrollment conditions during the probation period are dismissed with the approval of the responsible departments concerned. After the probation period, those candidates who can satisfy the enrollment conditions are officially employed after the units concerned have reported the matter to the responsible departments and the municipal labor bureau for approval.

Since the implementation of the system of open enrollment of workers on a voluntary basis, Suzhou Municipality has recruited 14 groups of new workers (including apprentices and trained workers) from 1979 to the end of 1981. More than 28,900 persons have been recruited after a comprehensive examination. Suzhou Municipality has also improved its enrollment system every year and gradually devised a series of reasonable methods so that the situation in labor and employment is improving.

In 1981 Suzhou Municipality carried out large-scale enrollment work and 134 units simultaneously attempted to enroll workers. The number of workers to be recruited was great (they planned to enroll 7,040 people) and the timetable was pressing (only 5-7 days for registration). However, the municipality only spent 2 months or so to successfully accomplish the work. The units concerned and youths awaiting employment and their parents felt satisfied with the work. In general, the society responded favorably to the new enrollment system.

There are many advantages to the new enrollment system adopted by Suzhou Municipality which are beneficial to gradually overcoming various defects in the labor system, such as a state monopoly on job assignments, dichotomization and so forth.

FIRST, THE SYSTEM IN WHICH THE ENTERPRISES CONCERNED ARE ALLOWED TO SELECT AND RECRUIT THE BEST APPLICANTS AND IN WHICH THE PERSONS AWAITING EMPLOYMENT HAVE CERTAIN FREEDOMS TO SELECT THEIR JOBS IS BENEFICIAL TO AROUSING THE INITIATIVE OF THE LABORERS AND ENHANCING THE PRODUCTIVITY OF THE ENTERPRISES.

The most serious defects of the old system of the "state monopoly on job assignments" and the "iron rice bowl" were that the units concerned and those who were awaiting employment were devoid of their right to selection. Therefore, they lacked initiative and enthusiasm. Enterprises were not satisfied with the labor forces assigned to them and those who were employed did not keep their minds on their work after they entered the units. The new enrollment system has provided the enterprises concerned with decisionmaking power to recruit new workers according to the needs of production and has given proper consideration to the individual interests and skills of the youths in their job selection. In so doing, both parties are willing to employ and to be employed and they feel satisfied with the work.

Generally speaking, those who are enrolled on a voluntary basis have kept their minds on their work. According to investigation, about 80-90 percent of those newly-recruited workers work actively and have made rapid progress. Youths recruited by a number of key factories and enterprises on the basis of high recruitment marks can generally satisfy the needs of production and they are fast in mastering techniques. This is a matter of vital significance to maintaining the stability of the workers ranks, enhancing workers technical proficiency and technical level and enhancing labor productivity. Since the implementation of the new enrollment system, commerce and service trades which people always looked down upon have employed a fairly large number of high-quality laborers on a voluntary basis.

SECOND, THIS METHOD IS BENEFICIAL TO FORMULATING UNIFIED PLANS AND MAINTAINING AN EQUILIBRIUM IN THE DEPLOYMENT OF THE LABOR FORCE UNDER THE GUIDANCE OF THE STATE -- "A UNIFIED PLAN DOES NOT MEAN RIGIDITY, WHEREAS ENLIVENING THE POLICY CAN ALSO PREVENT CHAOS."

It is no longer necessary for labor departments to take on the heavy burdens of deploying a labor force in a unified way. After freeing themselves from this hard and thankless load, they can devote their main efforts to the study of the party's guiding principles and policy and the way to make the labor system gradually conform with the development of the national economy under the new situation. Under the new labor system, the labor departments are responsible only for organizing unified enrollment examinations, coordinating and balancing the labor plans of various units and exercising supervision over the implementation of these policies and plans. In so doing, they free themselves from specific and trivial details. Suzhou Municipality has planned to develop the traditional silk cloth industry and textile industry. Through regulating the enrollment marks of the job applicants, the labor departments truly ensure satisfying the needs of the labor force in the two industrial departments mentioned above. It was difficult to accomplish such a task when the former system of the state monopoly for job assignments was implemented. Let us cite another example. To support urban construction and environmental and public health departments, the municipal labor bureau has formulated a policy to appropriately increase workers wages and welfare funds to attract more young people to work in these two departments and stabilize the workers ranks. All this has played an active role in readjusting to a certain extent the labor structure of Suzhou Municipality.

THIRD, THE NEW LABOR SYSTEM ENCOURAGES YOUNGSTERS TO STUDY CULTURAL KNOWLEDGE AND MAKE PROGRESS. THIS WILL BE BENEFICIAL IN RAISING THE QUALITY OF THE NEWLY-RECRUITED STAFF MEMBERS AND WORKERS AND ENHANCING THEIR SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL LEVEL.

Under the old system of the state monopoly on job assignments, it made no difference whether one studied or not, studied more or less or studied well or ineffectively. Students received jobs after their graduation as long as they muddled along in schools for several years, and workers were promoted and their wages increased after they had worked for several years. This system severely dampened the enthusiasm of youngsters for studying cultural knowledge, science and technology. The ideas that "early employment is better than studying more" and the "length of service is more beneficial than educational achievement" prevailed among parents and youths. At present, after the implementation of the enrollment system of overall examination and recruiting the best persons, graduates of junior middle schools undergo a 2-year training period. This has effectively promoted educational work of the whole municipality. After the conclusion of the unified enrollment examination of 1980, educational departments published the candidates' examination results in various schools concerned. This has objectively played the role of testing the teaching quality and promoting school work.

FOURTH, THE NEW ENROLLMENT SYSTEM IS A MATTER OF SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE TO CORRECTING THE PARTY'S WORK STYLE, OPPOSING UNHEALTHY PHENOMENA SUCH AS "PRIVILEGES" AND "BACK-DOOR DEALS" AND PROMOTING A REASONABLE DEPLOYMENT OF MANPOWER.

During the 10 chaotic years, unhealthy tendencies in the deployment of manpower such as "privileges" and "back-door deals" were common occurrences. They exerted a widespread pernicious influence. The system of recruiting workers by open examination and selecting the best applicants has basically ended the loophole of carrying out dishonest practices in employment. The fact that leading cadres have set an example has played a great role in reforming the enrollment system. The children of the deputy secretary of the Suzhou Municipal CCP Committee and the deputy director of the posts and telecommunications department were treated in the same manner as the children of the masses. Those who did not achieve passing marks or were in physically poor condition were eliminated through selection. The masses have been sincerely convinced.

The reform of the labor system in Suzhou is a good attempt and conforms with the objective requirements of the development of the socialist economy. It merits our attention.

SHANGHAI REPORTS INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION EXPANDS

OW041313 Beijing XINHUA in English 1251 GMT 4 Jul 82

[Text] Shanghai, July 4 (XINHUA) -- China's leading industrial city of Shanghai registered a 7.4 percent increase in the total value of industrial output in the January-June period over the same period of last year, based on statistics provided by the Shanghai Economic Commission. It has fulfilled 50.1 percent of the planned target for the year 1982. Production of light industry kept the same steady growth as last year, with an 8 percent increase over the first half year of 1981. This year Shanghai has turned out large amounts of consumer goods as demanded by the state and the society. Some goods which were short of supply a year before are in ample supply now. Durables favored by the people such as bicycles, cameras, knitting wool, television sets, radios and furniture in sets had a fairly big growth this year, ranging from 18.9 percent to 92.6 percent. Cassette recorders increased 120 percent and washing machines sevenfold. Heavy industry production had a 6.5 percent growth in the first six months, compared with the corresponding period of last year. The increase was fairly rapid, particularly with the machinery and electrical engineering industry, as more demands were placed for revamping of existing enterprises. Growth of the machinery industry, in its turn, has spurred the expansion of the metallurgical, meters and instruments, chemical and other industries.

An official of the Shanghai Economic Commission pointed out that the continuous steady growth of Shanghai industrial production in the first half of this year shows the initial achievements of the readjustment of the national economy. Industry is now developing on a sound and rational way, and the state and the people are both benefited.

According to statistics of the local branch of the People's Bank of China, residents' savings deposits in the first five months of this year increased by 400 million yuan, compard with the end of last December.

GUANGDONG HOLDS FINANCE, TRADE CONFERENCE

Wang Quanguo Speech

HK120457 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 82 p 1

[Report: "Comrade Wang Quanguo Stressed Yesterday at the Provincial Finance and Trade Conference Strengthening Leadership Over Economic Work and Developing the Excellent Situation"]

[Excerpts] Speaking yesterday at the provincial finance and trade work conference being held in Foshan, provincial CCP committee Secretary Wang Quanguo stressed strengthening leadership and control over economic work and further developing the excellent situation in the province. Comrade Wang Quanguo first analyzed the situation in the province's finance and trade work. He pointed out that since the third plenary session, Guangdong has scored notable success in finance and trade work. Circulation work has stimulated the development of industrial and agricultural production and construction, and improved market supplies. Thanks to the efforts of the cadres and masses, the province has maintained relatively high growth in economic construction. However, there are also a number of problems in our economic work. For instance, there has been a decline in the volume of foreign trade; normal circulation channels are clogged; there has been no fundamental turn for the better in the economic results of industrial production; and there are many difficulties in agriculture. The cadres and masses of the whole province must work hard to solve these problems.

Speaking on questions of economic policy, Comrade Wang Quanguo said that the Central Committee's policies laid down since the third plenary session have been supported by the cadres and masses, who describe this as the third golden age since liberation. Recently, however, certain comrades have become apprehensive and worry that the policies will change. This is a complete misunderstanding. There will be no changes in the party's basic policies; there will be no change in the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy. This is because practice has proven that this policy is correct and has been very effective in stimulating the development of production, promoting political stability and improving the people's living standards. The provincial CCP committee has repeatedly stressed the stability and continuity of policies. Of course, there may be some readjustments in certain specific policies. The provincial CCP committee and government recently issued relevant regulations aimed mainly at strengthening controls and correcting certain erroneous ways of doing things that have emerged, such as smuggling and peddling contraband, indiscriminately hiking prices and so on. Such things were not permitted by our policies anyway. As for certain policy readjustments such as the strengthening of controls over eight types of agricultural and sideline products, such readjustments are normal. This is because since the previous 111 types of products were reduced to 26, it has been found necessary after a period of practice to strengthen the sense of planning regarding certain products. In fact, as far as any one area is concerned, controls are only being actually strengthened over a few products. We hold that readjustments of certain specific policies are normal, because when a new policy is formulated it cannot be completely perfect right from the start. There will be such readjustments in the future in the wake of the test of practice plus the continual changes in the situation.

Comrade Wang Quanguo stressed: We must currently pay attention to the fact that certain comrades only reckon up the small accounts of partial interests and do not positively, correctly and completely understand the measures we have recently taken; they hanker for the liberalized ways of doing things in the previous stage when they made money through doing business and made fortunes amid disorder. With regard to this erroneous trend, which may be conscious or unconscious, the leading cadres at all levels must keep sober minds and strenghen education for the cadres and masses.

Comrade Wang Quanguo analyzed the relationship between strengthening controls and enlivening the economy. He said: Certain comrades are afraid that taking steps to strengthen controls will stifle the economy to death.

It is therefore necessary to reiterate that during the current period, the guiding ideology of the provincial CCP committee and government is that controls should be strengthened. This is because when we stressed "release" and "enlivenment" in the past, controls failed to keep abreast, with the result that certain phenomena of chaos appeared. In stressing controls, we are mainly seeking to promote still more healthy development of the economy, not stifle it to death. Places that have still not enlivened their economy must continue to do so. We must succeed in "liveliness without chaos, and control without stifling things to death." We must believe that we will certainly be able to embark on this new path and that there will be no repeat of the past situation of "chaos as soon as things are relaxed, and death as soon as controls are imposed."

Comrade Wang Quanguo pointed out: In order to correctly carry out the party policies, we must correctly handle the relations between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. At present we must stress the interests of the state. This is because the series of party economic policies laid down since the third plenary session has effectively stimulated economic development and enabled the national economy to embark on the path of steady and healthy development. In the past few years the state has made very great efforts to improve the people's living standards. The peasants have indeed become rich in varying degrees, and there have been notable improvements in the living standards of the great majority of workers. At present the state's financial difficulties are rather great, and we cannot do any more to increase the peasants' income or improve the workers' living standards by reducing financial revenue and increasing expenditures. In the future, we can only increase the peasants' income and improve the workers' living standards on the basis of developing production and improving economic returns. We must step up education in taking simultaneous account of the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, strengthen our concept of the state, advocate making greater contributions to the state and ensure the fulfillment and over-fulfillment of the state plans. Only with greater state financial strength, increased speed in building the four modernizations, and the enrichment of the state can the state apply still greater efforts in supporting agriculture and improving people's living standards.

Comrade Wang Quanguo stressed the importance of strengthening leadership over economic work. He said: Finance and trade work and price work represent a major issue related to the state's economic construction and the people's livelihood. This work is strongly related to policy and is very difficult. The party committees and government at all levels must strengthen leadership over it; otherwise, it cannot meet the needs of the new situation. As far as the party committees and government at all levels are concerned, they must strengthen leadership over the whole field of economic work. Since the third plenary session, the main efforts of the party committees and government have gradually shifted to economic construction; however, only some of the counties and municipalities have truly grasped the whole field of economic work in a unified way. Some counties and municipalities only pay attention to grasping agriculture or industry; they fail to attach sufficient importance to other economic work, and have not grasped the whole field of economic work in a unified way. Certain of our counties and municipalities are rather poor, and the state will provide support for those places, but the main thing is that the county and muncipal party committees and governments must improve their standard of leadership over economic work, truly grasp the whole field of economic work in a unified way, make all-round plans, focus on the key points, bring their local superior features into play, develop production and enliven the circulation channels. Only then can those places achieve a fundamental transformation. I hope that the provincial, prefectural, municipal and county CCP committees and governments will make common efforts to improve the standard of leadership over economic work.

Work Conference Ends

[Summary] The provincial conference on financial and commercial work convened by the provincial people's government concluded in Foshan today.

Provincial Vice Governor Yang Deyuan gave a summary report. He said that "how to carry out the general policy of developing the economy and ensuring supplies is still a question of the first importance for our financial and commercial work. The development of production will provide circulation with a solid material basis. Financial, trade, supply and marketing, and grain departments, as well as banks and all other financial and commercial departments, must do a good job in supporting industrial and agricultural production and providing it with more funds, material resources and technology so that the purchase of its products and the people's income can be increased and the export trade be promoted on the basis of the development of production."

Referring to the open-door policy, Yang Deyuan said that "the import of foreign capital and advanced technology is aimed at promoting our national industry and raising our ability of self-reliance. Foreign exchange must mainly be used to import equipment, technology and raw materials which are useful in developing production. They must not be used to import excessive or unnecessary consumer goods."

On the question of studying and applying objective laws, Yang Deyuan said: "When fixing commodity prices and working out economic policy, it is necessary to study and apply the law of value and take note of the rational price parities between different commodities. Adjusting prices and formulating policies in a blind way will inevitably be punished by objective economic laws."

Yang Deyuan also said a few words about the purchase of agricultural and sideline products, the sales of industrial products in the countryside, prices and the market, financial work, the reorganization of enterprises and the struggle against serious economic crimes. "In conclusion, Comrade Yang Deyuan required the broad masses of cadres and staff on the financial and commercial front to constantly study the new situation, solve new problems and improve management so that a breakthrough can be made in the financial and commercial work in this province."

HENAN HOLDS SEVEN MEETINGS ON ECONOMIC WORK

HK231119 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 22 Jun 82

[Excerpt] According to HENAN RIBAO, the Henan Provincial People's Government recently held seven successive meetings of the provincial governor and vice governors to handle official business. In close connection with the realities of the province's planned production and circulation sphere, the meetings conscientiously analyzed economic returns gained during the first 4 months of this year and studied measures to tackle economic tasks in a comprehensive way.

Since the beginning of this year, vast numbers of cadres, staff and workers throughout the province have conscientiously implemented the spirit of the national conference on industry and communications. From guiding of ideology to actual work, they have started getting on the track of increasing economic returns. At present, there is a good situation in all our economic work. After waging the arduous struggle to combat drought in the agricultural field, we may reap a good summer harvest in the near future. There has also been a steady increase in our industrial output with the initiation of a good development of economic returns. During the first 4 months of this year, the province's total value of industrial output increased by 15.7 percent, its income from sales increased by 14.16 percent, its profits increased by 14.58 percent and the labor productivity of personnel as a whole increased by 8.6 percent compared with the same period last year. However, major targets for economic returns have been most unsatisfactorily set, such as targets for profits to be turned over to the higher authorities, targets set for the turnover of circulating funds and targets set for fixed production costs. Some targets for this year are even lower than last year's targets.

The instructions said: Leaders at all levels must fully understand the importance and urgency of strengthening urban management and changing the guiding ideology of urban work. They must change the idea of attaching more importance to construction and less to management to the idea of grasping construction on the one hand and management on the other and include urban management on their agenda.

The instructions stressed: It is necessary to strengthen the building of the professional urban management force and enhance the social status of professional urban management personnel. It is imperative to seriously deal with the situation of indiscriminately making things difficult for and even assaulting urban management personnel.

In conclusion, the instructions of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government demanded that in accordance with the regulations which the central authorities and the province proclaimed on strengthening urban management and in conjunction with the actual situation of their localities, all municipalities must formulate detailed rules and regulations for enforcement and work out the method of management.

This year's guiding ideology for organizing production was changed. Generally speaking, importance has been attached to improving the economic returns. "From January to May, the province's local industrial units achieved a sales income of 4.7 billion yuan, showing an increase of more than 7 percent over the corresponding period last year."

However, certain problems still exist in industrial and communications production. The main ones are: The quality of some products fluctuates and production costs rise; there are also transportation problems as a result of a relatively rapid increase in heavy industrial production; certain products are unmarketable, thus causing stockpiling; and so forth. In order to tackle these problems and achieve a more rapid economic improvement, the provincial government has decided to hold a telephone conference this afternoon to make arrangements for the province's industrial and communications production.

XIZANG MEETING NOTES PROBLEMS IN EDUCATION

[Summary] According to XIZANG RIBAO, the Standing Committee of the Xizang CPPCC recently held a forum to discuss the region's enrollment work in institutes of higher education and its education work in recent years. The meeting noted the achievements and also the problems, and put forward measures for improving things.

(Qiaoerba Duojierzhu), deputy director of the regional education department, made a speech on the situation of work in recent years. He said: From 1977 to 1981, institutes of higher education enrolled over 2,000 students in Xizang. Quite a large proportion of them were of minority nationalities. "However, there are also a number of problems. The main ones are: There is a serious lack of sources of Tibetan and other minority-nationality candidates for the examinations, their quality is rather poor, and few can be selected."

The CPPCC standing committee members held: The students enrolled in minority-nationality areas should be mainly of minority nationalities, so as to create conditions for cultivating minority-nationality cadres. It is necessary to expand the sources of candidates, first among the minority nationalities. The members also put forward the following views:

"1. The schools must strive to build strong and united leadership groups and seriously implement the party's education principles.

"2. Strengthen ideological and political education in secondary schools, to ensure that the students can develop morally, academically and physically.

"3. Strengthen the building of the force of teachers and strive to improve the quality of teaching.

"4. Do a good job in running key secondary schools and bring about an all-round improvement in teaching in secondary schools, so as to lay a firm foundation for student enrollment in institutes of higher education."

FAVORABLE SITUATION IN XIZANG RURAL AREAS SEEN

[XIZANG RIBAO 22 June commentary: "The Situation in Rural and Pastoral Areas of Xizang Region Is Now in the Ascendant"]

[Text] The commentary says: Since winter last year and spring this year, in accordance with the spirit of the national conference on rural work, all areas throughout our region have seriously summed up their experiences in implementing, perfecting and stabilizing the agricultural and livestock production responsibility system, further readjusted the production relationship between rural and pastoral areas and opened up and developed the excellent situation in agricultural and livestock production. At present, the public in rural and pastoral areas are reassured, peasants and herdsmen are enthusiastic about turning from poor to wealthy and agricultural, livestock, forestry and sideline production is advancing full steam ahead. The situation in rural and pastoral areas is just opening up.

The commentary says: Over the past half year or more, our region has mainly grasped the following several links in summing up the experiences in implementing, perfecting and stabilizing the agricultural and livestock production responsibility system:

First, all places have firmly grasped the study, publicity and implementation of the minutes of the national conference on rural work, corrected their understanding, eliminated the various misunderstandings of the production responsibility system and unified the ideology of the cadres and the masses on the basis of the spirit of the minutes. In light of the confused ideas existing among relevant cadres and commune members, Shannan Prefecture, Lhasa Municipality and Nagqu and Ngari Prefectures have laid stress on education in the one persist, two long-term no changes, and taking three things into consideration, so as to enable the cadres and commune members to strengthen their spontaneity for persisting in the road of socialist collectivization,to heighten their understanding of the production responsibility system, to clearly understand the importance of taking the interests of the state, the collective and the individual into consideration and to strive to make even greater contributions for the country. In the course of unifying ideology and understanding on the basis of the spirit of the minutes, Qamdo and Shannan Prefectures have helped the cadres and the masses draw a clear ideological and political demarcation line between peasant households assuming full responsibility for task completion and commune members dividing up the land and going it alone, between ownership and right of use, between working hard to become wealthy and speculation and profiteering, between mutual help and cooperation and hiring labor for exploitation and between difference of income and polarization among the peasants. Therefore, they have eliminated the confused ideas and all kinds of worries.

Second, with the spirit of the minutes as the guiding principle, all places have further implemented the policies, concluded contracts and correctly handled the relationship between state monopoly and full responsibility.

In light of their actual local situation, many prefectures have emphasized that production teams must make unified arrangements for the cultivation plans, communes and brigades must engage in collective industry and sideline occupation in a unified way and communes and brigades must use and control in a unified way pastures, water conservation facilities, mechanical and electrical equipment and large and medium-size agricultural machinery and tools. Meanwhile, all places have paid attention to the signing and concluding of contracts, and the duties, powers and interests of the collective and the individual have been fixed in the form of mass legislation. Some counties have mobilized the masses to establish the necessary system for fulfilling contracts to uphold the dignity of contracts. They have thus vigorously given play to the superiority of the unified collective undertakings and also inspired the enthusiasm of individual undertakings.

Third, the readjustment of commune and brigade leadership groups has been strengthened and the grassroots organizations have been brought into play in the course of perfecting the production responsibility system. On the whole, Shannan Prefecture carried out the readjustment of commune and brigade leadership groups in four parts:

In the first part the prefecture conducted penetrating investigation and study to clearly understand the situation of grassroots cadres. In the second part all county CCP committees ran training classes to train commune and brigade cadres in turn, by stages and in groups. In the third part criticism and self-criticism was conducted in conjunction with reality, good party members and good cadres were assessed and activities of commending the progressives were vigorously carried out. In the fourth part leadership groups were reelected and the grassroots cadres work responsibility system was established.

In the course of readjusting commune and brigade leadership groups, many places have organized commune and brigade cadres to conduct discussion about what they serve as cadres for, whom cadres should serve and how cadres suit the new situation. They have led them to take the socialist road, taught them to spontaneously implement the line, principles and policies of the party, cherished their enthusiasm for work and creativity, supported their work, showed concern for them and helped them overcome their practical difficulties in production and livelihood. The situation of grassroots leading groups and cadres has become much better.

Commune and brigade cadres have inspired their spirit and actively led the masses to perfect the production responsibility system and to develop agricultural and livestock production. In addition, all areas have linked perfecting the production responsibility system with promoting the all-round development of agricultural and livestock production. Under the guidance of the state plan, in light of the reality of localities, the internal structure of agricultural and livestock production has been readjusted. The production measures for agricultural and livestock production have been carried out in light of local conditions and the activities of scientific farming and scientific breeding of livestock have been vigorously carried out. While stepping up agricultural and livestock production, we must open all avenues for sideline production, vigorously conduct diversification and develop household sideline production. Therefore, the economy of rural and pastoral areas has quickly developed, people's livelihood has remarkably improved and the masses' mental outlook has undergone an apparent change. Peasants and herdsmen are full of confidence and energy to achieve a small change in 3 years and to quicken their steps in turning from poor to wealthy.

In conclusion, the commentary by the XIZANG RIBAO reporter says: Judging from the situation in rural and pastoral areas of the whole region, the work of perfecting the agricultural and livestock production responsibility system is just beginning. The development in various areas is also uneven. Our future work is still very arduous. Therefore, all areas must further study, publicize and implement the minutes of the national conference on rural work, further unify the ideology of the cadres and the masses on the basis of the spirit of the minutes and seriously sum up the practical experiences of the preceding stage.

We must adhere to the principle of taking such measures as are suitable to local conditions and of giving guidance according to different categories. We must further do a good job in summing up the experiences in implementing, perfecting and stabilizing the production responsibility system to make the economy of rural and pastoral areas progress relatively healthily and smoothly.

YUNNAN MILITARY COMMANDER VIEWS IMPROVING WORK

HK301414 Kunming YUNNAN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by Yunnan Provincial Military District Commander Chen Jiagui [7115 1367 6311]: "Putting Militia Work on a Sound Basis in Three Aspects Is an Important Content of Strengthening Border Defense Construction"]

[Text] On this day 20 years ago, Comrade Mao Zedong issued the directive on "Putting Militia Work on a Sound Basis Organizationally, Politically and Militarily." Today, as we are cherishing the memory of the attention paid by Chairman Mao to militia work during his lifetime, we deeply sense that Chairman Mao's directive on putting militia work on a sound basis in three aspects is still of important guiding significance to militia building during the new historical period, and that putting border areas' militia work on a sound basis organizationally, politically and militarily is an important content of strengthening border defense construction.

At present, we are in a new historical period and the focus of the work of the whole party is the four modernizations. How are we to enable our militia work to meet the needs of border defense and the needs of protecting the four modernizations under the new situation? After investigating the working conditions of our militia units in border areas throughout the province, we deeply sense that during the new historical period, there should be no change in either the strategic position of the militia or the role played by the militia, and that Chairman Mao's thinking on people's war was in the past, is at present and will be in the future our magic weapon for defeating the enemy. With regard to this point, there must be no misunderstanding or vacillation whatsoever. Yunnan is located on the frontier and faces Vietnamese expansionists. Therefore, it is more pressing and important for Yunnan to promote militia work. Over the past few years, we have energetically strengthened border defense construction and have adopted such important measures as carrying out political and ideological education for militia organizations in border areas and strengthening organizational building and military training for militia organizations in border areas. As a result, militia ranks have become smaller in number but have also become more highly trained, the military and political qualities of the militia units have been greatly enhanced and the combat effectiveness of our militia units has also been strengthened. Militia units in areas bordering Vietnam have on many occasions either conducted military operations conducted by PLA frontier units, thus defending the motherland's sacred territory. Taking charge of their localities, our militia units have set up outposts, held positions, protected the masses engaged in production from attacks, hit hard at Vietnamese harassment and safeguarded the security of border areas. Advanced militia squads, advanced militia platoons and advanced individuals from militia units have emerged in large numbers. During the struggle to protect border areas, vast numbers of our militiamen were ready to assemble at the first call and were capable of fighting and winning. A fundamental experience in having such militiamen is that we must unremittingly follow the way forward for militia building as pointed out by Chairman Mao and conscientiously put militia work on a sound basis organizationally, politically and militarily.

Of course, our modernization program has set higher demands on militia building. Our militia must be organized in a better way and be highly disciplined.

Our militiamen must have a more courageous and indomitable militant spirit, be capable of skillfully operating their weapons and equipment, and master military tactics and techniques for conducting military operations under modern conditions in specific environments such as mountainous frontier districts and the jungle on the frontier. To meet these demands, we must do well in solving the following problems at present:

First of all, we must deepen our understanding of the strategic position of the militia and the role played by the militia under the new situation. The four modernizations advanced by the party Central Committee include not only the modernization of industry, agriculture, and science and technology, but also the modernization of our national defense. It is true that the modernization of our national defense must have the modernization of industry, agriculture, and science andtechnology as its foundation. However, without the protection offered by the powerful military forces including the militia, it will be impossible for our country to have solid economic strength. The two supplement each other. The militia is an important organizational foundation of army building and is also a component part of the modernization of our national defense. Party committees at all levels must regard militia work as their day-to-day work, regularly discuss and check up on militia work, sum up good experiences in militia work, solve existing problems in militia work, and strengthen concrete leadership over militia work. The provincial military district, military subdistricts and people's armed forces departments at county levels must attach major importance to militia work and devote their major energies to promoting militia work. They must also conscientiously respect and accept the leadership of local party committees, always ask the leadership of local party committees for instructions, always report on their work to the leadership of local party committees, make realistic suggestions in a timely manner in accordance with actual local conditions, and be good at giving advice. At the same time, they must be good at integrating militia work with the central tasks of localities, arrange and carry out militia work around economic construction, and give full play to the key leading role played by militiamen during the construction and the protection of the four modernizations.

Second, it is imperative to do well in carrying out political and ideological work for militiamen. This is aimed at guaranteeing a sound political basis for militia work. Political organs of people's armed forces departments at all levels must devote their major energies to promoting political work for militiamen, flexibly apply the PLA's political work experience to militia work, and carry out political and ideological work for every link in militia work. The militia's political and ideological work must be integrated with the central task of the party. Political and ideological education for militiamen must be listed in the plans of propaganda departments of local party committees, and the political and ideological education for militiamen must be jointly grasped and conducted by political organs of people's armed forces departments and local party committees. We must regularly conduct education on the party's line, guiding principles and policies for militiamen. Moreover, in accordance with the characteristics of militiamen and in close connection with the militiamen's ideological reality, we must also conduct education in the situation and combat readiness, in the nature, tasks and fine tradition of our militia, in patriotism and revolutionary heroism, and in the "five stresses and four beauties" and the "four haves, three stresses and two braves." We must carry out the activities of vying with one another in creating advanced units and in becoming advanced individuals, and put political and ideological education on a sound basis.

Third, we must strengthen military training for militiamen and increase the combat effectiveness of our militia forces. During the training we must stress the main points and emphasize practical results. We must conscientiously do well in the basic and practical training of basic-level armed militia cadres and militiamen, promote the command training and the training in combat styles for basic-level militia cadres, and complete as quickly as possible the training of a contingent of key militiamen who are capable of carrying out fighting tasks for border defense.

Training methods must be adopted in accordance with local conditions and the quality of the trainees. Training departments at all levels must uphold the system of checking on and assessing training and strictly check on and assess every unit's training personnel, training times, training content and training results.

Fourth, leaders at all levels must further improve work style, pay attention to studying new conditions and solving new problems, and constantly sum up and spread new experiences in militia work. We must not only see certain difficulties in militia work as created by the implementation of various forms of the production responsibility system and the economic responsibility system in factories and rural areas, but must also see that many favorable conditions and broad prospects have been created and opened up for militia work by the new situation in the four modernizations and the party's current policies. We must investigate and understand in a timely manner all these new conditions and new problems, and study with local cadres and people the ways to resolve contradictions. We believe that we can surely promote militia work and militia building under the new situation and turn our border defense into a strong border defense as long as we constantly study new conditions and solve new problems.

GUIZHOU PLA EDUCATION CIRCULAR -- To mark the 55th anniversary of the founding of the PLA, the Political Department of the Guizhou Provincial Military District recently issued a circular to all units of the military district, demanding that all PLA units link education in patriotism with anticorruption education and seriously organize commanders and fighters to study relevant articles and memoirs which have been published by the papers. The circular calls on them to learn from the great meritorious service of the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation and to conduct traditional education in supporting government and cherishing people. Around Army Day on 1 August, all PLA units must send comfort groups to comfort organs of the party and the government of localities and mass organizations. They must also comfort dependents of martyrs and PLA personnel, retired PLA cadres and injured and sick servicemen. [Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 27 Jun 82 HK]

SICHUAN TRANSPLANTS PADDY RICE -- Despite low temperatures and summer drought, cadres and commune members in rural areas in Sichuan Province have fulfilled the province's quota for transplanting paddy rice on some 45 million mu. They have laid a good foundation for striving for a bumper paddy rice harvest this year. The province transplanted more early and mid-season rice this year than in any previous year. More than 80 percent of the rice was of superior seeds. In the course of transplanting, all places strengthened leadership and helped communes and brigades establish and perfect the responsibility systems of breeding draft cattle by themselves and controlling and using water. They also promptly organized supply of chemical fertilizers and diesel oil to facilitate transplanting paddy rice. [Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 17 Jun 82 HK]

LIAONING RIBAO ON MARKET MANAGEMENT EXCESSES

HK140552 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 6 Jul 82 p 2

[Reporter's feature: "Tidying Up Disorder Must Not Be Done in a Disorderly Way -- A Commentary on Market Management Issues"]

[Text] Over the past few months, under the pretense of tidying up disorder, departments and personnel concerned in some localities of our province have committed excesses in all types of urban markets, thus hampering efforts to enliven our markets. For example, some environmental sanitation departments removed wheels from some mobile shop carts engaged in selling goods, broke off the arms of steelyards, and confiscated all commodities found in such carts, thus forcing the carts to stop doing business. Some of them wantonly confiscated people's business licenses and cameras or imposed fines on people at will. Some departments concerned also sent a large number of people's policemen to markets to unilaterally suppress temporary small retailers and peddlers who had the permission of industrial and commercial departments to do business. Some of them even stopped at road junctions those peasants who tried to go into town to sell their eggs and other agricultural and sideline products. These excesses have created bad impressions among the masses of people. As a result, people have been misled into thinking that the party's policy on enlivening markets has been changed.

After learning about these conditions, this reporter visited the markets of several municipalities and interviewed personnel of departments concerned. I deplored the things I saw and heard. On Sunday, 13 June, I visited five markets engaged in trading in agricultural products in a municipality with a population of 1 million. The five markets were relatively desolate and business was rather bad. During my visit to one of the markets on 13 June, I was told that in former days, the market always had more than 30 fishdealers, over 100 dealers in Chinese cabbages and some 20 to 30 dealers in dried bean curd. On 13 June, the market had only 10 dealers in Chinese cabbages and 3 dealers in dried bean curd, and did not have a single fishdealer. These conditions are the aftereffects of a large-scale operation for "tidying up disorder." Although the people's cries of discontent have been raised everywhere, a leading comrade of a department concerned was pleased with and praised these conditions as "just sound."

With regard to illegal business activities in markets and with regard to those who block traffic and hinder sanitation work in markets, this reporter believes that it is quite necessary for departments concerned to strengthen management work and to adopt relevant disciplinary measures in accordance with specific conditions. This kind of tidying up of disorder is advantageous to safeguarding order and promoting economic prosperity in markets. This will enliven markets without causing disorder. However, the deeds of some departments concerned are not deeds of tidying up disorder, but are deeds of suffocating enlivened markets. These departments have not strictly distinguished between disorderly markets and enlivened markets. Moreover, they have not proceeded from the interests of the whole. They have merely stressed partial and local interests. They have even overstepped their authority, acted as they pleased, and indiscriminately lashed out at others. They have treated enlivened markets as disorderly ones. These are unpopular practices. Urban markets are involved in meeting the people's multifaceted needs. If we implement the simple method of attacking and ousting people from markets, fewer and fewer commodities will appear on the market, commodity prices will be higher and higher, there certainly will be adverse effects on the normal relationship between supply and demand on the market and the channels for the circulation of commodities will be blocked. Implementing this method will create an opportunity for speculators to exploit, will inconvenience the masses and will also be detrimental to the development of production.

It is known to all that enlivening markets and promoting economic prosperity in both urban and rural areas are the major economic policies formulated by the party's third plenary session. Over the past few years, all our departments have made joint efforts to remove ideological obstacles and to break through forbidden zones. Everyone has endured difficult times in making great efforts to create today's dynamic situation. Although the current situation is still not dynamic enough, the broad masses of the people are pleased with it. All departments concerned should treasure this and must not attach importance to partial and local interests at the expense of the whole. We must treasure the overall situation, jointly safeguard it and promote its consolidation and development.

As for the study of ways to promote market management and bring about normal order in markets, we should study the experience gained by Tiexi district's Jiulu market in Shenyang Municipality: Labor should be divided among departments, but the big family comprising all our departments must not be broken into parts; all departments should play a game of chess together.

NINGXIA ISSUES CIRCULAR ON CURRENCY WITHDRAWAL

[Report: "Autonomous Regional People's Government Issues Circular, Calling on All Areas To Do Well in Withdrawing Currency From Circulation and To Strictly Control Putting Currency Into Circulation"]

[Text] On 3 June the Ningxia Autonomous Regional People's Government ordered the transmission of the regional finance and trade office's report on paying close attention to and promoting the withdrawal of currency from circulation and on exercising strict control over putting currency into circulation. The regional government called on all areas and departments to conscientiously implement the spirit of the State Council's document concerned, to promptly make studies and draw up plans for withdrawing currency from circulation and for exercising control over putting currency into circulation, and to adopt concrete measures for achieving greater successes than were achieved last year.

The regional finance and trade office's report analyzed this year's regional situation of withdrawing currency from circulation and putting currency into circulation. By the end of April, the whole region's currency accounts showed a balance of a net withdrawal from circulation of 6.52 million yuan. This is a relatively good situation. However, some problems still exist. The following are some major existing problems: The cash put into rural circulation has increased by nearly 100 percent as compared with the same period last year; the total sales of commodities in rural areas registered a drop compared with the same period last year; there has been an insufficient supply of some marketable manufactured goods for daily use, and some marketable manufactured goods for daily use have been out of stock for some time; our rural areas' much-needed means of production and building materials such as chemical fertilizer, medium-sized and small farm tools and farm animals have been in seriously short supply; and in organizing the circulation of commodities and in carrying out management of commodities, there are still some blocked channels within our commercial departments that attach major importance to circulating commodities that produce great profits, make no effort to circulate those commodities that produce small profits and pay no attention to circulating those commodities that produce no profit at all. As a result, there has been an articifially imposed decrease in the varieties of commodities and some small commodities have been frequently out of stock. All these problems have directly produced adverse effects on the withdrawal of commercial currency from circulation.

The circular said that in accordance with the spirit of the State Council's document concerned and in close connection with concrete local conditions, all areas must do well in emphatically grasping the following tasks:

1. We must do well in conscientiously sending industrial products to our rural areas. We must resolutely smash the current system in which urban and rural commercial departments wrangle with each other over trifles. There must be no departmental blockade between commercial departments and supply and marketing departments. Commercial departments can also go to rural areas. There should be unified arrangements for the supply of means of livelihood for both the urban and rural markets. We should also develop in a planned way a group of collective commercial households and individual commercial households in order to overcome the insufficiency in our rural commercial networks.

2. While making great efforts to expand the sales of industrial products, our urban commercial departments must also pay special attention to improving the supply of vegetables, conscientiously promote the meat processing work, increase the varieties of catering services, and continue to carry out the civility and courtesy activities which are primarily aimed at eliminating "dirtiness, disorder and gaps."

3. We must strengthen the management of commercial wholesale and retail departments, adhere to the socialist management orientation and increase economic returns.

4. Financial departments should offer financial support for producing marketable commodities that can be produced in our region. We also suggest that while fulfilling their production plans, industrial departments should try to produce more marketable commodities such as matches. On the premise of guaranteeing the fulfillment of their white cotton cloth production plans, our industrial departments should strive to produce an extra amount of cotton cloth.

5. We must uphold financial and economic discipline and continue to do well in grasping the inspection of financial affairs. We must pay attention to studying proper ways to make money, accumulate money and use money. Banks at all levels must exercise control over granting credits to be used as floating funds and also exercise control over granting medium-term and short-term credits for purchasing equipment. We must pay attention to economic returns in granting any credits. We must do an even better job of promoting urban and rural savings deposits and withdrawing credits from circulation. We must conscientiously strengthen the management of bonuses. Banks must supervise bonus payments to enterprises at the basic level after the bonus payments are checked and ratified by departments concerned at all levels. Any bank can refuse to pay bonuses whose amounts exceed the ratified amounts.

RENMIN RIBAO LOOKS AT TAIWAN ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

[Article by Liu Xing [0491 5281]: "Taiwan's Economy in Prolonged 'Stagflation'"]

[Text] Taiwan's economy prospered for several years after the first world energy crisis. The average annual economic growth rate for the 3 years 1976-78 was 12.4 percent, while prices (urban consumer prices, throughout this article) rose by only 5.1 percent. Beginning in the second half of 1979, Taiwan's economy got into a difficult state of "stagflation" mixed with change. Prices rose from a 5.77 percent increase in 1978 to a 9.75 percent increase in 1979, and a 19.02 percent rise in 1980. Although inflation fell slightly in 1981, it was still at 16.33 percent. The economic growth rate fell from 13.9 percent in 1978 to 8.1 percent, 6.6 percent, and then 5.5 percent in 1981. Some Taiwan scholars estimate that last year the real economic growth rate was only 3.5 percent. According to the Taiwan authorities, the growth rate in the first half of this year was also only 3.5 percent. "Economics Minister" Chao Yao-tung says: "Taiwan's economy is in the worst trouble for several decades."

At present the "stagflation" in Taiwan's economy is continuing to develop, and the short-term prospects are not bright. The main reasons for this are as follows:

First, there is still no sign of economic recovery in the West. For some time the Taiwan authorities have mainly pinned their hopes for economic improvement on a Western economic recovery; however, according to a senior OECD official, the economic growth rate of the 24 major industrial countries will decline from last year's 1.1 percent to 0.3 percent this year, and in the United States, which takes one-third of Taiwan's exports by volume, there is "still no light at the end of the tunnel," and "no sign of improvement before the end of this year." Li Kuo-ting, "member of the Executive Yuan" of Taiwan, had some depressing things to say on arrival back in Taiwan from a recent visit to America. He said: The gloom in the Western economies "still persists," and the two economic powers, the United States and Japan, at present "cannot even determine the size of their budget deficits," and the "notion of a gradual turn for the better in the world economy" in the new future "can by no means be relied on." He also said: "It is very hard to predict when an improvement will be seen in the world economy. This is a question on which there is not much cause for optimism." Taiwan makes its money by processing; since the world economic scene is gloomy, its own economy cannot prosper either.

Second, the Taiwan authorities have been compelled to greatly reduce public investment. Dramatically increasing public investment was one of the major economic measures taken by the Taiwan authorities after the beginning of the 1970's. Construction expenditures covered and not covered by the "central" budget for 1981 amounted to $4.589 billion, about 13.6 times higher than the figure 7 years previous. This move in expanding public investment did indeed play a certain stimulating role in the relatively rapid recovery from the 1974-75 economic crisis and in economic development in the few years after that. However, this outdated Keynesian method only brought a temporary, not a permanent, cure, while its side-effects were very great. The onset of the "stagflation" that has hit the Taiwan economy in the past 2 years was to a considerable degree a result of applying this method, and things could have become very dangerous if they continued with it. Hence the Taiwan authorities have had no alternative but to switch to a squeeze policy. In the budget for fiscal 1983 (beginning 1 July this year) which they recently decided on, expenditures for economic construction and communications amount to about $1.67 billion. Far from increasing, this is actually a reduction of over $400 million compared with the previous year, and such expenditures have been cut from 25 percent to 18.8 percent of total expenditures. This move by the Taiwan authorities, together with other financial squeeze measures, plus the temporary fall in international oil prices, may bring down inflation this year, but it will make an economic recovery all the more difficult.

Third, private investment interest remains low. Due to the slump in foreign markets, the depressed state of the economy and very small enterprise profits, most private businessmen are watching and hesitating and are unwilling to invest. According to reports, last year private fixed capital investment was 7.3 percent down from the previous year, and this year it may go down by 20 percent compared with last year. In the first 5 months of this year the number of enterprises applying for permission to invest in factories was more than 25 percent less than in the same period last year. In private fixed capital investment, the decline in large enterprises has been greater than that in medium, which has in turn been greater than that in small, enterprises. In order to stimulate investment interest among businessmen, the Taiwan authorities announced last October a "nine-point measure for easing the difficulties in industry and commerce," and in April this year they also published "a scheme for improving the investment climate and stimulating investment." Recently they put forward a "five-point proposal for economic recovery," involving this measure and scheme. Truly there is "a chain of remedial measures being stepped up, with each link testing and strengthening another link," but "national investment interest remains low," and there is not the slightest sign of improvement. This is proved by the current large-scale flight of capital abroad from private enterprises and the repeated reductions in plant imports.

In short, it will be hard for the Taiwan economy to extricate itself from its difficulties in the foreseeable future. Discontent among businessmen is continually increasing. They complain that the authorities in charge "react slowly" to the current economic problems and that their "coordination is chaotic and efficiency low." The authorities in charge meanwhile declare that that "are not miracle workers," and although they have exerted every effort they "still cannot reverse the course of events." Some people blame the Taiwan authorities' measures for "inability to produce immediate results," to which the officials reply: "How can this be done when the climate is not right?" The officials have also demanded that people "not place too much hope in the government's measures, or criticize them excessively."

BEIJING CRITICIZES TAIWAN PUBLICATION BAN

OW130115 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 11 Jul 82

[Station commentary: "The Voice of Aspiration of the People Cannot Be Suppressed"]

[Text] KUO SHIM PING LUN, a semimonthly magazine published in Taipei, was suspended for a year by the Taipei municipal authorities recently for publishing articles about peaceful negotiation of the fundamental national policy. By constantly banning publications, the Taiwan authorities are actually going against the will of the people, since peaceful negotiation for the reunification of the motherland is a cardinal matter bearing on the immediate interests of the people and the future of the nation. It is a very good thing that variant ideas and views exist among the people, who would write books to make their views known and put forward proposals.

Growing interest among the people for peaceful negotiation for the reunification of the motherland means that the people are more concerned about affairs of state and that this is an expression of patriotism showing their love of the country and the Chinese nation and signaling where the hope of country lies. Sensible persons in authority should support these people warmly and do their best to provide a convenient forum for them, heed their voice and accept reasonable opinions from them.

Two years ago, some people in Taiwan were still given jail sentences for writing articles on the question of peaceful negotiation for the reunification of the motherland, but now the same theme can be discussed openly. This is a step forward, after going through a tortuous course; the advance was propelled by the forces of the people, and in the course of the advance some people made sacrifices. While the theme of peaceful negotiation for reunification can now be discussed, there are still many restrictions which have kept the people from speaking out freely. Still, a person courts trouble if his views are beyond the bounds set by the authorities in violation of their ban. By constantly banning publications, the Taiwan authorities are not only going against the will of the people, but also arousing public resentment against them because even if the people's opinion can be suppressed, their voice of aspiration cannot be banned.

REACTION FAVORABLE TO SHULTZ' CONFIRMATION

Foreign Ministry Comments

[Text] Taipei, July 16 (CNA) -- Minsitry of Foreign Affairs Spokesman Liu Ta-jen Friday expressed welcome over the confirmation of George Shultz as the United States' 60th secretary of state by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. During the confirmation hearings, Shultz remarked that the U.S. will abide by the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA) and continue to sell defensive arms to the Republic of China. Liu made the above statement in answering a question at a press conference Friday morning.

Shultz had testified earlier this week at the confirmation hearings of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the capacity of secretary of state-designate.

In replying to questions concerning the Republic of China, Shultz repeatedly stressed that the United States will stand by the provisions of the TRA and that based on actual needs it will continue the arms sale to the Republic of China.

Military Spokesman Comments

[Excerpt] Taipei, 15 Jul (AFP) -- Taiwan today reacted with reserved satisfaction to a statement by U.S. Secretary of State-designate George Shultz that he would recommend continued arms sales to Taiwan, including an extension of a bilateral accord for coproduction of the F-5E fighter jets in this island nation. Deputy military spokesman Colonel Kuo Ching-fu told AFP that he welcomed Mr Shultz' statement made in Washington yesterday during Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on his nomination.

"The Shultz recommendation was made in accordance with the Taiwan (?Relations Act) adopted by the U.S. Congress; therefore, it should not be impaired ... by any other party. We hope the U.S. Government will send its extension proposal to the Congress soonest," Col Kuo added.

There has so far been no reaction from the Foreign Ministry. But sources close to the ministry (?said that) Shultz' (?remarks) reflected the existing U.S. policy on arms sales to Taiwan, which is said to be under revision.

Ku Cheng-kang Comments

[Text] Taipei, 15 Jul (CNA) -- Dr Ku Cheng-kang, honorary chairman of the World Anti-Communist League, Thursday praised U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater and Secretary of State-designate George Shultz for their full manifestation of the American stand for international justice. Ku made the remark after learning about the Goldwater-Shultz exchange of questions and answers at the Senate hearing July 14. Ku's statement follows:

"At the U.S. Senate hearing July 14, Senator Barry Goldwater and Mr George P. Shultz, the secretary of state-designate, exchanged questions and answers on matters concerning China and the Taiwan Relations Act, and fully manifested the American stand for international justice, worthy of the warmest support by freedom-loving Chinese and others throughout the world.

"Mr Shultz gave concrete answers to the Senator's questions. He emphasized that the U.S. has never stated that the Chinese Communists have the sovereignty or right of control over Taiwan. At the same time, he affirmed the legal strength and dignity of the Taiwan Relations Act, adding that the act shall never be changed without consent from Congress, and that the United States must provide the Republic of China with weapons according to this law. Mr Shultz has pointed out straightforward that he will, despite pressures from Peiping, suggest that President Reagan act immediately and provide the republic of China with F-5E jet fighters for the preservation of peace in the Taiwan area.

"Particularly encouraging to all the Chinese is that Mr Shultz fully shares Senator Goldwater's view that sales of defensive weapons to the Republic of China in accordance with the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act is based on Taiwan's needs, and there is no need to heed Peiping's outcries.

"Because of Senator Goldwater's sense of justice and Mr. Shultz's remarkable insight, what they have said, I think, is a historic dialogue serving to clarify the confused present international situation. I earnestly hope that this will facilitate correct development of America's foreign policy."

Commentary on Shultz' Remarks

OW152020 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 15 Jul 82

[Commentary by (Yu Chia-yu): "Uphold Our Stand and Act According to Circumstances"]

[Summary] "In the past few months, some American political figures have been enthusiastic about pushing the so-called policy of 'joining Communist China in restraining the Soviet Union.' Making use of this opportunity, the Chinese Communist regime has gone all out to attack and blackmail the United States. The central purpose of the attack and blackmail is to annoy the United States and to force it to give in on the arms sales issue by using ceaseless protests and the threat of downgrading diplomatic relations."

It should be noted, however, that the Taiwan Relations Act, passed by the majority of the U.S. Congress and endorsed by the President, can be neither abrogated nor revised, and that one of the most important provisions of the act is to supply U.S. arms to the Republic of China.

Recently, Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung gave a very clear explanation of our government policy when he made a report at the national development seminar. His report can be summarized as follows: We must cope with the international situation, but we must never change our anticommunist policy. In following this policy, we must not change our stand of refusing to talk with the Chinese Communist regime and of firmly opposing any speech or act based on "two Chinas." Diplomatically, we must try to gain the initiative in a flexible way according to the development of the international situation and create favorable conditions for the interests of our country.

Today, through our own unremitting efforts, we have overcome the most difficult crises facing our country. Of course, we cannot guarantee that new challenges will not come up in the future, but as long as we uphold our stand we will surely be able to meet the challenges and fulfill our historical mission of recovering the mainland.

With regard to Sino-American relations, recently there have been some noteworthy developments. Examples follow: Following George Bush's visit to mainland China, U.S. diplomatic officials in both Washington and Taipei told our government that the United States would not stop arms sales to the ROC. Forty U.S. senators, in a joint letter to President Reagan, urged him to promptly approve the sales of F-5E airplanes to the ROC as called for by established policy. When receiving 13 senators, U.S. National Security Advisor Clarke reaffirmed the U.S. commitments to the ROC.

"At a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing, George Shultz, who had been named to succeed Alexander Haig as secretary of state, seriously told Congress that he would unhesitatingly support and faithfully implement the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act and would not tolerate the Chinese Communist regime's clamor against U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. All these developments indicate at least that steady progress is being made in Sino-U.S. relations."

In addition, what we have done in the past years to develop practical relations with many countries has been most encouraging. We now have economic, trade and cultural relations with 17 countries in West Europe, and our relations with the ASEAN member nations are becoming increasingly closer. In particular, Premier Sun's visit to Indonesia last year was a major breakthrough in our government's diplomacy. All the above would not have been possible if we had not upheld our stand and acted flexibly in coping with the objective circumstances.

LIEN HO PAO Review

OW151159 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 10 Jul 82 p 1

[News sketch by LIEN HO PAO reporter Ma An-i: "Look Squarely at New Changes in ROC-U.S. Relations"]

[Text] The once widely circulated report on so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" has temporarily quieted down, but a qualified personage in Taipei diplomatic circles thinks that the case is still under discussion, and it probably concerns the question of the renewal of contract between our country and the U.S. Northrop Corporation on the cooperative production of F-5E fighters. That American conservative groups for the last few days have paid attention to this case and urged President Reagan not to accept the Chinese Communists' blackmail also confirms the tense situation. Our foreign affairs authorities are dealing with it "seriously" and are closely watching the development of the whole event.

This personage describes the present ROC [Republic of China]-U.S. relations as "quite tense." He also confirms that the so-called "Shanghai communique No 2" was returned to U.S. State Department by President Reagan, as the foreign press has recently reported.

This authoritative personage, who knows very well the present situation of the ROC-U.S. relations, has made the following analysis: The present ROC-U.S. relations are "quite tense," primarily because some persons in the U.S. Government have made a wrong appraisal on the "importance" of the relations between the Chinese Communists and the United States. Theythus mistakenly think that any worsening or downgrading of the relations between the Chinese Communists and the United States will affect the political future of President Reagan and the Republican Party in the November 1982 and the 1984 elections.

This personage regretfully says: For this reason, the U.S. Government reckons that continued arms sales to the Republic of China will affect existing relations between the Chinese Communists and the United States and make the Republican Party suffer losses in future elections. In fact, this reckoning is mistaken. During the Carter administration, the Chinese Communists kept silent when the United States sold military equipment worth $800 million to our country in 1980. Nevertheless, the Chinese Communists are taking advantage of the arms sale issue to exert great pressure on the U.S. Government while U.S. military equipment sales to our country in 1982 are worth less than $200 million. This abnormal behavior exactly shows the Chinese Communists' mentality of "reaching out for a yard after taking an inch" and "becoming more and more anxious to seize our country" by using the United States. The Chinese Communists simply have no sincerity to befriend the United States.

If the Reagan administration exposes the Chinese Communists' blackmail against the United States, it will not cause any problem to the Republican Party's election results.

This qualified personage points out: Why don't those few Americans with the illusion of using the Chinese Communists to check the Soviet Union consider the "strength" displayed by the Chinese Communists in their 1979 invasion of Vietnam and see whether or not it is truly worthwhile for the United States to regard the Chinese Communists as so important? Moreover, former U.S. Defense Secretary Brown has said after his 1980 visit to the China mainland that the Chinese Communists are too far behind the United States and the Soviet Union in military equipment, and they are not good enough to play an important role in U.S. strategy against the Soviet Union.

LEADERS ADDRESS NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT SEMINAR

Premier Sun's Speech

OW121445 Taipei CNA in English 1412 GMT 12 Jul 82

[Text] Taipei, 12 Jul (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan Monday called on scholars and experts assembled for opening of the 1982 national development seminar to focus on expectations of the people on the Chinese mainland as set forth in a new book by Fox Butterfield, former New York TIMES bureau chief in Peking [as received].

Premier Sun quoted a young man named Wei as asking Butterfield: "What young people like me want to know is why (mainland) China cannot do as well as Taiwan?" The incident is related in Butterfield's book "China: Alive in the Bitter Sea." The premier said: "This question shows that the people on the mainland have placed their expectations on the shoulders of their fellow countrymen in free China. In national development, therefore, we must set our sights not only on the present but also on the future." He asked those attending the seminar to base their advice on concepts expressed by President Chiang Ching-kuo, "(who has) told us time and again that we can express our life values by solving problems."

Main points of the premier's speech follow:

Our national development is entering a transitional stage. Changes and adjustments are taking place in the industrial upgrading of the economy, the value system of society, and the function and operation of political system. The phenomena of difficulties arising in many aspects of adjustment is actually a driving force moving us forward into the next phase of development. Only by exerting ourselves with courage and confidence can we surely create a better tomorrow.

The various groups of this seminar are organized in accordance with the emphasis of current national development. I should like to offer my views for your reference during the discussions.

1. Economy. To overcome some of the current difficulties, the government has taken measures to assist industry and trade. Thus far, however, we have seen no signs of economic recovery because of the domestic economic transition and worldwide economic stagnation. In discussing the approaches and tasks of current economic development, I hope you will consider both theory and practice and give equal attention to stopgap measures and long-range solutions.

2. Science and technology. Our success in national development, the augmentation of our national strength and the elevation of our national status in the 1980's depend on our ability to assure growth of science and technology that will enable us to catch up with developed nations. At the beginning of this year, we convened the second national science and technology conference. We have revised our scientific and technological development plan on a basis of the conference's conclusions and proposals. Our major tasks will be the development of sophisticated industry and strategic industry to serve the needs of national defense industry and at the same time upgrade industry in general, the expansion of farm mechanization and modernization of enterprises, the further regulation of water and land use, and the control of pollution and protection of the ecology.

3. Culture and education. The government established a Council for Cultural Planning and Development at the end of last year. The question from now on is how to carry out its tasks through feasible programs. Talented people are essential to national development. At the same time [word indistinct] education system and [words indistinct]. The emphasis on education in the 1980's [words indistinct] to the needs of national development. We (?should) cultivate talented people of all categories: scientists and technicians as well as those to serve the requirements of cultural, social and political development. How can we improve our educational system and content? How can we ensure spiritual and cultural life without being overwhelmed in the pursuit of material comforts? These questions call for the exercise of our collective wisdom and our comprehensive and penetrating study.

4. Politics and diplomacy. [Words indistinct] to the overall pursuit of democracy and the rule of law. Regardless of our difficulties, the government has never failed to enlarge the area and functions of political participation. The national compensation law was implemented July 1 of last year. Since November of 1981, we have carried out a series of elections for provincial assembly and municipal council members, mayors, magistrates, county councilors and township chiefs. The government [words indistinct] drafted an amendment to the law of criminal procedure to permit those charged with crimes to retain a defense attorney during the period of investigation. The amended law has been sent to the Legislative Yuan for its perusal. The government has worked hard to rectify political morality and raise the level of administrative efficiency. These are evidences of the government's determination to carry out democratic and constitutional rule. Undeniably, we still have some domestic problems requiring further review and improvement. But facing the grave threat and challenges posed by the Chinese Communists, we should give first [words indistinct] the overall interests of the people, and the nation.

"In developing external relations, the government has consistently adhered to its fundamental policy of quietly seeking to create realistic opportunities to maintain and further vital national interests. The Government of the Republic of China has established on Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu a model Chinese society of prosperity and affluence based on a constitutional framework. This society has achieved an outstanding record of economic development while maintaining and expanding Chinese culture. In order to frustrate the Chinese Communist conspiracy to isolate us and to further the ultimate goal of national recovery, we must develop relationships with friendly nations of the world on the basis of our existing achievements.

"In solving our problems and assuring continuing progress, I think we should give our attention to the following three points:

"First, we must seek consensus. The dislocations of a nation or a society are frequently the result of the absence of consensus. In our circumstances, we have special need for solidarity and harmony. We must also win the hearts of Overseas Chinese and mainland compatriots. To reach the consensus that only unity and hard work can ensure our national survival and development, we must strengthen the dialogue between those of different opinions.

"Second, we must strengthen institutionalization. Many current problems stem from rapid changes in the environment, the high expectations of the people and outdated laws and regulations. National development requires innovation and change to match the needs of the times.

Third, we must augment the decisionmaking function. This is the era of the people. The success of government administration is determined, on the one hand, by the availability of talented people and the soundness of decisionmaking function and, on the other hand, by the support of the people in the decisionmaking process. To further promote modernization, we have to cultivate talented people in every category, strengthen the functions of decisionmaking and management, and ensure two-way communication, division of labor and cooperation between government and people.

"Ladies and gentlemen, although we are faced with many problems, I believe that as long as we stick to the concept of progress and act with courage, we can overcome all difficulties in due course. President Chiang Ching-kuo has told us time and again that we can express our life values by solving problems. In tackling problems as they arise, we shall find that the process of solving them will (?lead) to progress.

"This seminar is held at time when we should be breaking through the remaining bottlenecks of national development. I therefore call on you to apply your collective wisdom, offer new ideas and make concrete fresh proposals to promote government innovation and provide the momentum for national development.

"Ladies and gentlemen, the progress and prosperity of free China today results from our hard work. Nevertheless, we must not forget that the Chinese Communist regime on the other side of the Taiwan Straits is intent upon sabotaging and communizing us. The provision of national security and the safeguarding of the people's interests are the inescapable duty of the government. The Chinese Communists are once again trying to compel the United States to recognize their claims of sovereignty over free China in an attempt to undermine our relations with the United States. I must solemnly point out once again that the sovereignty of China belongs to the whole Chinese people, that the Chinese Communist regime can never represent them, and that there is only one China, the Republic of China, which meets the aspirations of the Chinese people and is suited to the interests of the free world."

Chiang's Message

[Text] Taipei, July 13 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Monday called on the scholars and experts attending the 12th national development seminar to exercise their collective wisdom and with concerted effort to work out constructive views to help the national make greater progress. Following is the full text of President Chiang's message to the opening session of the seminar:

The 1982 national development seminar is opening today. You are bracing yourselves against the hot weather of summer, expending your energy and cudgeling your brains in the interest of national development. First of all, I want to express my respects to you and take appreciative note of your patriotism.

The aim of the seminar is first to exchange views and promote understanding and second to pool wisdom and exchange experiences. This is a concerted joint effort to achieve progress in national development through solidarity based on sincerity. All the seminars of past years have made great contributions. I hope that this year you will again unite, work together and speak your minds without reservation. I also hope each of you will regard national revival as your duty and accept anti-communist national recovery as the objective of everything you do. You should join in dedicating yourselves to the deliverance of our suffering people as quickly as possible.

All the present distress of our people stems from the scouge of Marxism-Leninism, which has criminally ravaged Chinese culture, stained our land and broken up our families. The Chinese Communists inherited the mantle of Marx and Lenin and have persisted in tyrannical oppression. All of these deeds are completely un-Chinese. For the future of our nation and people and for the well-being of our posterity, we must address ourselves to the pressing topic of national development through the concentration of our strength, the uniting of all hearts within the country and the expulsion of Marxism-Leninism. Only in so doing can we construct and revive our country.

Development on the two sides of the Taiwan Straits has become increasingly clear: Dr Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people can save China; Marxism-Leninism can destroy China. We should not waste our time in empty talk. Rather, we should accelerate national development based on the three principles of the people. We then can overwhelm the tyrannical rule of the Communists and eliminate the poison of Marxism-Leninism with advances made in implementing the three principles. I hope deeply that all participants in the seminar will contribute to collective wisdom and unite with our compatriots at home and abroad in renewed efforts to assure progress and innovation. Let us arm ourselves with the three principles of the people and join hands in the struggle to successfully reunify China under the three principles.

PRESS CRITICIZES SHULTZ REMARKS, NOMINATION

TA KUNG PAO Article

HK160556 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 Jul 82 p 2

[Text] Although Secretary of State-designate George Shultz has not yet assumed office, he has kept in close contact with Senator Barry Goldwater, the ringleader of the ultraconservatives. They echo each other, engage in doubledealing and brazenly intervene in Chinese internal affairs. On 14 July, at the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings, Shultz held that "it is important to continue to develop our relationship with the PRC" on the one hand, while pledging to implement the "Taiwan Relations Act" that interferes in Chinese internal affairs on the other. He also recommended to President Reagan that he act promptly to supply new fighter aircraft to Taiwan.

This was the first public appearnace by Shultz, and he has not shown his hand yet. What course will he follow in the future? We must wait and see. When talking about Sino-American relations, although he has played some tricks and said some ambiguous things, his political inclination is very clear -- continue to formulate "two Chinas" One of Shultz' tricks to intervene in Chinese internal affairs is to support U.S. arms sales to Taiwan on the one hand while saying "the decision will be the President's" and "my advice to him will be to do it" on the other. Shultz has proved himself in the commercial world for a long time. Although he wants to intervene in Chinese internal affairs, he does not want to take the risk. It seems that he respects President Reagan's decision. However, in actuality he wants to shift the responsibility of interfering in Chinese internal affairs to Reagan. As is known, while the contests between the "White House and the State Department" with regard to the U.S. relationship with China existed before Alexander Haig resigned, the staffers in the State Department and the White House are now replaced by the California clique. However, as Reagan's major assistant in foreign affairs, Shultz is unable to take the overall situation into consideration. Instead, he is led by the nose by a small number of Taiwan supporters and gives such "advice" to Reagan. This is indeed unfortunate for the United States. If Reagan accepts Shultz' "advice," it is not difficult to imagine the kind of predicament he will be in.

The other trick of Shultz in intervening in Chinese internal affairs is to supply defensive weapons to Taiwan in order to "ensure a peaceful solution to the problem." This is indeed absurb. That the United States insists on selling arms to Taiwan is definitely an attempt to bolster and boost the cortege of the stubborn KMT members; to everyone's surprise, Shultz said that this is to "ensure a peaceful solution to the problem." As the secretary of state of a big country, it is indeed shameful to say such incongruous things. The real purpose behind selling arms to Taiwan to "ensure a peaceful solution to the problem" is to "pose a threat" to China, as some Taiwan supporters advocated. They vainly attempt to force China to give up nonpeaceful means to unify China. This is absolutely wishful thinking. Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua pointed out clearly to foreign reporters that if China agrees to give up nonpeaceful means to reunify Taiwan, it is equivalent to giving up China's sovereignty. The People's Republic of China has been established in the East for 33 years. If it dares to resist the pressure of the polar bear, would it be "threatened" by the conceited United States? The United States has never succeeded in threatening China, nor will it be able to do so in the future.

After the "shock" of Bush's visit to China, the KMT authorities who rely on the United States were recently encouraged by a small number of ultraconservatives in the United States who raised a hue and cry to oppose China. It seems that they have grasped a straw to clutch at. Their excitement was expressed in words and deeds and they openly help the villain do evil. May I offer a piece of advice to the KMT authorities: Please do not forget the righteous cause of our nation and do not be elated too early. We all know very well that the saying of some U.S. politicians that they will "not forget old friends" is only a lie. They will only act in the interests of the United States. Shultz expressed it very clearly at the confirmation hearing: "I think we must carefully consider the best interests of the United States, and then act in accordance with our best interests in all places in the world. Therefore, our touchstone is our interests. This is the way to deal with all matters."

What Shultz said is aimed at the Taiwan issue. Thus, we can see that what Shultz is concerned about is not so-called "old friends"; rather, it is "the best interests of the United States." As Chinese people, are we willing to be manipulated by other people and serve as "an unsinkable aircraft carrier" of the United States? The Americans are unreliable; the most reliable one is the great motherland. It is an irresistable trend that Taiwan will be unified with the motherland. The disintegrating activities launched by people such as Goldwater are doomed to failure. Every Chinese must promptly make contributions to realizing the peaceful reunification of the motherland.

HSIN WAN PAO Article

[Text] The U.S. Senate has just approved the nomination of Shultz as secretary of state at a plenary session. The U.S. media generally hold that Shultz' strongest point is his being adept at playing the role of a good partner. In fact, he is called a "team player."

Undoubtedly, it is very important for a sports team to be well-coordinated. However, a team can give free rein to its strong point only on the condition that all its team members can give play to their particular special skill. If every member is mediocre and incompetent, the overall performance of the whole team would be terrible. It is by no means surprising that the Seiko team, with better individual skills, may defeat the South China team, which has better teamwork. ["Seiko" and "South China" are the names of two local soccer teams in Hong Kong]

The reason Haig lost his post as secretary of state is because he failed to get along with his colleagues in the White House. There have been so many quarrels that the White House could never be tranquil. Anyway, there is no doubt about Haig's understanding of the world situation and strategy, although we would not say that he never made mistakes. All people in authority in the White House, including Reagan, are unprofessional in foreign affairs. This is a fact generally acknowledged by the U.S. media. Now, in order to settle the "factionalist disputes," Shultz is appointed to take over the State Department. However, who can know whether the decision reached will lead to success or failure?

Shultz' statements made at hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee have shown that he lacks the necessary understanding and awareness needed, at least concerning the U.S. relationship with China. If the matter is developed according to his "advice" to Reagan, it will surely be like putting a blind man on a blind horse, and the consequence will inevitably be disastrous.

As everyone knows, China and the United States are now holding serious negotiations on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. However, at the hearings, Shultz said that it is up to Reagan to make the decision concerning the U.S. supply of fighter planes to Taiwan, and that he will advise Reagan to take this step. In handing over the responsibility to his "team leader" Reagan, Shultz has shown that he is an obedient partner. However, Shultz has not given good advice in working out correct policies, but is ready to go along with Reagan's past wrong tendencies and the viewpoint of a small bunch of extreme diehards in the United States.

Shultz publicly declared his support of Goldwater's viewpoint, holding that the United States has never formally recognized [chengren 2110 6126] the PRC's political sovereignty and jurisdiction over Taiwan, and claiming that he will support and faithfully implement the "Taiwan Relations Act," and continue to sell arms to Taiwan without any time limit. By talking such nonsense, Shultz has actually intervened in China's internal affairs, violated China's sovereignty and completely ignored the international diplomatic norms.

Present U.S. National Security Adviser William Clark had given wrong answers to most questions at the hearings on his nomination as deputy secretary of state. But he is said to have learned very fast. Whether Shultz will change his understanding after assuming office, or oppose China through to the end and thus undermine the Sino-U.S. relationship, is a question that can be expected to be answered very soon.

MING PAO ON BEIJING'S BREWING ANTIRIGHTIST DRIVE

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Beijing Brewing Antirightist Drive"]

[Text] The Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee is now whipping up antirightist opinion by criticizing the capitalist "bacteria" brought about by the open-door policy that are corroding the body of the CCP. This reflects the fact that the new path taken since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee is not a smooth one, and that there are many obstacles.

The reporter has learned that the Propaganda Department recently pointed out that it is incorrect to hold that leftist pernicious influence has been eliminated since bringing order out of chaos. Facts have proven that the ultraleftist forces have not stopped their activities and were rather rampant at times. In the future, we still have to devote much effort to struggling with them. However, what demands our close attention now is that rightism is gaining ground and is spreading. A few ultraleftists during the Cultural Revolution have turned themselves into untrarightists.

The Propaganda Department stressed: Although it is advantageous to implement the open-door policy, it has brought about many backward decadent bourgeois things. Like bacteria, these decadent bourgeois things are corroding the body of the CCP. There are at least two kinds of bouregois sugar-coated bullets: one is money, beautiful girls and foreign goods; they corrupt the cadres by means of material things. The other is the capitalist point of view, culture, art and lifestyles; they corrupt the ideology of the cadres, slacken their fighting will and disintegrate their beliefs.

Therefore, the Propraganda Department demanded that reports on the capitalist world must be serious, and a critical attitude must be adopted when reporting ugly things. Ugly things must not be beautified, neither should they be reported from a purely objective point of view.

The instruction of the Propaganda Department said: We can praise and advocate studying the results of scientific research, advanced technology and management methods of the capitalist world, however, we must apply them in accordance with the actual situation of our country and must not rigidly copy them. We must not praise the capitalist social system and ideology, including things that are opposed to socialism. In reporting the ugly decadent things of the capitalist world, in order to avoid negative side effects, we must report them from a critical point of view but should not go into details. As for literature and art, in particular, films and drama, we must avoid indiscriminatly copying Western techniques.

It has been reported that the Propaganda Department specially pointed out: In dealing with people who brazenly and unscrupulously spread bourgeois poison, first, we must criticize them. If they do not listen to criticism, they will be transferred, and if they refuse to mend their ways despite repeated admonition and insist on carrying on with their wrongdoings, they will be dismissed. People who spread poisonous ideas on purpose, who oppose the party and socialism, who advocate worshipping things foreign and betraying the motherland, who advocate feudal superstition and who have brought about serious consequences must be condemned and openly criticized.

MING PAO CLAIMS MAINLAND STATISTICS INFLATED

[Text] At the recent enterprise reorganization forum, Zhang Jingfu, minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, admitted that although the rate of increase in industrial production in the first half of this year was 10.1 percent, there are many problems in industrial production in the country.

This reporter learned that just as in the past, the figures on the rate of increase for industrial production published by the CCP were not scientifically arrived at. The original plan of increasing the total industrial output value was to ensure an increase of 4 percent and strive for an increase of 5 percent. However, the published rate of increase for the first half of this year more than doubled the target rate for the whole year. This was because of the fact that many of the figures on output value were inflated and were not caused by a substantial increase in economic results.

First, no adjustment for inflation was taken into account in arriving at this rate of increase. During the past few years, the state suffered a financial deficit ranging from a few to a dozen billion yuan every year, and the estimated deficit this year will be at least 3 billion yuan. The primary way to make up these deficits has been to issue more money which has led to the devaluation of the renminbi. At the same time, in order to encourage production, the authorities have time and again raised the prices of products in short supply. For example, the prices of raw materials such as timber, coal and petroleum have been raised several times and are 20 - 100 percent higher than in the past. Moreover, they have allocated extra-quota raw materials to state-owned enterprises at higher prices. Thus, they have caused a sharp rise in many industrial products. These factors were not taken into account when the industrial output value was calculated. In other words, the state did not fix the prices of products in a certain previous year as indexes in calculating the real rate of increase in total industrial output value.
